A Prudent Yankee Constable.

Mr. Elijah Hitchcock was a Connecticut constable whose character was under scrutiny. Deacon Solomon Rising was inquired of about him. "Deacon Solomon Rising," said the questioner, "do you think Mr. Hitchcock is an honest man?" (very promptly.) "Oh, no, sir! not by any means."

"Well, with regard to that," said the deacon, a little more deliberately, "I may say that I don't really think he is a mean man; I've sometimes thought he was what you might call a keerful man—a prudent man."

"What do you mean by a prudent man?"

"Well, I mean this: that one time he had an execution for $4 against old widow Witter, back here, and he went up to her house and levied on a flock of ducks. He chased them ducks, one at a time, round the house pooty much all day, and every time he catched a duck he'd set right down and wring his neck and charge mileage; an' his mileage 'mounted to more than the debt. Nothin' mean about it, as I know of, but I always thought after that Mr. Hitchcock was a very prudent man.

Eating Lemons.

A good deal has been said through the papers about the healthfulness of lemons. The latest advice as to how to use them so they will do the most good runs as follows: Most people know the benefit of lemonade before breakfast, but few know it is more than doubled by taking another at night also. The way to get the better of a bilious system without blue pills or quinine, is to take the juice of one, two or three lemons, as the appetite craves, in as much ice-water as makes it pleasant to drink, without sugar, before going to bed. In the morning on rising, or at least half an hour before breakfast, take the juice of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clear the system of humors and bile, with mild efficacy, without any of the weakening effects of calomel or congress water. People should not irritate the stomach by eating lemons clear: the powerful acid of the juice, which is almost corrosive, infallibly produces inflammation after a while, but properly diluted, so that it does not burn or draw the throat, it does its full medicinal work without harm, and when the stomach is clear of food has abundant opportunity to work on the system thoroughly.

The Springfield Republican says that a Burlington girl recently had one foot modeled in marble, and gave it as a paper weight to her betrothed, as a birthday present. Do all young men in Vermont write habitually on double elephant folio.—Puck

The Fishing Frog.

[The Sea World.]

A description of a remarkable fish may interest our readers. It is known by several names at different localities on the coast. At Provincetown it is called the goosefish, because of a report current among the fishermen at that place that it catches wild geese and devours them whole. Elsewhere the fish is called the angler, fishing frog, sea-devil, bellows-fish, monk-fish, etc. One day last summer, while on the Speedwell, off Cape Cod, we saw several large fishing frogs caught in a trawl-net, the largest of which was about four feet in length. Its huge mouth was fifteen inches in expanse, and seemed to open directly into its stomach, which was full of great flat fish and flounders. Its rows of long, short teeth were inclined inward and could be depressed at will allowing the easy ingress of its victim, but were a sure prevention of his ever escaping. The edge of his head and also of his body was adorned with a leafy fringe resembling the fronds of seaweed. This, together with its chameleon-like faculty of varying its color, in accordance with its surroundings, assists this unwieldly creature greatly in securing its prey. To aid it further in obtaining its food, this fish has three long filaments growing out of its head. The foremost of these is of especial service; for at its end it carries a tassel, which serves as a lure to attract the unwary prey within reach of the cavernous mouth beneath the bait, and in addition to these peculiarities, the pectoral and ventral fins are jointed, and the fish using these is enabled to walk over the bottom of the sea.

The fishing frog seems to proceed somewhat in this manner for the purpose of obtaining food: Moving along the bottom of the sea, he seeks suitable positions among the seaweed, where, safely ensconsed, he may attain his purpose. Having satisfied himself as to the place selected, he gets out his fishing-rod and bates and waves it around in the water, until some unsuspecting fish comes up to seize it, when the angler, snatching the bait out of the way, seizes the fish. The young ones present a more curious appearance even than the adult. The filaments on the head are more numerous, and are treelike in shape; the pectoral fin is much longer and has long spines on it, and the fins are very large in comparison to the body. The fishing frog is very rapacious, and often swallows a fish as large and heavy as itself; such is the expansiveness of its stomach. It is not eaten, but when captured by fishermen it is preserved because of the other fish often contained in its stomach, which it is compelled to disgorge by the simple process of holding it upside down. Many stories are told of the goosefish and its voracity. It has been known to seize on codfish as they were drawn from the water, and was with difficulty forced to loosen its hold. The specimens we saw hauled on board the vessel were full of fish which they had swallowed on their journey in the trawl from a depth of fifteen fathoms.

Skating for Life.

That skating has been in certain circumstances something more than a mere elegant accomplishment is well illustrated by two annecdotes, told by the author of some entertaining "Reminiscences of Quebec," of two settlers in the far west, who saved their lives by the aid of their skates. In one case the backwoodsman had been captured by Indians, who intended soon after to torture him to death. Among his baggage there happened to be a pair of skates, and the Indians' curiosity was so excited that their captive was told to explain their use. He led the captors to the edge of a wide lake, where the smooth ice stretched away as far as the eye could see, and put on the skates. Exciting the laughter of the Indians by tumbling about in a clumsy manner, he gradually increased his distance from the shore, till he at length contrived to get a hundred yards from them without arousing their suspicion, when he skated away as fast as he could, and finally escaped. The other settler is said to have been skating alone one moonlight night, and while contemplating the reflection of the firmament in the clear ice and the vast mass of dark forest surrounding the lake and stretching away in the background, he suddenly discovered to his horror, that the adjacent bank was lined with a pack of wolves. He at once made tracks for home, followed by these animals; but the skater kept ahead and one by one the pack tailed off; two or three of the foremost, however, kept up the chase, but when they attempted to close with the skater, by adroitly turning aside he allowed them to pass him, and after a few unsuccessful and vicious attempts on the part of the wolves he succeeded in reaching his log hut in safety.

Strange Marriages.

A father started for the west from Newmarket, Maryland, with his daughter, to get away from the young man whom she wanted to marry. They stopped at Harpers's Ferry to change trains. The father left the girl in the waiting-room while he went to mail a postal-card, informing his wife that the journey was proceeding satisfactorily. When he returned she was gone, and when he found her, a half an hour later, she was married to the suitor, who had followed closely with a marriage license. The license having been issued in Maryland, the ceremony could not be performed on the Virginia side of the river. To cover this point the lover had stationed a clergyman on the bridge, and to him they lost no time in hurrying. A similar technical difficulty interfered, a few days ago, with a Connecticut wedding. The couple took out a license in Ledyard for a marriage to take place in the adjoining town of Preston. The clergyman struck the wedding party aghast by announcing the blunder, but then suggested a trip afoot across the boundary. The knot was accordingly tied in the woods by the light of lanterns.

John Winthrop and Tobacco.

In the year 1628 he was smitten, when in London, with a hot malignant fever, from which, he recovered with difficulty. He notes in his diary, that his illness was sanctified to him, and also that "among other benefits I reaped by it this was one—deliverance from the bondage whereinto I was fallen by the immoderate use and love of tobacco, so as I gave it clean over." There are several references to tobacco in such of his letters as have been preserved. Two years before his illness he informed his eldest son, in London, that he wanted some leaf tobacco and pipes. Next year he again wrote from Gorton, "We want a little tobacco. I had very good for seven shillings a pound at a grocer's by Holborn Bridge. There be two shops together. It was at that which was the farthest from the bridge, toward the conduit. If you tell him it was for him that bought half a pound of Verina and a pound of Virginia of him last term, he will use you well. Send me half a pound of Virginia.' The consumption of tobacco at Gorton Manor must have been considerable. Nor was Winthrop the only smoker. His wife, writing to him when in London, says: "My good mother commends her love to you all, and thanks for her tobacco." Winthrop's renunciation of the use of tobacco, after his serious illness, does not seem to have been absolute. In a letter written to his wife at Boston nine years later, he asks her to send him some wearing apparel, and adds, "I pray thee also send me six or seven leaves of tobacco, dried and powdered." Many of his fellow-Puritans regarded the practice of smoking with an aversion equal to that of James I, believing it to be a subtle device of Satan to ruin mankind. Yet the example of such a man as Winthrop, proved to them that piety was not inconsistent with smoking, while his experience made him feel that "the immoderate use and love of tobacco" was the snare to be deprecated and avoided. Many persons will admire him none the less when they learn that in comon with his great contemporary, John Milton, he thoroughly enjoyed a pipe of tobacco.—Good Words.

A Nice Point in Grammar.

Two young heirs, who had been taking their first lessons in grammar, disputed long and earnestly over a question, and at last agreed to decide it by arbitration, selecting the head of the family as arbiter, with full power to send for persons and papers. The old man was greasing his boots before the kitchen stove.

"Father," said the elder heir, "is it proper to say 'we is rich,' or 'we am rich?'"

The old man worked carefully down into the hollow of his boots under the instep, remaining a long time in thoughtful meditation, and then slowly replied:

"Well, I should say it would come nigher to the truth to say we hain't rich."

The young heirs, when they came to think what a hard time they had worrying pennies out of their paternal relative, thought it might be made that way, too. And the old man kept on anointing his boots with the extract of hog.—Rockland Courier.

"I think," said a fond Galveston parent, "that little Jimmie is going to be a poet when he grows up. He doesn't eat, and sits all day by the stove and thinks and thinks." "You had better grease him all over. He is going to have the measles. That's what ails Jimmy."—Galveston News.

How a Sparrow Asked Admittance.

A gentleman of this city, says the New London (Conn.) Telegram of a recent date, relates this annecdote illustrating the almost human intelligence which birds sometimes display: On Saturday evening, when the furious northeaster was penetrating to the marrow of unlucky pedestrians, and sifting the fine snow under doors and window-sills, his attention was called from his newspaper by a persistent tapping at his library window. At first he supposed it to be the rattling of a loose blind or the shaking of a window-sash in its groove; but becoming annoyed at its continuance, he walked to the window to secure the noisy frame. Looking out into the fast falling snow what was his surprise to discover, perched on the outside sill, an English sparrow with its feathers puffed up into a comical little ball to protect it from the wind. As he stood before the window the noise ceased, and waiting for its repetition he concluded that the little sparrow had been the cause of his disturbance. Wishing to see if his conjecture was correct, he drew back into the shade of the curtain and watched the shivering bird. In a moment the comical little head emerged from its downy covering, and, peeping first to this side and then to the other, the tiny bird began again its summons for admission on the glass. The gentleman thrust his hand out cautiously from his retreat and quietly raised the sash an inch or two, to allow the timid caller ingress. The sparrow hopped cautiously onto the inner sill, and gradually emboldened by the silence began an elaborate toilette, stroking its disordered plumage, and settling itself into a comfortable enjoyment of the warmth and light. The strange little visitor was allowed to pass the night within the unusual shelter of the library, and in the morning, when the window was opened, it joined its chattering companions in the fir trees on the lawn.

Zero's History.

"Zero" on the common thermometer, like the fanciful names of the constellations, is a curious instance of the way wise men's errors are made immortal by becoming popular. It may be worth while to say that the word itself (zero) comes to us through the Spanish from the Arabic, and means empty, hence, nothing. In expressions like "90 deg. Fahr." the abbreviation "Fahr." stands for Fahrenheit, a Prussian merchant of Dantzic, on the Baltic sea. His full name was Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit.

From a boy he was a close observer of nature, and when only 19 years old in the remarkably cold winter of 1709, he experimented by putting snow and salt together and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of the year. And that day was the coldest day the oldest inhabitants could remember. Gabriel was more struck with the coincidence of his little scientific discovery, and hastily concluded that he had found the lowest degree of temperature in the world, either natural or artificial. He called the degree zero, and constructed a thermometer, or rude weather-glass, with a scale graduating up from zero to boiling point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing point 32—because, as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty-second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero, and expanded a 180th on being heated from the freezing to the boiling point.

Time showed that this arrangement, instead of being truly scientific, was as arbitrary as the division of the Bible into verses and chapters, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of temperature, than "from Dan to Beersheba" expressed the exact extremes of Palestine.

But Fahrenheit's thermometer had been widely adopted with its inconvenient scale, and none thought of any better until his name became authority, for Fahrenheit finally abandoned trade and gave himself up to science.

The three countries which used Fahrenheit are England, Holland and America. Russia and Germany used Raumer's thermometer, in which the boiling point is counted 80 degrees above the freezing point. France uses the centigrade thermometer, so-called because it marks the boiling 100 degrees from freezing point. On many accounts the centigrade system is the best, and the triumph of convenience will be attained when zero is made the freezing point, and when the boiling point is put up 100 or 1,000 degrees from it, and all the subdivisions are fixed decimally.

If Fahrenheit had done this at first, or even if he had made this one of his many improvements after the public had adopted his error, the lack of opportunity, which was really his, would have secured to his invention the patronage of the world.

They had a Chariyari Festival near San Diego, in Southern California, at which the Mexicans and half-breed Spaniards of that region had a high time. After imbibing largely of mescal, a favorite and rather enlivening beverage, they brought out a long unused Spanish cannon, dubbed El Jupiter, loaded it with giant powder, stones and other ammunition of a miscellaneous character, and fired it off. It burst, and nearly everyone in the crowd was more or less injured. One is reported to have been killed outright.

An exchange puts it thus pointedly: The columns of a paper are the publisher's stock in trade, and the parties who ask to use them for their special benefit, must expect to pay for the same. Every public spirited citizen of a place, should have a pride in seeing his town and surroundings improved, every new house, every road, every new manufacturing establishment erected, every new business opened, enhances the value of property in our midst. Every reflecting mind knows this to be true, and it should not be forgotten, that the local newspaper adds much to the general wealth and prosperity of the place, as well as increases the reputation of the town abroad. It benefits all who have business in the place; enhanches the value of property, beside being a desirable public convenience, even if not conducted in the interest of the ruling political power. It increases trade, it cautions against imposition, it saves you from loss, it warns you of danger, it points out different advantages, and increases your profits. The local press is the power that moves the people; therefore support it by advertising in it liberally subscribing for it, and paying for it.

A Girl's Romantic Dream.

Mrs. Mary Kyle Dallas, in the Ledger, writes the humorous description of a school girl's poetical ideal of a husband:

Should Rosalie, on her 16th birthday write a description of that future partner of life's joys and woes, it will be something like this:

"Tall, dark, romantic, melancholy; with melting eyes and a large chin with a dimple in it; fond of quoting Byron and Tennyson; always on his knees, vowing he will die if she does not smile upon him. By profession, a corsair—though Rosalie does not exactly know what that may be—and with 'a price upon his head.'"

Twenty years after we find Rosalie long accustomed to being Mrs. John Boggs. Her husband is a small man, with red hair and a squint, and highly respectable. When he proposed he said:

"Now, Rosy, I like you. If you'll have me, I'll have you. Take me, or leave me." And she took him

Bridget, a good girl, who did not encumber the kitchen with "steady company," asked permission to go to a wake, which was granted. A few days later she called for money; she was going to leave. The mistress was sorry to hear it, and asked if she was displeased with anything. "No, I'm not," and with some hesitancy, added: "I'm going to marry the corpse's husband; he told me I was the life of the wake."—Harper's Drawer.

"Yes, I once committed a murder,
Outside of the realms of law,
That I s'pose the body of people
Would not heed the worth of a straw;
But I think I should sleep the sounder,
Sometimes when the night winds wail,
If I never remembered the 'murder,'
Or never told over the tale.

"No matter the road I was running,
In one of the Middle States.
So many years since that I wonder
Why the sorrow never abates.
I was young, and hasty, and savage,
As youth is apt to be;
And my hand—my hand, you will fancy,
Was a trifle too ready and free.

"I was in my caboose just at evening,
Say 'tween Holden and Fiddler's Run,
Making time to reach Wayman's siding
For the up-train, at five twenty-one—
I had had a hot box at Grossman's,
And that put me four minutes behind;
So I felt like—the word is ugly,
But the truth—like 'going it blind!'

"Round the curve, and running—say forty
Or it may have been fifty—who knows,
And there on the track, before me,
A black fiend at full scream, arose;
A dog that sat down in the middle
Between the two lines of rail,
And howled, like a fiend incarnate,
With a mixture of bark, yell and wail.

"Did I stop? Not much! I just opened
The throttle-valve, by a mite,
And over that dog she went flying,
And over something else—white!
I stopped her then with a shudder,
And ran back; in a mangled heap
Lay the dog, and what had been lately
A baby-girl lying asleep!

"Have I never got over it? No, sir!
And I never shall till I die!
Why didn't I heed the warning,
If 'twas only a black dog's cry?
I may have done many more murders,
And 'tis likely I have on the whole;
But there's none, when the night winds are howling,
That lay such a weight on my soul!

"And what is the worst of my sorrow?
Don't make the one grand mistake!
I shouldn't grieve twice, I've a fancy,
For the poor dead baby's sake!
But the dog that was doing his duty
So nobly—I grieve for him;
And I never tell over the story
But I find my old eyes grow dim."

THE STRANGE PIANIST.

In 1858 there was a little camp about ten miles from Pioche, occupied by upward of about 300 miners, every one of whom might have packed his prospecting implements and left for more inviting fields any time before sunset. When the day was over these men did not rest from their labors, like the honest New England agriculturist, but sang, danced, gambled and shot each other, as the mood seized them.

One evening the report spread along the main street (which was the only street) that three men had been killed at Silver Reef, and that the bodies were coming in. Presently a lumbering old conveyance labored up the hill, drawn by a couple of horses well worn out with their pull. The cart contained a good-sized box, and no sooner did its outlines become visible through the glimmer of a stray light here and there than it began to affect the idlers. Death always enforces respect, and even though no one had caught sight of the remains the crowd gradually became subdued, and when the horses came to a stand-still the cart was immediately surrounded. The driver, however, was not in the least impressed with the solemnity of his commission.

He began to pry up the lid, got a board off, and then pulled off some old rags. A strip of something dark, like rosewood, presented itself.

"Eastern coffins, by thunder!" said several, and the crowd looked quite astonished.

Presently the whole of the box-cover was off, and the teamster, clearing away the packing, revealed to the astonished group the top of something which puzzled all alike.

Had a dozen dead men been in the box, their presence in the camp could not have occasioned half the excitement that the arrival of that lovely piano caused. By the next morning it was known that the instrument was to grace a hurdy-gurdy saloon owned by Tom Goskin, the leading gambler in the place. It took nearly a week to get this wonder on its legs, and the owner was the proudest individual in the State. It rose gradually from a recumbent to an upright position, amid a confusion of tongues, after the manner of the Tower of Babel.

Of course everybody knew just how such an instrument should be put up. One knew where the "off hind leg" should go, and another was posted on the "front piece."

Scores of men came to the place every day to assist, and all took the liveliest interest in it. It was at last in condition for business.

"It's been showing its teeth all the week. We'd like to have it spit out something."

Alas! there wasn't a man to be found who could play upon the instrument. Goskin began to realize that he had a losing speculation on his hands. He had a fiddler, and a Mexican who thrummed a guitar. A pianist would have made his orchestra complete. One day a three-card monte player told a friend confidentially that he could "knock any amount of music out of a piano, if he only had it alone a few minutes to get his hand in." The report spread about the camp, but on being questioned he vowed that he didn't know a note of music. It was noted, however, as a suspicious circumstance, that he often hung about the instrument, and looked upon it longingly, like a hungry man gloating over a beefsteak in a restaurant window. There was no doubt but that this man had music in his soul, perhaps in his fingers'-ends, but did not dare to make a trial of his strength after the rules of harmony had suffered so many years of neglect. So the fiddler kept on with his jigs, and the greasy Mexican pawed his discordant guitar, but no man had the nerve to touch that piano. There were doubtless scores of men in the camp who would have given ten ounces of gold dust to have been half an hour alone with it, but every man's nerve shrank from the jeers which the crowd would shower upon him should his first attempt prove a failure. It got to be generally understood that the hand which first essayed to draw music from the keys must not slouch its work.

* * * * * * * * *

It was Christmas eve, and Goskin, according to his custom, had decorated his gambling hell with sprigs of mountain cedar and a shrub whose crimson berries did not seem a bad imitation of English holly. The piano was covered with evergreens, and all that was wanting to completely fill the cup of Goskin's contentment was a man to play that piano.

"Christmas night and no piano pounder," he said. "This is a nice country for a Christian to live in."

Getting a piece of paper, he scrawled the words:

$20 Reward
To a competent Pianer Player.

This he stuck up on the music-rack, and, though the inscription glared at the frequenters of the room until midnight, it failed to draw any musician from his shell.

So the merry-making went on; the hilarity grew apace. Men danced and sang to the music of the squeaky fiddle and worn-out guitar, as the jolly crowd within tried to drown the howling of the storm without. Suddenly they became aware of the presence of a white-haired man, crouching near the fire-place. His garments—such as were left—were wet with melting snow, and he had a half-starved, half-crazed expression. He held his thin, trembling hands toward the fire, and the light of the blazing wood made them almost transparent. He looked about him once in a while, as if in search of something, and his presence cast such a chill over the place that gradually the sound of revelry was hushed, and it seemed that this waif of the storm had brought in with it all of the gloom and coldness of the warring elements. Goskin, mixing up a cup of egg-nogg, advanced and remarked, cheerily:

"Here, stranger, brace up! This is the real stuff."

The man drained the cup, smacked his lips and seemed more at home.

"Been prospecting, eh? Out in the mountains—caught in the storm? Lively night, this!"

"Pretty bad," said the man.

"Must feel pretty dry."

The man looked at his steaming clothes and laughed, as if Goskin's remark was a sarcasm.

"How long out?"

"Four days."

"Hungry?"

The man rose up, and, walking over to the lunch counter, fell to work upon some roast bear, devouring it like any wild animal would have done. As meat, and drink, and warmth began to permeate the stranger, he seemed to expand and lighten up. His features lost their pallor, and he grew more and more content with the idea that he was not in the grave. As he underwent these changes, the people about him got merrier and happier, and threw off the temporary feeling of depression which he had laid upon them.

"Do you always have your place decorated like this?" he finally asked of Goskin.

"This is Christmas eve," was the reply.

The stranger was startled.

"December twenty-fourth, sure enough."

"That's the way I put it up, pard."

"When I was in England I always kept Christmas. But I had forgotten that this was the night. I've been wandering about the mountains until I've lost track of the feasts of the church."

Presently his eye fell upon the piano.

"Where's the player?" he asked.

"Never had any," said Goskin, blushing at the confession.

"I used to play when I was young."

Goskin almost fainted at the admission.

"Stranger, do tackle it, and give us a tune! Nary man in this camp ever had the nerve to wrestle with that music-box." His pulse beat faster, for he feared that the man would refuse.

"I'll do the best I can," he said.

There was no stool, but, seizing a candle-box, he drew it up and seated himself before the instrument. It only required a few seconds for a hush to come over the room.

The sight of a man at the piano was something so unusual that even the faro-dealer, who was about to take in a $50 bet on the tray, paused, and did not reach for the money. Men stopped drinking, with the glasses at their lips. Conversation appeared to have been struck with a sort of paralysis, and cards were no longer shuffled.

The old man brushed back his long white locks, looked up to the ceiling, half closed his eyes, and in a mystic sort of reverie passed his fingers over the keys. He touched but a single note, yet the sound thrilled the room. It was the key to his improvisation, and as he wove his chords together the music laid its spell upon every ear and heart. He felt his way along the keys, like a man treading uncertain paths; but he gained confidence as he progressed, and presently bent to his work like a master. The instrument was not in exact tune, but the ears of his audience, through long disuse, did not detect anything radically wrong. They heard a succession of grand chords, a suggestion of paradise, melodies here and there, and it was enough.

"See him counter with his left!" said an old rough, enraptured.

"He calls the turn every time on the upper end of the board," responded a man with a stack of chips in his hand.

The player wandered off into the old ballads they had heard at home. All the sad, and melancholy, and touching songs, that came up like dreams of childhood, this unknown player drew from the keys. His hands kneaded their hearts like dough, and squeezed out the tears as from a wet sponge. As the strains flowed one upon theother, they saw their homes of the long ago reared again; they were playing once more where the apple blossoms sank through the soft air to join the violets on the green turf of the old New England States; they saw the glories of the Wisconsin maples and the haze of the Indian summer blending their hues together; they saw the heather of the Scottish hills, the white cliffs of Briton, and heard the sullen roar of the sea, as it beat upon their memories vaguely. Then came all the old Christmas carols, such as they had sung in church thirty years before; the subtle music that brings up the glimmer of wax tapers, the solemn shrines, the evergreen, holly, mistletoe and surpliced choirs. Then the remorseless performer planted his final stab in every heart with "Home, Sweet Home."

When the player ceased, the crowd slunk from him. There was no more revelry and devilment left in his audience. Each man wanted to sneak off to his cabin and write the old folks a letter. The day was breaking when the last man left the place, and the player, laying his head down on the piano, fell asleep.

"I say, pard," said Goskin, "don't you want a little rest?"

"I feel tired," the old man said. "Perhaps you'll let me rest here for the matter of a day or so."

He walked behind the bar, where some old blankets were lying, and stretched himself upon them.

"I feel pretty sick. I guess I won't last long. I've got a brother down in the ravine—his name's Driscoll. He don't know I'm here. Can you get him before morning? I'd like to see his face before I die."

Goskin started up at the mention of the name. He knew Driscoll well.

"He your brother? I'll have him here in half an hour."

As he dashed out into the storm the musician pressed his hand to his side and groaned. Goskin heard the word "Hurry!" and sped down the ravine to Driscoll's cabin.

It was quite light in the room when the two men returned. Driscoll was as pale as death.

"My God! I hope he's alive! I wronged him when we lived in England, twenty years ago."

They saw the old man had drawn the blankets over his face. The two stood a moment, awed by the thought that he might be dead. Goskin lifted the blanket and pulled it down astonished. There was no one there.

"Gone!" cried Driscoll, wildly.

"Gone!" echoed Goskin, pulling out his cash-drawer. "Ten thousand dollars in the sack, and the Lord knows how much loose change in the drawer!"

The next day the boys got out, followed a horse's tracks through the snow, and lost them in the trail leading toward Pioche.

There was a man missing from the camp. It was the three-card monte man, who used to deny point-blank that he could play the scale. One day they found a wig of white hair, and called to mind when the "stranger" had pushed those locks back when he looked toward the ceiling for inspiration on the night of Dec. 24, 1861.

The Czar Nicholas.

E. C. Greenville Murray has lately contributed to the Swiss Times some entirely personal reminiscences of the Czar Nicholas. Of his mental habits and temperament he says: "He was a man of hasty temper, but very full of generous impulses. Having on some occasions used harsh language to one of his Colonels, and learning that the officer had taken the rebuke to heart, the Czar ordered a review, and publicly embraced him at the head of his regiment. A kind man, too, who could unbend at times. One 1st of April, a lady who told me the story herself, was surprised by her servant abruptly announcing the Czar. It was so early in the morning that she thought it was some joke of her sisters in connection with the day, so she went on sipping her tea. Presently she looked up again, however, and saw the servant standing aghast near the door, which was still wide open, and behind it in casque and plume was the stately figure of the Emperor. He had come to bring her good news of her son, who was abroad, and had been ill. He was not tolerant, however, of intentional disrespect, and had but a modified appreciation of a joke. A General, who was Policemaster at St. Petersburg for a short time, found this out to his cost. The General was considered a very stupid man, and was the Czar's favorite butt, so his Majesty was pleased one night at a court ball to send him off in search of a thief who had stolen a colossal statue of Peter the Great. The Policemaster, finding this statue in its usual place, as any one else would have expected, felt mortified at the laugh raised against him, and determined to be revenged in his own way. Shortly afterward, therefore, he announced to his Imperial master, while at the theatre, that the Winter Palace was on fire. The Czar rose hastily to witness the conflagration, and on finding that the Policemaster had presumed to retaliate on his august self, sent him to reflect on his indiscretion in Siberia. Finally, he was not a faithful husband, but he was fond of his wife and very jealous. Her Majesty was quite aware of this, and, unfortunately, very mischievous. Whenever, therefore, she wished to get rid of an officer that displeased her, she commanded him to dance with her, and so sure as he did so he was sent to the Caucasus. The Czar's personal habits were soldierly and simple. He ate and drank with extreme moderation, and he slept in his uniform on a tent bed in his study, with only a military cloak to cover him. He allowed his son, the present Emperor, £40,000 a month while traveling abroad; the Empress spent money so lavishly that her expenses for one night that she halted at Hanover exceeded £1,600. He gave, too, largely, but his personal wants must have cost little indeed.

Geneva and Its Watches.

Geneva, like other cities, has its specialties, and its first and greatest is its manufacture of watches. The Geneva watch has attained a world-wide celebrity, and though probably no better than those of American manufacture, they are wonderfully fascinating, and it is difficult to withstand the attractions of their show windows. Their exhibition of ladies' watches is especially fine, and their prices vary from $20 to as high as you care to go, and you are sure to get a good article if you pay for one. Another specialty is music boxes, of which large quantities are sold every year. There are several establishments here which deal in them exclusively, and they put them up in all sorts of shapes. There are musical chairs, which surprise you by playing a tune when you sit down on them, musical footstools, goblets and trinkets of various kinds, ranging in price from $5 to $2,000, and even higher. Geneva has almost a monopoly of these establishments, for, save one at Berne, I have not noticed any elsewhere.—European Cor. Rochester Democrat.

"LITTLE baby is very ill, Charley; I am afraid he will die." "Well, if he does die, mamma, he won't go to the bad place." "Why, Charley, how can you know that?" "Oh, I know he can't, mamma; he's got no teeth to gnash."

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS

THE great city of London requires a yearly supply of 20,000,000 gallons of milk.

THE life of a submarine telegraph cable is shown by experience to be from ten to twelve years. If a cable breaks in deep water after it is ten years of age, it cannot be raised for repairs, as it will break of its own weight—a fatal difficulty, and for which there seems to be no practicable remedy.

IN 1830 Marshal Soult brought a parrot named Jacko to the French war office, where the bird remained for forty years. He served under eighteen different Ministers, but was always a stanch royalist. Through every change of administration Jacko cried, "Vive le roi!" but would never say without painful effort, "Vive l'Empereur!" He died on the anniversary of the death of Napoleon I., in 1870.

THE greatest amount of cold ever known to be endured by white men overtook Lieut. Schwatka's party in search of information about Sir John Franklin's party. They were over eleven months in sleds, and journeyed about 3,000 miles. On Jan. 3, 1880, the thermometer sunk 103 deg. below the freezing point. The highest temperature that day was 69 deg. below freezing point. For twenty-seven days the temperature was 92 deg. below the freezing point.

WHEN rivers are much warmer than the air, they give rise to fogs, because the rapid evaporation from the warm water pours more water into the atmosphere than it can hold suspended in an invisible state, and consequently the surplus vapor is condensed into mist by the colder air through which it rises. There are conditions of atmosphere when no actual fog is apparent in which darkness prevails, and what are called dry fogs, or sometimes blight. In some cases they are clearly due to smoke, as, for instance, the smoke of burning prairies, which may extend over vast distances.

THE following calculation as to the total number of existing botanical species has been made by Dr. Muller, of Geneva: We have at present in our books about 130,000 species, and, if we suppose that 30,000 (in round numbers) belong to countries like Europe and North America, where there are hardly any species, but some cryptograms to be discovered, the remainder, or 100,000, representing exotic plants, more or less tropical and southern, we may double the latter for new species, giving 200,000 for these less-known regions, and altogether 230,000 for the whole globe, with the exception of countries still quite unknown botanically. Adding only 20,000 for the latter, we reach a minimum sum of 250,000 species of plants.

MOST people remember the terrible railway accident in which Dickens himself and his proof-sheets escaped, while so many victims perished. In the train there was a gentleman and lady just landed in England after their return from India. The lady said to her husband: "I see the great wave rolling on; it is close to us," and then the crash came, and she was a corpse. The husband was unhurt, and, at a later time, explained his wife's strange words. Ever since they set sail from India she had been haunted in sleep by the dream of the vast silvery wave, and always as it was about to break on her she had wakened in terror. This was the phenomenon which she recognized immediately before the accident which caused her death.

Cheating the Lord.

Parson Joyner, an old gentleman who rode a circuit years before the war, has been excommunicated in the eyes of the progressive world. Parson Joyner committed no sin, but in the opinion of the judges who were summoned to weigh the evidence against him, he merited expulsion from the circle of the anointed.

Several weeks ago the parson took a horseback trip into an adjoining neighborhood, and having read of so many railroad accidents and terrible losses of life, he concluded that as a railroad was being constructed in the neighborhood of his intended visit, justice to his wife demanded a life insurance policy. With but little trouble he found an agent who was willing to insure his life. He made all necessary arrangements, gave the papers to his wife and went on his journey. Shortly after his return he was arrested by a church officer, on a charge of employing the means of the devil to cheat the Lord.

"Brother Joyner," said the judge of the church court-martial, "it is charged that you, in connection with the devil, have been attempting to cheat the Lord. Brother Joyner, you have been fighting the devil a long time, and in our opinion was successful. Now, using a forcible expression, what the devil have you got against the Lord?"

"The Lord forbid," said the old man, "that I should have anything against my divine master."

"You insured your life, Brother Joyner. Why did you do it? Don't you know that you have no right to take your life into your own hands and insure it? Don't you know that the crucifixion of our Savior insured all our lives? Huh?"

"But there were no railroads then. I went into a neighborhood where there is a road. I didn't know how soon it might double up and hit me."

"But you were not killed, were you?"

"No, sir."

"Well, then, don't you see how foolish it was to insure your life? Leave this house. The doors of White Oak Church are closed against you. Go, and may the Lord forgive your great crime."

The old man left, and several days afterward when the life-insurance man called, he took down a flint-lock gun and snapped at him three times.—Little Rock Gazette.

American Pearls.

With the exception of about $3,000 worth of pearls which came from fresh-water mussels and are found all over the Union—principally in the Miami river, Ohio—the American pearls come from the Gulf of California. These are as fine as any Oriental pearls and are valued as highly. The fresh-water pearls are almost all small, but brilliant and somewhat rosy in tint. About half of the California pearls are black, and command a better price than the white pearls. Some years ago about eighty per centum of California pearls were black, the proportion having diminished rapidly during the last ten years. The biggest pearl ever found in this country was the celebrated one found about twenty years ago in a New Jersey pond, and sold to the then Empress Eugenie.

High or Low Heels.

Some time ago Mr. Morey devised an apparatus for registering the steps, which he has called an odograph. It consists of a small cylinder, rotating by means of clockwork in the interior, and of a pen which marks on the cylinder, and is raised at each step by an impulse communicated by a ball of air beneath the sole. Observations have been made on a number of young soldiers. It was ascertained that the step is longer in going up hill than in going down hill. It is shorter when a burden is carried; longer with low than with high-heeled boots; longer when the sole is thick and prolonged a little beyond the foot than when it is short and flexible. It thus appears that the heel may with benefit be almost indefinitely lowered, while it is disadvantageous to prolong the sole of the boot beyond a certain limit, or to give it an absolute rigidity. Some influences which lengthen the step lessen its frequency; so in going up hill the step becomes at the same time longer and less frequent. In walking on level ground the length of the step and its frequency are always proportioned; the quicker the walk the longer the step. "Nature here proves the folly of the high heel in a most practical manner; and the objection to them in men is equally applicable to them in ladies; and if they could only see themselves as they totter along perched up on high heels and walking as if stepping on egg-shells, their ludicrous appearance would at once stop the fashion. Any one accustomed to country life and long walks on the hills, must have felt that terrible leg-weariness which a day's shopping with a lady entails. The slow, irregular walk, the frequent pauses, and the difficulty of taking short steps with proper balance are trials well known to men. Without a good-shaped low-heeled boot, no lady, however pretty her foot or graceful her carriage, can walk becomingly, with ease to herself, and a proper flexion of the muscles of the feet and legs. Half the ricked ankles come from heels being too high to form a proper steady base for the weight of the body, and the narrow pointed toes prevent their proper expansion and use. Make a footprint in the sand and then go and place your boot in it—what a margin there will be! Horses even, with a horny hoof, suffer horribly if their shoes are cramped and do not allow the foot to expand. Much more might be written of the accompanying ills of tight and high-heeled boots; but as long as women will bear the pain so as to appear taller and to have tiny feet, so long will they do violence to nature's gifts. Legs and feet were given us for use to exercise the body upon. In fact, so cramped up and stilted has fashion made the walk nowadays that a lady with wooden legs might pass muster in the park undiscovered.—The Lancet.

Jules Verne.

Jules Verne is about fifty-two years old, with a fine, handsome head. Once a blonde, he wears his beard full, and his hair is curled in a haphazard fashion. His features are more than regular; they are fine. His eye is bright, of a clear blue, brilliant, yet moist. His dominant expression is sweetness, but a firm sweetness, like rosy steel, which does not bend. His mouth, which says such charming and clever things, says "yes" and "no" with the same smile. But "yes" or "no," it is irrevocable. A Breton, of Nantes, Jules Verne has kept the religious traditions of Brittany, but rather like a painter, he preserves the impressions of his travels, and like a child of the soil who would die for his faith. He is at bottom more of a skeptic than D'Ennery. No one would stand up more bravely for a doctrine, but no one would, a moment after, make a more questionable speech. In politics it is worse, for he never voted in his life.

The son of a lawyer, he came to Paris to study law. His literary tastes led him in another direction, but nevertheless he was admitted to the bar. He then became Secretary to M. Perin, who at that time had the double administration of the Opera Comique and of the Theater Lyrique. After this he followed the bent of his tastes more freely. He contributed a number of articles to the Musee des Familles, and about this time wrote a piece in one act, "Les Pailles Rompus," with which Alexandre Dumas was connected, for it was he who had it produced at the Theater Historique, and it was he who bought the first copy after it was printed. After an experience in the stock market, being still in love with literature, Verne published his first book, "Five Weeks in a Balloon." It went off like hot cakes, though it was only a trial. But the success was so great that it appeared to Hetzel that here was a new road to literature which deserved to be followed up. He made an engagement with Verne for twenty years, on what then appeared to be splendid terms, but which have since made the fortune of the lucky editor. After the publication of "Five Weeks in a Balloon," he announced to his friends, one fine morning, that he was about to get married, and then disappeared. It was the only sign of life that his wife has ever given. Since then he has led the same life of study, of travel, and of interminable production. He passes his life between Paris and Amiens, where he has a splendid house, when he is not exploring somewhere or other on his famous boat, the Saint-Michel, on which most of his stories are written. As for the rest, he is the most charming man imaginable, modestly earning his 100,000 francs a year, to say nothing of the great fortune the stage seems to promise him.—Paris Figaro.

THE greatest natural curiosity in the country is an architect who does business in Detroit. A man said to him some time ago: "Draw me the plans for a residence; I am willing to pay $500 if they suit." The plans were drawn and they suited, yet the architect said that $200 was enough. He estimated the cost at $12,000, and it amounted to only $10,550. He estimated the time in building at twelve weeks, and the house was finished in nine.

TELL-TALES.

Oh! don't you remember,
Long time ago,
When the path was in December
Covered o'er with snow?
Then we had a little walk,
Then we had a little talk,
But jealous eyes did soon divine
The footsteps there were not all mine—
Oh! the snow,
The tell-tale snow,
Long time ago!

Oh! don't you remember,
On that evening fair,
When the jasmine flowers you braided
In the raven hair!
Homeward then I thoughtless strayed,
And the jasmine flowers betrayed;
For well the jealous glances knew
No jasmine in our garden grew;
Oh! the flower,
The tell-tale flower,
Long time ago!

And when we were both forbidden
Ever more to meet,
Slyly, little notes were hidden
By the willow seat.
But vainly for a note we sought—
Could we each other have forgot?—
Ah! others knew as well as we
The secrets of that hollow tree—
Oh! the tree, the hollow tree,
It betrayed both you and me,
Long time ago!

A THIN old man with a rag-bag in his hand was picking a number of small pieces of whalebone which lay on the street. The deposit was of such a singular nature that the quaint-looking gatherer was asked how he supposed they came there. "Don't know," he replied, in a squeaking voice, "but 'spec some unfortunate female was wrecked hereabout somewhere."

A LUDICROUS mistake is reported to have occurred at the opening of a bazar in Glasgow, at which the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne were present. A distinguished clergyman was called upon by the Chairman to conduct devotional exercises; and the reverend gentleman had commenced to read, when four pipers of a highland regiment, owing to some misunderstanding, struck up with a wild shriek on the bagpipes, by way of a preliminary to "The Campbells Are Coming." The music was promptly stopped; but the solemnity of the proceedings had, of course, been shaken.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

A Remedy for Rheumatism.—Four ounces of saltpeter in one pint of alcohol; shake well, and bathe the parts affected; wetting red flannel with it, lay it on. It does not cure, but takes away the redness, reduces the swelling, and relieves the torment and agony.

Red Iodine Ointment.—This is the most useful ointment for the cure of splints, spavins, ringbones and hardened tumors. It is made as follows: Vin iodide of mercury, one drachm; hog's lard, one ounce; mix well and apply once in five days. If used oftener it will cause the hair to fall off and not grow again.

Treatment of Wounds.—It is recommended to treat inflamed wounds by smoking them with burning woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool, it is said, will take the pain out of the worst wound, and if repeated once or twice will allay the worst case of inflammation arising from a wound. This remedy is certainly very simple, and within the reach of every one.

Hot Sand a Good Bed-Fellow.—The comfort which a hot-water bag, or even a hot brick, may afford a person on retiring, chilled, is very great, and, beyond this, the use of some such warmth-producing appliance is useful as a health preservative and restorative; but one of the most convenient articles to be used as a bed-warmer and in a sick-room is a sand-bag. Get some clean, fine sand, dry it thoroughly in a kettle on the stove, make a bag about eight inches square of flannel, fill it with the dry sand, sew the opening carefully together, and cover the bag with cotton or linen cloth. This will prevent the sand from sifting out, and will also enable you to heat the bag quickly by placing it in the oven or on the top of the stove. After once using this you will never again attempt to warm the feet or hands of a sick person with a bottle of hot water or a brick. The sand holds the heat a long time, and the bag can be tucked up to the back without hurting the invalid. It is a good plan to make two or three of the bags and keep them ready for use.

The Feet.—The odor of pure perspiration is not unpleasant, as may be proved in clean and healthy babes. When, however, the other eliminating organs—those that strain the waste matter from the blood—do not duly perform their functions, their work is attempted by the skin. Then a disagreeable odor is generally given to the perspiration. Even in these cases, the odor is produced mainly after the perspiration has been absorbed by the clothing. This last fact is generally true of the bad odor which is associated with the excessive perspiration of the feet of some people. Dr. George Thin, of England, has been ivestigating the matter, and has communicated the results of his experiments to the Royal Society. The perspiration of the body is generally slightly acid. That in the soles of the stockings and boots he found to be alkaline. In this there is a rapid development of a class of bacteria (microscopic vegetations) characterized by a fetid smell (bacterium fœtidum). The fluid in the soles of the stockings and of the boots examined by the doctor was found to teem with them. Thus the odor is supposed in some cases to be due, not directly to the perspiration as it comes from the feet, but to its subsequent putrefaction. The afflicted will be glad to learn that this odor can be wholly destroyed by boracic acid—the acid of boron. The stockings should be changed twice a day. When taken off, they should be placed for some hours in a jar containing a solution of the acid. They are again fit for use after drying. To prevent the odor from getting into the boots, cork soles should be worn, and placed at night in the jar and dried the next day. Washing the tender and sore parts of the feet with the acid will relieve the accompanying feeling of heat and pain.

Profitable Patients.

The most wonderful and marvelous success in cases where persons are sick or wasting away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them (profitable patients for doctors), is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters.—Cincinnati Star.

The Hair of Prominent Men.

In this feature, writes the New York correspondent of the Rochester Democrat, N. P. Willis and Horace Greeley were entirely dissimilar. Willis had long and beautiful ringlets, of which he was very proud, while, as is well known, Greeley became bald early in life, the base of the head being merely fringed with gold. We may note that many of our best writers or public men were in a similar condition. Washington Irving wore a wig half his life-time. William Lloyd Garrison was well known for his smooth pate. Wendell Phillips has only a few scattered silver locks. Ralph Waldo Emmerson keeps his head cropped closely. Such, also, was the practice of the late Charles Sumner. It may be urged against long haired men that not only Willis (who was a rake) was thus adorned, but also that the magnates of the Brooklyn scandal, (Beecher and Tilton) are also of the long-haired class. Theodore Parker, on the other hand, was bald and so was John Quincy Adams. The late Chief Justice Chase was much in the same condition. Speaking of fashion, it may be said that the ancient Greeks wore their hair long, while the Egyptians cut it off, and wore light wigs. In France, at one time, short hair was the style, and in the reign of Louis Quatorze it was worn of prodigious length, and was done up in a lofty manner. The hair fashion of New York, at present, deserves more space than can just now be afforded, notwithstanding the importance of the theme.

A Good Country for Fat Men.

The Spartans of old showed no mercy to fat humanity. They paid much attention to the rearing of men. They took charge of the firmness and looseness of men's flesh, and regulated the degree of fatness to which it was lawful in a free state to any citizen to extend his body. Those who dared to grow too soft or too fat for military exercise and the service of Sparta were soundly whipped. In one particular instance, that of Nauchis, the son of Polybius, the offender was brought before the Ephori and a meeting of the whole people of Sparta, at which his unlawful fatness was exposed, and he was threatened with perpetual banishment if he did not bring his body within the regular Spartan compass, and give up his culpable mode of living, which was declared unworthy of a Spartan.

Not a Beverage.

"They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poor whisky or poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hope, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

An Entertaining Companion.

Once, during a tour in the Western States, writes Mr. Florence, the actor, an an incident occurred in which I rather think I played the victim. We were en route from Cleveland to Cincinnati, an eight or ten hour journey. After seeing my wife comfortably seated, I walked forward to the smoking-car, and, taking the only unoccupied place, pulled out my cigar-case and offered a cigar to my next neighbor. He was about 60 years of age, gentlemanly in appearance, and of a somewhat reserved and bashful mein. He gracefully accepted the cigar, and in a few minutes we were engaged in conversation.

"Are you going far west?" I enquired.

"Merely so far as Columbus." (Columbus, I may explain, is the Capital of Ohio.) "And you, sir?" he added, interrogatively.

"I am journeying toward Cincinnati. I am a theatrical man, and play there to-morrow night." I was a young man then, and fond of avowing my profession.

"Oh, indeed! Your face seemed familiar to me as you entered the car. I am confident we have met before."

"I have acted in almost every State in the Union," said I, half patronizing. "Mrs. Florence and I are pretty generally known throughout the northwest."

"Bless me!" said the stranger, in surprise, "I have seen you act many times, sir, and the recollection of Mrs. Florence's Yankee Girl, with her quaint songs, is still fresh in my memory."

"Do you propose remaining long in Columbus?"

"Yes, for seven years," replied my companion.

Thus we chatted for an hour or two. At length my attention was attracted to a little red-faced man, with small, sharp eyes, who sat immediately opposite us, and amused himself by sucking the knob of a large walking-stick, which he carried caressingly in his hand. He had more than once glanced at me in a knowing manner, and now and then given a sly wink and shake of the head at me, as much as to say, "Ah, old fellow, I know you, too."

These attentions were so marked that I finally asked my companion if he had noticed them.

"That man acts like a lunatic," said I, sotto voce.

"A poor half-witted fellow, possibly," replied my fellow-traveler. "In your travels through the country, however, Mr. Florence, you must have often met such strange characters."

We had now reached Crestline, the dinner station, and, after thanking the stranger for the agreeable way in which he had enabled me to pass the journey up to this point, I asked him if he would join Mrs. Florence and myself at dinner. This produced an extraordinary series of grimaces and winks from the red-faced party aforesaid. The invitation to dinner was politely declined.

The repast over, our train sped on toward Cincinnati. I told my wife that in the smoking-car I had met a most entertaining gentleman, who was well posted in theatricals, and was on his way to Columbus. She suggested that I should bring him into our car, and present him to her. I returned to the smoking-car and proposed that the gentleman should accompany me to see Mrs. Florence. The proposal made the red-faced man undergo a species of spasmodic convulsions, which set the occupants of the car into roars of laughter.

"No, I thank you," said my friend, "I feel obliged to you for the courtesy, but I prefer the smoking-car. Have you another cigar?"

"Yes," said I, producing another Partaga.

I again sat by his side, and once more our conversation began and we became quite fraternal. We talked about theatres and theatricals, and then averted to political economy, the state of the country, finance and commerce in turn, our intimacy evidently affording intense amusement to the foxed-eyed party near us.

Finally the thrill sound of the whistle and the entrance of the conductor indicated that we had arrived at Columbus, and the train soon stopped at the station.

"Come," said the red-faced individual, now rising from his seat and tapping my companion on the shoulder, "this is your station, old man."

My friend rose with some difficulty, dragging his hitherto concealed feet from under the seat, when for the first time I discovered that he was shackled, and was a prisoner in charge of the Sheriff, going for seven years to the State Prison at Columbus.

A Chicago Broker's Happy Investment.

[From the Chicago Journal.]

Lewis H. O'Conor, Esq., whose office is located at 93 Washington street, this city, lately related the following in the hearing of one of our reporters as an evidence of special good fortune. I have been suffering, said Mr. O'Conor, for a number of weeks with a very severe pain in my back, believed to be from the effects of a cold contracted while on the lakes. I had been prescribed for by several of our physicians and used various remedies. Three days ago, I abandoned them all and bought a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, applied it at night before retiring and to-day feel like a new man. I experienced almost instant relief and now feel no pain whatever.

Charity, or love, is the connecting link which unites earth to heaven, and man to man. While this remains secure, justice, benevolence, truth, conscientiousness, will form parts of that beauteous whole, without which the bond of society must be unrooted, and the earth relapse into a second chaos.

As a perfectly reliable and economical remedy, we cordially recommend Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price, 25 cents a bottle. For sale everywhere.

English and American Homes.

Mr. Joseph Hatton, the novelist, in a letter from London to the New York Times says: "At present there is no comparison between English and American homes. America has not the houses, the servants, nor the indncements that belong to the home life of England. In the first place, the wooden house of the country districts of America is a poor substitute for the English cottage or villa. This will be strikingly apparant to Americans traveling for the first time through Great Britain. There is no exageration of settlement in the tributes which poets have invariably paid to 'the cottage homes of England.' The humblest peasant househololder in the country districts has often a picturesque little home, with a flower and kitchen garden, altogether superior to the American villa one sees at outlying places along the railway routes. To have a house of his own is the chief ambitions of an Englishman. Except in London and other large cities, no young man dreams of marrying until has furnished a house and can literally takes his wife "home." Even in large cities it is a most rare and unaccustomed thing to see a family dining out at a restaurant. Home means more in England than in America and the home life in New York bears no comparison to that of London. The lack of a thoroughly settled class of men and women devoted to domestic service in America has much to do with this; so also, of course, have the heavy rents of good houses. The artisan's cottage and the middle class house of England are almost unknown in the great cities of America. Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago have more to show in this direction than New York. Yet with these advantages on the side of England, where the sanctity of home is a sort of religion, we exhibit to Americans at every street corner a sight which is peculiarly sad and lonthsome—women drinking at public bars, women with babies in their arms taking gin at all hours of the day, women often reeling into the streets in a state of drunkenness. There is no deeper stain on the moral escutcheon of Great Britain than this public scandal, except it be the open and shameless solicitation by a crowd of prostitutes in the West End streets from dusk till long after midnight of every day that comes. It would seem as if the highest virtues and the lowest vices traveled along side by side in the English metropolis. Poverty and wealth meet here often face to face and exist closes together than in any metropolis the world has ever seen.

A Shocking Oversight.

When a man living on Galveston avenue came home to dinner the other day, his wife told him that their neighbor over the way had sent to borrow an ax.

"What did you do?" heartlessly exclaimed the husband.

"As we didn't have any ax, I sent them word to that effect."

"Mother of Moses! we are a ruined community. Send right off to a hardware store and buy a gilt-edged ax, and carry it over yourself. Didn't you know that our neighbor's wife's uncle lives in Ohio, and the whole family are obliged to have fat offices or starve?"—Galveston News.

Eight Reasons
Why we NEVER sell POND'S EXTRACT in BULK, but adhere to the rule of selling ONLY in OUR own BOTTLES, inclosed in BUFF WRAPPER, on which is printed our landscape Trade-Mark.

1. It insures the purchaser obtaining the genuine article.
2. It protects the consumer in buying Pond's Extract not weakened with water, which we found was done a few years ago when we were induced to furnish dealers with the genuine article in bulk.
3. It protects the consumer from unscrupulous parties selling crude, cheap decoctions to him as Pond's Extract, for any person can tell the genuine from the bottle and wrapper.
4. It protects the consumer, for it is not safe to use any other article according to the directions given in our book, which surrounds each bottle of Pond's Extract.
5. It protects the consumer, for it is not agreeable to be deceived and perhaps injured by using other articles under the directions for Pond's Extract.
6. No other article, manufacture or imitation has the effect claimed for and always produced by Pond's Extract.
7. It is prejudicial to the reputation of Pond's Extract to have people use a counterfeit believing it to be the genuine, for they will surely be disappointed if not injured by its effect.
8. Justice to one of the best medicines in the world, and the hundreds of thousands using it, demands every precaution against having weak and injurious preparations palmed off as the genuine. The only way this can be accomplished is to sell the genuine put up in a uniform manner—in our own bottles, complete with buff wrappers, trade-marks, &c.

REMEMBER—The Genuine Pond's Extract is cheap, because it is strong, uniform and reliable. Our book of directions explains when it can be diluted with water and when to be used full strength.

REMEMBER—That all other preparations, if colorless, are mere decoctions, boilings, or produced simply to obtain the odor and without the scientific or practical knowledge of the matter which many years of labor has given us.

REMEMBER, OR KNOW NOW—That all preparations purporting to be superior to Pond's Extract because they have color, are colored simply because they have crude and, to unprofessional people using them, perhaps dangerous matter in them, and should never be used except under the advice and prescription of a physician.

REMEMBER AND KNOW—That our very expensive machinery is the result of 30 years of experience (the most of which was entirely given to this work) and constant attention to the production of all forms of Hamamelis, and that therefore we should know what we assert, that Pond's Extract is the best, purest, and contains more virtues of the shrub than any other production yet made.

Our New History and Uses of Pond's Extract and other preparations sent free.

LADIES—Read pages 13, 18, 21 and 26, in our book, which is found around each bottle, and will be sent free on application.

An Open
Secret.

The fact is well understood that the MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT is by far the best external known for man or beast. The reason why becomes an "open secret" when we explain that "Mustang" penetrates skin, flesh and muscle to the very bone, removing all disease and soreness. No other liniment does this, hence none other is so largely used or does such worlds of good.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND., JANUARY 27, 1881.

GEN. MASON, auditor of state, retired from office January 26, turning over to the new incumbent, Col. E. H. Wolfe, nearly four million dollars in school fund bonds. Gen. Manson has been a very efficient officer.

AMONG the recently-elected United States senators are the following: Ben. Harrison, of Indiana, O. D. Conger, of Michigan, J. R. Hawley, Connecticut, Eugene Hale, Maine, Henry L. Daws, Mass., Thos. C. Platt, N. Y., Thos. F. Bayard, Delaware, Howell E. Jackson, Tennessee, Philetus Sawyer, Wisconsin.

IT is rumored that O. A. Burgess, the late Reverend Disciple campaigner, who stumped this state in the interest of Garfield, will remove to Chicago. As he, and Beecher, and Bob. Ingersoll, and Conkling, all labored in the same political vineyard, we would suggest that they unite their fortunes and start a new church in that moral city. It might accommodate many of those over-particular persons whom the other churches have left out in the cold.

A FLEET of fifteen oyster boats from Maryland entered the mouth of the Rappahannock and began dredging for oysters in open violation of the Virginia oyster laws. The Virginians opened fire upon them with a canon, and the first round was returned by a volley from the fleet, delivered amid cheers from the oyster pirates. The canon fired a second shot with better effect than the first, and struck one of the dredges in her rigging. The oyster men then beat a hasty retreat, their speed being accelerated by shots sent after them.

PROFESSOR J. B. ROBERTS recently delivered a lecture before the Indianapolis Literary Club, on the subject of "Compulsory Education." It would well pay the trouble of a careful perusal. Every year or two the subject breaks out afresh, and many well disposed educators, captivated by the high-sounding term, run wild in its favor. No one can, we think, read Prof. Roberts' lecture and not see the fallacy of attempting the enforcement of such a law in Indiana. It may do for a paternal government, like France, a strong one like Germany, or a submissive people like the Swiss, but in our country, its history is a record of failures. In no single state has the law been enforced, and in no state is it likely to be enforced. A little more faith in the ability of the people to control these matters properly themselves, and less tinkering with the laws, are what we need.

THE Plymouth Democrat of last week contains an article on the recent vote in Indiana, for United States senator, that meets our approval. Senator McDonald's services and ability entitled him to recognition at the hands of the party and his claims were recognized. He discharged his duty with credit to himself and our state, and is regarded as one among the ablest men in Indiana, but "Laurel Hill" he must not make a fuss about it, or pout if our legislature see fit to vote for some other able democrat for senator. They cannot be expected to always vote for the same man. The Democrat says:

"Some of our democratic cotemporaries seem to attach unusual importance to the action of the democratic members of the legislature in giving Governor Gray a complimentary vote for United States senator, and regard this action as injustice to Senator McDonald. This is a matter of small concern, as the democratic party is not the property of any man or set of men. In complimenting Governor Gray the democrats simply made a choice between two able and distinguished democrats, and, in this action of the caucus, Senator McDonald and his friends can find no just cause for complaint. In 1872 the democratic members of the legislature cast their votes for the late Governor Williams for United States senator, and we have never heard that Governor Hendricks, Hon. J. E. McDonald, Hon. W. S. Holman, or any of the leading democrats felt that injustice had been done them, and there was just as much cause for complaint then as now. The best thing democrats can do is to remember that no "bosses" are wanted, and that they cannot afford to quarrel among themselves; but what is wanted is men of ability at the front, and harmony in the ranks for the contest of 1884."

HANCOCK'S MAJORITY.

It would seem that after a careful collection and consideration, by the Baltimore Sun, of the entire vote polled at the last presidential election, General Hancock has a clear majority over General Garfield of 6,332. The Baltimore Sun says:

"Careful revision of the returns from all the states, obtained by correspondence with the best sources of information, enables us to lay before our readers a correct table of the popular vote of the United States for president in November, 1880. The total vote of the country was 9,200,794, divided as follows:

Garfield, republican	4,437,081
Hancock, democrat	4,444,313
Weaver, greenback	307,063
Dow, prohibition	9,644
Scattering	1,793
Total	9,200,794
Hancock's majority	6,332

The total vote polled for president in 1876 by the same states as in 1880 was 8,411,136, and the increase is 789,658.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

THURSDAY, JAN. 27.

A bill to prohibit pool selling was passed by the senate.

A bill was introduced and referred to the military committee to take steps to preserve the muster rolls of eleven regiments of Indiana troops, who were enlisted in the late rebellion.

In the house a bill was reported to fix the liability of employes while in their service.

The bill to repeal the law, relating to the inspection of oil, was indefinitly postponed, as it was thought a better plan would be to amend the old law, rather than repeal it.

FRIDAY 28.

A bill was introduced in the senate to repeal the act limiting the eligibility of township trustees, and a bill allowing women to vote at elections for president and vice-president of the United States.

In the house, at bill to create a board of pardons, to assist the governor in that matter.

Death of General John Love.

From the Indianapolis Sentinel of January 31, we clip the following sketch of this distinguished citizen of Indiana, who died suddenly of heart disease, at his home in Indianapolis, January 29: "General Love was a man of warm impulses, and a general favorite with those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. Numbering among those who knew him well, were some of the most distinguished men upon the stage of action in the United States, at the present time. He was a classmate of General Winfield Scott Hancock at West Point.

General Love was a Virginian, born in the Old Commonwealth, January 9, 1820. He was some days over sixty years of age. Richard H. Love, his father, was of Welsh descent and belonged to a family of note and influence, in Fairfax county, Virginia. On his mother's side the General has descended from the illustrious Lee family. The gallant Richard H. Lee, of revolutionary fame, was among his ancestry.

General Love was educated at West Point, and served in the Mexican and late war with the south. He was a cadet from September 1, 1837, to July 1, 1841, then graduating and being appointed brevet second lieutenant of the First Dragoons. He served at the cavalry school at Carlisle, Pa., in 1841-42, and was made second lieutenant, February 21, 1842. He was assigned to frontier duty at Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, in 1842, Fort Scott in 1842-43, and was ordered to the Pawnee country in 1844. He was engaged in the expedition to the South Pass, Rocky Mountains, in 1845.

From 1845 to 1847 he was in recruiting service. June 30, 1846, he was promoted to a first lieutenancy. In the Mexican war he served with great distinction, and in 1848 was made a captain for gallant conduct at Santa Cruz. After the close of the Mexican war he was employed in the recruiting service, and in 1853 came to Indianapolis, where he has resided ever since. In the war of the rebellion he served as chief of staff to General Morris, in West Virginia. He served in several capacities up to 1863, when he resigned. He has always been a very useful citizen, and very much interested in the progress of the city. His wife was the daughter of the late Oliver H. Smith, a distinguished and honorable citizen of the state, and at one time United States senator.

He was a mason of the thirty-second degree. He was the first president of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society, organized in the state. He received his literary education at Nashville, Tenn., at Columbia College. He entered West Point from Tennessee, and was sent there by General Andrew Jackson. He was a great favorite of General Jackson. General Love was always a democrat, and of him did the party in the state often seek counsel. He has for years been a prominent man in the history of the state. His last official trust, one which he held at the time of his death, was a member of the state house commission, appointed by the late Governor James D. Williams.

THE chaplain of the main house of representatives prayed that God would bless the new governor and make him "as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove." Starting out with such auspicious omens, with such a breeze of orthodox popularity fanning one's sails, who wouldn't be a governor, even of a New England state?

The Circuit Judgeship.

Just at this time considerable is being said about our court. A petition was circulated among the members of the bar last week asking our legislature to pass an act to retire Judge Tousley on full pay and authorizing the governor to appoint a judge in addition at the same salary, which would make our court cost us for judges' salary alone $5,000 per annum in these three counties. We look upon this as being unnecessary, and very much doubt whether our legislature would care to make that kind of a record for economy. There is no doubt but what Judge Tousley has the right under the statute to appoint a judge to hold court should he for some good reason be unable to do so himself. The salary or per diem of an appointee is $5 per day, and the time fixed by law for holding court is three weeks in Steuben, three weeks in DeKalb and four weeks in Noble; and four terms per year would make forty weeks, or 240 days, which at $5 per day would be $1,200. This is assuming that the full time allowed by law would be taken up, which is seldom the case, especially now. All attorneys will agree that the business in court is very much less than it was a few years ago. Now, by appointing a judge to hold court there would be a saving of $1,300 a year in salary; besides Judge Tousley may regain his health so that he can again resume his duties as judge, and no one need be appointed. Of course to appoint another judge would give somebody a chance to get the appellation of "judge" firmly fixed to his name, besides giving him a salary of $2 500 a year for several years, all of which, no doubt, would make somebody happy, but would it not be a little expensive? This is not our fight. The legislature is republican, as is also the governor, and so would be the appointee, and all we can do is to express our opinion on the subject.

Principles on Which Text-Books Should be Composed.

This subject is an important one. It not only has an influence on general education, but wields a large influence on our whole public school system itself. It is a subject upon which much has been said and written; a subject that has occupied the attention and earnest thought of our leading educators and men of thought for many years. It has been the theme of many controversies in our educational assemblies, and as yet whilst many improvements have been made nothing has been definitely settled. Such being the case, it could not be expected that I should be able to add much to what has already been said and written upon the subject, or that I should be able to convince anyone of the wisdom and practical tendency of my crude ideas upon a subject on which there is such a wide diversity of opinions amongst leading educators themselves. In my experience as a teacher I have come in contact with many of our leading educators, and have examined many of our leading text-books, and in conversing with teachers and examining books we find such a multitude of adverse opinions and such a wide difference of methods and thoughts that one would almost be lost as it were in a maze of contradictions. Therefore it would not be supposed that I could, nor shall I assume, to settle any of the principles on which text-books should be constructed. I can only give and shall only pretend to give my own individual opinion of an ideal text-book, gathered from my contact with other teachers and my own thoughts and researches on the subject, and leave the settlement of the question to your own candid judgment. And right here allow me to say that what we need more than anything else is a free, outspoken criticism of all text-books, both by educators and educational journals. Of any new text-book our educational journals say, as if with one voice: "The volume before us is so far superior to any other book on the subject that we hardly know (as if they knew anything at all about it) which to admire most, the manner of its presentation or its faultless, artistic merits, etc., etc., and we predict that it will work a perfect revolution on the subject," and so on, ad infinitum. Such Namby Pandy notices savor more of a puff on Vinegar Bitters and liver pads than of an earnest and just criticism on a work which is to have an influence more or less on the destiny of a portion of mankind. Such criticisms would put to shame an ordinary love-letter. The editors who write these notices are either deficient in brains or wanting in courage. Or if our educational journals are afraid of hurting their advertising patronage they had better quit the business and leave the field to men of backbone. Another source of evil is the many commendations given by educators to worthless books, or books without special merits, and many times given without a thorough examination. But a great many people have a mania for seeing their names in print, and seize with avidity an opportunity of appearing before the educational world as a man of education and investigation, and he says it is just the book he wants; that it fills a want long felt—an aching void as it were in his mental habitation. From all such criticisms you can get at best but a crude idea of the real educational merits of a text-book.

Also allow me to call your attention to some of the criticisms in regard to the uses of the text-book by teachers, and to some of the criticisms by would be judges of what should and what should not be taught in our public schools.

1st. We have heard so much said by certain teachers against the use of text-books by the teachers that we have wished to see one of these very smart teachers banished with his school to some island in the Pacific Ocean where there are no books, and where he could get none, and there compelled to teach for ten years, evolving all knowledge from his inner consciousness. At the close of that time we would like to be on a committee to examine his school! The result could not be doubted. No doubt the use of books is abused, but their proper use and study is a duty which the teacher owes to himself and his school. Our text-books of to-day are a potent influence on our public schools, and if we were compelled to use those of a generation ago our schools would lose much of their excellence. The world grows wiser and our books contain its wisdom, and if the scholar and teacher would be wise they must study books, therefore how necessary that our books should be models of composition and good sense. Almost every day we hear people say that what is taught in our public schools is not practical. They say that it is far more practical for a lady to know how to boil an egg or broil a steak than it is for her to understand chemistry or philosphy, and for a farmer's boy to know how to plant onions and trim apple trees than to know how to bound all the South American states or tell about Indian wars, and for the clerk to be able to write a neat business letter than it is for him to be able to translate Cæsar. I do not object to these assertion, but I do object to an acquiescence to them which they evidently expect. Suppose a clerk can write a business letter, how is he to transact business unless he knows enough to write what is of a business character? The value of a business letter depends more upon what it says—its pith and point—than it does upon how it is penned, folded and addressed. Brains tell more than anything else in working out the problems of life, and brain power is developed by persistent and prolonged study of our best books and contact with our best masters. Strong brains, concentration of thought, and broad intellectual grasp is what we want. With these, man will do everything, without them nothing. So let the idea of planting onions, hoeing corn and cooking eggs take care of themselves; our boys and girls to THINK. Therefore our text-books should be so modeled and planned as to bring out thought, and it is the duty, and should be the great aim of the teacher, to teach our children HOW TO THINK. Our text-books, then, should be plain, practical and written in a lively living language, so as to attract an interest. I have heard some one say in regard to a certain school history, that it was written in a nice and pleasing style, and that is was a pleasant book to read, but not a good book to teach. I think when these qualities have been attained that one grand step has been make toward a good school book. We want books that are PLEASING and ATTRACTIVE, and at the same time accurate in all of their points. One of the most essential points to be considered in regard to text-books, I think, is the definitions. These should be plain, accurate, and should have no uncertain sound. They should be so plain that they need not themselves be defined. In looking over some definitions I found these: Understand was defined as comprehend; knowledge as perception, and obliged as indebted. You will find in many arithmetics that quantity is defined as anything that will admit of measurement, and in others as anything that will admit of increase or decrease, both inaccurate. One of our books defines present worth, without note or comment, as being the difference between the face of an obligation and the discount, and last but not least, one of our new-revised grammars, which is used in eighty-eight of the ninety-one societies in this state, defines a complex sentence as one with an element containing a subject and predicate. While it is accurate, it is ambiguous and not clear-cut. Many other cases of this kind have come under my observation, but these are sufficient for an illustration of the vagueness of many definitions in our leading text books. Another feature of our text books is, that the rules and definitions given by different authors differ not only in phraseology, but materially as well. I would have all books on the same subject give the same rules and definitions in fact if not in word. Another important feature is the great number of books in a series, four or five geographies, as many arithmetics, and five or six readers. I would prefer a two-book series in geography, also in arithmetic, and am inclined to think all readers beyond the fourth-reader as altogether useless. Also the expenses incumbent upon the patrons of our schools in purchasing such a multitude of books is enough to discourage and make them dissatisfied with our whole school system. Farther, many of our books take up too much space in giving directions to teachers, and lack in good, practical models and problems for the pupils. In conclusion, then, I would say that my ideal arithmetic would be a two-book series, an elementary and a practical work, doing away with the primary arithmetic entirely. The definitions in these books should be plain and in language easily understood, and they should contain no subject not practical in the everyday walks of life. In this view I would relegate to some higher mathematics the subjects of alligation, duodecimals and circulating decimals and the progressions to algebra where they properly belong, and in their place I would substitute a chapter on practical book-keeping. The books should be copiously supplied with good, practical problems, both written and mental, and ALL PROBLEMS SHOULD HAVE ANSWERS. Geography should be a two-book series, an elementary and complete, and the primary should not start out with the question, "What is the shape of the earth," etc., things which children can no more comprehend than they can understand the force of gravity. I would have the primary take up, first, the mathematical geography of the school-room, then the school-grounds, then the town in which the school is located, then county, then state, and so on, until fitted to take the complete. On the subject of United States history I would have a work brief, accurate and yet complete. It should be written in a free, easy and pleasant style. There should be no questions at the bottom of the page, no foot-notes, no marginal references, no leaded type or finger-boards. Every page should be free from all and everything that would mar its beauty. It should be well supplied with good, accurate maps and charts, and profusely illustrated with cuts of the leading characters of the day, and I should continue these ideas throughout the whole range of text-books. They should be models of brevity and simplicity, plain practical, nothing superfluous, nothing wanting, but each should be one grand, perfect whole.

W. P. MYERS.

"Two out of three men who were purchased by Simon Cameron, in 1857, to vote for him for senator are dead, having died drunkards. The third one still lives in Harrisburg, keeps a low saloon, and is shunned by everybody."—Exchange.

"The three Judases above referred to were named, respectively, Wagenseller, Lebo, and Maiuer. They hailed from York, Northumberland and Schuylkill counties, and the sum received by each for their perfidy ranged from $5,000 to $7,000. Col. John W. Forney was the democratic and Simon Cameron the republican nominee. The democrats had but a slight majority on joint ballot, so that the purchase of three votes lost them the senatorship. We remember the exciting circumstances distinctly, being at that time an apprentice in one of the leading printing offices of Harrisburg. Popular indignation ran very high. The three Judases were compelled to leave their boarding places, democrats declaring that they would not stay at a house that longer harbored such base betrayers of a high trust. Cameron attempted to play the same trick in 1863, when the democrats had a majority of one in the legislature, and electure the Hon. Charles R. Buckalew. Cameron then offered $20,000 for a single vote, through the notorious John J. Patterson, and would probably have made his point but for the presence of a few hundred determined democrats from all parts of the state who, with revolvers in hand, served notice that treason to the democratic party meant death."

It was a sad affair, and the funeral attracted a large number of the old neighbors of the deceased. Another brother, Scott Blaine, the engineer, recently injured in a collision on the Ft. Wayne road, near Valparaiso, was in attendance, but is still obliged to use crutches. Deceased was buried near the home of his parents, not far from Columbia City.

MR EDITOR:—I see by your last issue, that Elder Ward received the good will and esteem of his friends, by a donation at his residence, in Auburn, and only regret that the institution was not more general.

The friends of other ministers, in showing their regards in a similar way, give a general invitation through the papers, so that all may have an opportunity to contribute, without any feeling of delicacy or exclusiveness.

Rev. S. B. Ward is an old resident and a worthy recipient of such favors, and, had a general invitation been given, his little hand-cart would have been sufficiently greased, that it would probably have run without his assistance for some time to come.

In an early day, when roads were almost impassible, and long succeeding years afterward, Elder Ward has buffeted the storms, the summer's heat, and winter's cold, and responded to the call of the sick and dying in all parts of this county, administering comfort and consolation in their last moments, as well as pointing them to the lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world; and when the flickering spark had fled, followed them to their last resting place, preached their funeral sermon, very often without any reward, save the consciousness of doing the will of his Master.

Every church in Auburn cannot but feel grateful to Elder Ward for efficient services rendered, in not only shaking the tree while they have gathered the fruit, but when they have been without a shepherd, he proclaimed for them the glad tidings of joy and peace; and in fact, he has been a pack-horse for all denominations without regard to creeds, in carrying their burdens, and obeying calls when there was no one to respond.

And now, as the evening shadows begin to gather around him, and he can begin to hear the dashing surges against the shores of that great ocean, eternity, it is but right and proper that substantial regards should be bestowed upon him, not as a donation, but as renumeration for services rendered.

Elder Ward has always been an active worker in the church, the sabbath school, and in everything else calculated to promote religion and morality, and scores of jewels in the crown of his rejoicing anoint him in mansions not made with hands eternal in the heavens.

Crystal Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. M. Hamilton, of Jackson township, were treated to a very pleasant surprise, on January 25, 1881, the fifteenth anniversary of their wedding day. About 10 o'clock a. m., their friends and neighbors gathered from all directions, each bringing some appropriate gift. The table was set with a most tempting supper, and various gifts neatly arranged on the sideboard. In presenting them, a neat and appropriate speech was made by Rev. H. Nelson, and responded to by Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton. The guests then sat down to a very elegant supper, after which, all left for their respective homes, wishing the happy couple a long and happy life, and hoping that all might be spared to attend their golden wedding. The following are the names of those in attendance: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McClellan, Mr. and Mrs. J. Piles, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Morr and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. Swisher, Mr. and Mrs. J D. Likens, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ditmar, Mr. and Mrs. S. George, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Elson, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Elson, Mr. and Mrs. John Sheffer, Mr. and Mrs. J. Neff, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Stafford, Mr. and Mrs. John Cramer, Mr. and Mrs. J. Provines, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Prosser, Mr. and Mrs. R. Provines, Mr. and Mrs. John Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. L. Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. McCoy, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Phelps, of Bowling Green, O., and Mrs. Canon, mother of Mrs. Mrs. Hamilton.

In the evening, the young people of the neighborhood, to the number of about 40, came in unannounced, and passed an agreeable evening. Then, to make the whole thing complete, the party was suddenly aroused by the firing of guns, ringing of bells and all other accompaniments of an old fashioned belling. It reminded those present, of the time past, when a couple, who were married without the formality of a belling, were hardly considered equal to the average in society. The young people stayed into the "wee sma' hours ayont the twal," and then went home, hoping, no doubt, that they might soon enjoy even their own first wedding day.

—Soldiers expecting to attend the reunion of the 44 Indiana regiment, at Ft. Wayne, February 16, can get excursion tickets at the rate of two cents per mile each way, by securing certificates of Lewis Griffith, Angola, Ind.; E. S. Aldrich, Pleasant Lake; Frank W. Willis, Waterloo; or Nicholas Ensley, Auburn. Application should be made at once. Tickets good to return up to the 17th.

Re-Union of the 44th Indiana Volunteers.

The surviving members of the 44th Indiana regiment will hold their second annual re-union at Fort Wayne, on Wednesday, February 16, 1881, the eighteenth anniversary of the battle of Fort Donaldson. The following is a synopsis of the programme: The regiment will meet in the rink at 10 a. m. If the weather permits will parade at 2 p. m.; at 3 p. m. business meeting for the election of officers for the ensuing year and transaction of other business in the interest of the association, after which a speech by one member from each company will be listened to relative to the battle of Fort Donaldson. Banquet at 6 p. m. The evening exercises in conjunction with the citizens of Fort Wayne, will be as follows: Address of welcome by Col. Z. A. Zollinger; response by Col. Hugh B. Reed; reproduction of the meeting held by the citizens of Fort Wayne upon receipt of the news of the victory at Ft. Donaldson; historical record of the movement and marches of the regiment, by Maj. J. H. Rerick; speeches by Col. W. C. Williams, Capt. O. A. Rose and others. The occasion will be enlivened with vocal and instrumental music. All soldiers and citizens are cordially invited to be in attendance.

Our School-House.

Having had the misfortune to lose our handsome and commodious new school-house by fire, it will, of course, become the duty of our school board to provide another or others for the accomodation of the schools. Now, a large, fine school-house is an ornament to a town and is commendable etc. In doing a thing of this kind, two things are to be taken into account. First, what will best accomodate the patrons and scholars. Second, expense of construction, etc. As to the first, would it not be better for the little fellows, who cannot wade snow and brave storms very well, to have ward school houses at as many different places in town, as might be needed to accomodate the public. These houses could be built either of wood or brick, at an expense of say $700 each, and suppose you need about three in addition to the one already in use; this would make $2,100. Then build a house for the larger scholars, which necessarily need not be very large, and promote from your ward schools into your grammar or high school room. In this way, ample provision can be made, and a good school had without adding one dollar to the town debt. Besides, you bring a school-house near home for the small scholars, and in this way keep them away from the larger ones, who play and talk rougher than is conducive to the welfare of the small ones, both morally and physically. We wrote this little article hastily, but believe the idea has sufficient merit to entitle it to a fair discussion by those interested.

—We stepped over and took a peep at the masqueraders at Waterloo on Wednesday evening of last week, and ge ma-na grismus, what a sight and what fun! The fat folks were there, so were the lean, the striped, the speckled, the old, the young, the handsome, the homely—in fact we were there ourself. All seemed to enjoy themselves hugely. Some of the ladies deserve great credit for their ingenuity in getting up novel costumes. Some of the gentlemen also did well in that direction. We were too much befuddled and tickled to particularize, so permit us to say that it was a very ludicrous and happy collection of our race.

Publishers' Commercial Union.

Clarance W. Taylor, of Janesville, Wisconsin, has hit upon a good plan to protect newspaper publishers from advertising frauds, and no publisher can afford to remain outside of the Publishers' Commercial Union, of which Mr. Taylor is general manager. It seems now, a little strange that some one did not hit on this plan sooner.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

New York dispatches state that the indignation aroused in the community by the scheme to consolidate the Western Union, American Union, and Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Companies is of the most intense description. The down-town merchants particularly are in earnest in their determination not to submit to the imposition which will be inevitable in order to secure money enough to pay dividends on a watered capital of $80,000,000, and many of them expressed their readiness to subscribe toward the construction of a new system of lines, which will be so organized as to make it impossible that it will ever be absorbed by any other company....Julius Meyer, of New York, was fined $250 and sent to the penitentiary for three months for using decayed meat in the manufacture of sausages....The obelisk was placed on its pedestal in Central Park, New York, last week. Secretaries Evarts and Goff and Gen. Arthur were in attendance, beside a large crowd of spectators.... A frightful accident occurred on the Erie railroad near Owego, N. Y. The axle of one of the driving wheels of the locomotive broke, and the entire express train, going at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour, was thrown from the track. The engine kept its feet, and the engineer and fireman escaped uninjured, but the forward cars were turned over and over. The postal car caught fire and four mailing clerks were burned to death. A hole was cut in the door of the express car and the messenger put his head out, but could not extricate his body. The train men tried to pull him out, but were driven back by the flames, and they saw him slowly burn to death. There were nine passenger coaches, but none of the passengers sustained any injury.

A Dutch emigrant named Roeloft Von Baren, who has been living on charity in New Haven, Ct., is said to have fallen heir to an estate valued somewhere from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000. The Mayor of Hamburg is one of the bearers of the glad tidings. The name of the accumulator of the fortune was Heinrich Spier, and among the items are seventy ships and a number of ship-yards. Owing to a fatal affray with a half-brother, Von Baren dare not return to Holland.

Senator Hall has introduced, in the Pennsylvania Legislature, a bill to declare forfeited the telegraph property aiming at consolidation in defiance of the provisions of the State constitution.

Mrs. Valeria Stone, of Boston, in distributing the remainder of her husband's estate, has given $5,000 each to colleges at Crete, Neb.; Topeka, Kan.; and Colorado Springs, Col. Her benefactions amount to $1,793,294....Catherine Crane, a New York boarding-house keeper, was fatally shot by a printer named William Lindrum, whom she had ejected....A mass of coal and rock, estimated at 2,000 tons, fell in the Empire mines at Wilkesbarre, Pa., burying Morris and Thos. Evans.

The dry-goods store of Robert Gordon, at Owego, N. Y., burned, the estimated loss being $55,000....A six-story building at 365 and 367 Broadway, New York, occupied by several dry goods and importing firms, has been partially burned. The losses aggregate about $600,000....Ex-Gov. Sprague has filed his cross-bill in the suit for divorce brought by his wife. He declares that she has committed adultery, has driven her eldest son out of doors, and persistently squandered his property, embarrassing him in his efforts to extricate himself from his pecuniary straits, as well as persisting in a course of slanderous and obscene language toward him.

THE WEST.

There has been filed in the Recorder's office at Chicago a general mortgage from the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway Company to the Central Trust Company, of New York, and James Cheney, of Indiana (trustees), for $50,000,000, the mortgage to run for forty years, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, payable on the 1st day of June and December, in the city of New York, in gold....A train on the Rock Island road struck a broken rail near Tiskilwa, Ill., and the coaches were dragged over the ties and rolled down an embankment. The first car was set on fire by the stove. Mrs. Mary A. Kirby, of Wyandotte, Ohio, was burned to death, and thirteen others were so badly injured that they could not proceed....Father Edward Purcell, a brother of the Archbishop of Cincinnati, died of pneumonia at the Ursuline convent in Brown county, Ohio. He was the manager of the church banking business which ended in such a disastrous collapse.... The furniture factory of F. Mayer & Co., on South Canal street, Chicago, has burned, causing a loss of about $50,000. During the conflagration the south wall of the structure fell, partially burying in the ruins fifteen firemen and a policeman. Two of the firemen were fatally and nearly all the others severely injured.... Frederic Kester was hanged at Danville, Ill., for the brutal murder of his wife. The crime was committed on the night of Aug. 9, 1879, in a farm house near Buckley, Iroquois county.... E. B. Backus, a merchant of Independence, Iowa, went to the grave of his wife and shot himself in the temple....A gambler named R. G. Watson shot and killed a soldier of Company F, Sixteenth infantry, at San Angelo, Texas.

Reports from the southern parts of Indiana, Illinois, and contiguous territory, received at the Evansville Courier office, state an almost entire failure of the whole crop in the sections named, owing to late planting and the early and hard winter, a large portion of the wheat land being a mass of ice with the seed frozen out. Reports say that not over a fifth of the crop can be made under the most favorable circumstances.... Augustus P. Ladew died at Atlanta, Ill., from an overdose of opium. He was engaged in business with Horace Greeley and Robert Dale Owen, in New York, in 1820, and was a well-known type-founder in St. Louis in later years. He lost his fortune in purchasing the St. Nicholas Hotel, at Bloomington, Ill.

A party of friends of the late James Bowers, of Worthington, Ohio, undertook to watch over his corpse for a night, and were startled at hearing noises in the room where he was laid out. Cautiously entering the apartment, they found that three body-thieves had the coffin half-way out of an open window.. The widow of Prof. Watson, the astronomer, will contest his will, which left his fortune to the advancement of science....A brother of Secretary of War Ramsay committed suicide at St. Paul, Minn....Burglars overpowered and bound the watchman in the office of the Union Iron and Steel Company, Chicago, blew open the safe, helped themselves to $10,000 in cash, and made good their escape.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association will be held at Janesville, Wis., on the 8th, 9th and 10th of February. A cordial invitation is extended to all dairymen, butter and cheese manufacturers, dealers, manufacturers of dairy implements, and all others interested in this great and growing industry, to be present on this occasion.

J. M. Smith, Cashier of the Bank of Kansas City, started to descend a bluff by stairs which had recently been removed, of which fact he was ignorant. He fell sixty feet to the railroad track, and was fatally injured.

Levi Z. Leiter has withdrawn from the great Chicago dry-goods house of Field, Leiter & Co., and the remaining partners will continue business under the name of Marshall Field & Co. Its chief founders, who are only about 45 years of age, are credited with the possession of $6,000,000 each....A joint resolution expressing sympathy for the suffering people in Ireland, and inviting them to emigrate to this country, was adopted by the Michigan Legislature.... Commodore Davidson and others have filed with the Secretary of State, at St. Paul, articles for a company, with $2,000,000 capital, to improve the water power at Sauk Rapids.... Small-pox has broken out in the penitentiary at Fort Madison, Iowa, and the foremen on contract work have fled in fright....Lieut. Archibald Gibson, of the Seventh cavalry, died in St. Louis from congestion of the brain, caused by the bite of a spider when a cadet at West Point.

Prof. Riley warns the people of Marquette and Green Lake counties, Wis., that the seventeen-year locust will appear throughout this summer. The thirteen-year brood will visit Southern Illinois.

THE SOUTH.

A fleet of fifteen oyster boats from Maryland entered the mouth of the Rappahannock and began dredging for oysters in open violation of the Virginia Oyster laws. The Virginians opened fire upon them with a cannon, and the first round was returned by a volley from the fleet, delivered amid cheers from the oyster pirates. The cannon fired a second shot with better effect than the first, and struck one of the dredges in her rigging. The oystermen then beat a hasty retreat, their speed being accelerated by shots sent after them.... Kent Marsh, an insane passenger, was taken on board the steamer Annie R. Silver at Memphis. As the boat was nearing New Madrid, Mo., Marsh arose from his bed and made his way up to the pilot-house, where Mr. Dan Blake, second clerk, and several passengers were talking with the pilot. He drew a revolver, held it to Blake's head, shot and killed him instantly, and then fired another shot at the pilot, the ball just grazing his forehead, the concussion being sufficient to render him insensible. Marsh was soon secured, but not until his hand was fearfully lacerated in attempting to retain possession of the weapon.... In a rural region of Tennessee, not far from Chattanooga, Henry Yarnell was killed and a man named Howe shot in the mouth, by assassins. Two suspected men, named Brooks and Griffey, were arrested on suspicion and confined in a blacksmith shop, under guard, but during the night both were killed by rifle balls.

The Cincinnati Southern railroad is to be leased for ninety-nine years to a company of home capitalists, who will agree to pay out of the first profits 4 per cent. on the city's investment of $18,000,000....A negro woman of Cranston, N. C., gave birth to four babies.

The first grain elevator on the South Atlantic coast has been opened for business at Port Royal, S. C....The cemeteries of Alexandria, Va., were visited by grave robbers, who exhumed the body of Mrs. Jacobs, of Washington, and that of a colored girl. Two negroes have been arrested on suspicion....The unveiling of the Cowpens monument, at Spartanburg, S. C., will take place on May 11, and the President, Cabinet and Governors of States have been invited.

WASHINGTON.

An important decision of the United States Supreme Court sets forth that Congress exceeded its power in imprisoning Hallett Kilbourne for refusing to deliver up certain papers and answer certain questions to the House committee which was investigating the real-estate pools of the District of Columbia.... The President has nominated Edward C. Billings, of Louisiana, to the Southern Circuit, made vacant by the promotion of Judge Woods to the Supreme bench....According to the treasury records, William H. Vanderbilt owns $50,000,000 Government bonds.

Secretary Sherman has been heard by the Senate Finance Committee on the Funding bill. He took the position that it should be amended so as to make the funding bonds redeemable after five years and payable in twenty years from date of issue, and to bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3½ per cent., the rate to be fixed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. He expressed the opinion that the treasury funding certificates proposed by the bill—which he thought should be described as "treasury notes"—could be floated at 3-per-cent. interest without change in the House provision for their redemption at any time after one year from their respective dates of issue.

The report of the commission appointed some weeks ago by the President to inquire into the wrongs of the Ponca Indians reflects very seriously upon the conduct of the Secretary of the Interior. They say that the removal of the Poncas from their lands in Nebraska and Dakota was not only most unfortunate for the Indians, entailing great hardship and loss of life and property, but it was injudicious and without just cause. The Poncas had an unassailable title to the lands in question, and had violated none of the conditions upon which it was given them. The commission recommended that Congress pass an act granting to every Ponca 160 acres of land in Nebraska or Dakota, or in Indian Territory, as they may elect, in one year, and allowing during that year free intercourse between the two portions of the tribe.

GENERAL.

Articles have been filed at Albany for the construction of a line of telegraph from New York to Cape Breton, a cable to Great Britain, France and Spain, and another cable from the Pacific coast to China, Japan and Australia. The stock of the company is to be $20,000,000, and the incorporators are Jay Gould, Thomas T. Eckert, David H. Bates, and Frederick L. Ames.

The twenty-four hours ending Sunday, Jan. 23, was one of unusually widespread meteorological violence, as shown by the telegraphic reports from the various sections of the country. In New York a heavy gale, accompanied by a sleet which froze as it fell, set in and lasted an entire day, doing an immense amount of damage. All the telegraph, telephone and fire-alarm wires were thrown down by the accumulations of ice, and the city was completely cut off from telegraphic communication with the world. Messages were received and carried by messengers to Jersey City and other surrounding points. Business was almost suspended, especially in grain and stocks, owing to the inability to get market advices. Mounted firemen patrolled the streets to give alarms of fire. Five thousand trees in Central Park were ruined, and much damage was done to cornices, chimneys, etc., and a number of persons were seriously injured by being hit by falling pieces of ice. Throughout a large portion of New England there was a heavy storm of alternating rain and snow, amounting in the aggregate to about twenty-two inches in depth, and travel was largely blocked. It was accompanied by a gale of forty miles an hour. In the region of which Chicago forms the center, snow fell to the depth of about nine inches. Snow slides at Custer and Bonanza, Idaho, swept off seventeen persons, all but four of whom were rescued. There were from twelve to twenty inches of snow at Helena, Montana, and considerable losses of stock are reported. The storm was quite general throughout Nebraska, and serious effects upon cattle in the grazing regions are feared. At Watertown, in Northern New York, the snow was from two to four feet deep. Snow fell steadily in New Orleans for eight hours, melting rapidly away. There were snow drifts thirty feet high in the vicinity of Kingston, Ont.... President Leland Stanford, of the Central Pacific railroad, in answering certain inquiries put forth by a committee of the New York Board of Trade, opens by asserting that tariffs sprung from robbery and rapine, and that it was now intended that this should be a paternal Government. He denies that railroads are public highways or common carriers, and says that if the roads contribute large sums to control elections it is because self-defense forces them to it. Legislative control, he declares, would be less just than the rates of the companies themselves, and the management should remain with the owners unless purchase is made by the State. He thinks that the proposal that the Government regulate commerce between the States would only erect business between individuals living in different States.

Capt. Howgate, formerly of the Signal Service, who has stated he intended to send out another Arctic expedition next summer, has probably abandoned his project, as he has sold his ship, the Gulnare, to some Baltimore merchants, and is now seeking an American registry.

According to figures furnished by the Census Bureau, $227,451,550 worth of 4, 4½ and 5-per-cent. bonds are held by corporations. The national banks hold $10,251,400, the savings banks $181,294,400, private banks $10,924,150, insurance companies $50,857,400, trust companies $13,834,050, and express companies $640,100.

An agreed case is to be submitted to the courts to test the legality of the payment of dividends by the Central Pacific railroad while the road is in arrears.

The racing fund in the United States for the current year will approximate $1,000,000. Nine English horses have reached New York, to be entered in our summer contests. An English trainer and some jockeys are also expected.

POLITICAL.

Hon. Charles H. Van Wyck was elected United States Senator from Nebraska on the seventeenth ballot. Gen. Van Wyck hails from New York State, where he was born and raised. He lived for many years in Orange county, and served two terms in Congress from that district. He also served in the army during the civil war. He was always quite prominent in New York politics. He moved to Nebraska about eight years ago, and bought a large farm near Nebraska City, where he resides. He at once entered into Nebraska politics, and soon gained considerable prominence. He has served in the upper house of the Nebraska Legislature for two terms, and is a member of the present Legislature.

Johnson N. Camden has been elected Senator by the Legislature of West Virginia, the twenty Republicans voting for A. W. Campbell....S. B. Maxey has been re-elected Senator from Texas, Throckmorton standing second on the ballot....The New Jersey Legislature elected Wm. J. Sewell to the United States Senate.... A Washington correspondent says there is no doubt that Senator Allison can have the treasury portfolio in President Garfield's Cabinet if he desires. It is said, however, that he has determined to remain in the Senate. He has been urging the Hon. James F. Wilson, of his State, for the post offered to himself, but the gossipers say Mr. Wilson will get the Secretaryship of the Interior, and that Senator Windom, of Minnesota, is the one most likely to be Secretary of the Treasury.

Howell E. Jackson, a State-Credit Democrat, was elected to the United States Senate by the Tennessee Legislature on the thirtieth ballot....It is said that the Pennsylvania member of the new Cabinet will be Wharton Barker, the banker, who, in May, 1879, presented Garfield's name for the Presidency. ....Congressman Berry, of California, thinks the new treaty with China will afford no relief from the curse of Celestial immigration. Congressman Page says the Pacific coast wants an amendment to the treaty, to enable Congress to prevent or restrict immigration.

Gen. Garfield has selected as his Private Secretary Prof. O. C. Hill, principal of the Normal School at Oregon, Mo., who was a member of the college faculty at Hiram, Ohio, when Garfield was President of that institution.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Buenos Ayres says the Chilians attacked and defeated the Peruvian army at Miraflores, on the 17th of January, and occupied Lima. Gen. Pierola, President of Peru and Commander-in-Chief of the army, saved himself by flight. Gen. Piedras, his brother, and the Peruvian Minister of War were taken prisoners. Twenty-five thousand Peruvians were engaged in the battle. The diplomatic body at Lima had urged the conclusion of an armistice, and asked that the person of President Pierola be respected. ....The death of E. A. Sothern, the actor, is announced from London, after a prolonged period of suffering.

It is rumored in London that Mr. Gladstone will be raised to the peerage under the title of Lord Hawarden (pronounced Harden). In this event the Marquis of Hartington will become leader of the Liberal party in the Commons....Joseph U. Crawford, a Pennsylvanian, has completed a division of the first American railroad in Asia, on one of the northern islands of Japan, at a cost of $20,000 per mile.... Gen. Skobeleff telegraphs to St. Petersburg that, on the night of Jan. 15, his forces carried the Turcoman positions within forty yards of the fortress of Geok Tepe. On the following night the Turcomans assaulted his center and left, but were repulsed with great slaughter and pursued over the ramparts of their own works....The death is announced of Vorbockhoven, the eminent Belgian painter.

In the British House of Commons, on the 24th of January, Mr. Forster, Chief Secretary for Ireland, moved the passage of the Coercion bill. He justified the matter by a long and detailed description of the outrages which had been committed in Ireland. The Land League, he said, had a system of constables who recorded every infringement of the rules of the order. As a result, the league was supreme; there was a perfect reign of terror. Mr. Lyons, Liberal member for Dublin, moved as an amendment that land reform ought to precede coercive measures, and he was supported by Bradlaugh, Dillon and McCarthy. Sir Stafford Northcote assured the Government that the Opposition would give them all proper support in the progress of the bills through the House....South American advices are to the effect that Lima surrendered unconditionally after Chorillos, Barraca and Miraflores had been taken. There was great slaughter in the battles at those places. It is also reported that Callao has capitulated.... The British Government has offered a reward of $2,500 for the apprehension of the men who tried to blow up the Salford barracks....The manufactory of arms at Birmingham, England, is guarded by a detachment of troops, for fear of a Fenian raid....The Irredentists, of Italy are secretly raising funds with the purpose of invading Austrian Tyrol in the spring.

Much distress exists among the laborers in the distressed districts of Ireland. In every town in the county of Clare they are receiving relief, and the workhouses are crowded. The men arrested on suspicion of taking part in the murder of Lord Mountmorris have been discharged. A detachment of troops has been ordered to Weedon to protect a Government store. The baron es in Roscommon county have been declared in a state of disturbance. The trial of the traversers was brought to a close at Dublin on the 25th of January. Judge Fitzgerald charged the jury at noon, and they retired. After a short deliberation, a juror stated to the court that they stood ten to two, but the Judge insisted upon a unanimous verdict. At 7:45 p. m. the foreman announced the impossibility of reaching an agreement, and they were discharged. Outside the Court House the crowd rent the air with cheers. A torchlight procession was organized in honor of Parnell, who had slipped away to London at the close of the trial....Great depression is reported in the cotton and woolen industries of Russia. Most of the mills are running on short time, and some of them have closed entirely. Thornton, the English millionaire, and owner of the largest cloth mill in St. Petersburg, discharged 1,500 weavers at one stroke....A riot occurred between the miners and police at Skelmersdale and Clydesly, in England. One man was killed and several injured.

Eighty stalwart, but hungry, laborers of Kanturk, Ireland, forced their way into the workhouse, made prisoners of the Poor-law Guardians, and refused to let them go until they should promise to give them work. The Guardians compromised by agreeing to furnish out-door relief for one week to the starving families of the unemployed....At a meeting of the Land League in Dublin, Michael Davitt characterized Forster's speech on the Coercion bill as one of the most infamous and lying addresses ever delivered in the House of Commons....After a session of twenty-four hours, the British House of Commons passed Gladstone's resolution to give precedence to the coercion bills, the vote standing 251 to 33.... Warning has been given the commander of the volunteers at Newport, Isle of Wight, that an attempt to blow up the armory there will be made....The Russians drove the Tekke-Turcomans from Geok-Tepe and Dengal-Tepe, with great loss, on the 24th of January....The apprehension of Fenian assaults has caused the closing of the horse armory and White tower at London.... It is reported from Singapore, India, that over seventy persons were drowned by the capsizing of a local trading steamer....Eighteen persons were drowned at Cherbourg, France, by the foundering of a boat used for harbor work.... A London dispatch of the 27th ult. says: After the action of the Government to-day the people will have good reason to be alarmed. The Second battalion of the Eighteenth (or Royal) Irish Regiment of Foot, stationed at Aldershot, and under the command of Lieut. Col. Gregorie, has been disarmed. Of course nothing can explain such a step excepting a belief that the troops have become imbued with Fenianism, and may join in the rebellion which is so soon to come upon us.

In the British House of Commons, Mr. Mundella stated that infected cattle had been found among American cargoes landed since the year opened, but there was no official information of the existence of the foot-and-mouth disease in the United States.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

Senator Logan managed to get a favorable report on his bill to place Gen. Grant on the retired list on Friday, Jan. 21. Two Democrats of the Military Committee, Maxey and Hampton, were absent, and Senator Logan was supported by Plumb, Burnside and Cameron (Pa). The three Democrats, Cockrell, Randolph and Grover, voted the other way, but did not filibuster against the report. The Senate passed the Indian Appropriation bill; also the bill to [illegible] Gen. Ord on the retired list with the rank and pay of Major General. The House passed the measure for the retirement of Gen. Ord. Mr. Loring, of the Sixth Massachusetts district, was declared entitled to his seat. A report in favor of seating Bisbee, the contestant from the Second Florida district, was received.

The Senate was not in session on Saturday, Jan. 22. The House held an all-night session on Friday, at which absolutely nothing was done, no quorum being present, and several members objecting to all business offered. On Saturday, Mr. Hull, from a Florida district was unseated, and Mr. Bisbee, the contestant, admitted. Mr. Reagan made a vain effort to have the Inter-State Commerce bill taken up, and nothing was accomplished but the passage of several minor bills. The members were so exhausted from the previous night's session that an early adjournment was effected.

Mr. Logan asked unanimous consent of the Senate, on the 24th, to take up the bill to place Gen. Grant upon the retired list of the army, but Mr. Vest, of Missouri, objected. Mr. Logan then moved to lay aside all prior orders and consider this bill. After a somewhat protracted debate the motion was defeated—yeas, 25; nays, 28. Mr. Edmunds' Geneva Award bill was reported adversely by the Judiciary Committee, and a substitute proposed similar in terms to that reported last session. The Indian Land bill came up, and it was agreed to extend its provisions to twenty-nine tribes on ceded lands in Indian Territory. In the House, Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, introduced a bill to retire Col. Thomas L. Crittenden, with the rank and pay of Brigadier General. Mr. Young, of Tennessee, proposed the appointment of a commission to examine and report on the adulteration of food. Mr. Gillette, of Iowa, offered a bill for the construction of a double-track railroad from New York to Council Bluffs. Mr. Acklen, of Louisiana, introduced a bill revising the list of duties on sugar. Several bills were reported by committees, and placed on the calendar. Mr. Cox reported a substitute for the Apportionment bill, providing for 301 Representatives. The House then went into committee of the whole on the postoffice appropriation, which sets aside $40,760,437.

In the United States Senate, David Davis reported favorably the Chicago Lake-front bill on the morning of Tuesday, Jan. 25, and gave notice that on Friday he would ask its consideration. Mr. Logan called up the bill to retire Gen. Grant. The vote thereon stood 25 yeas to 28 nays, Lamar and Davis voting with the Republicans. A bill was passed to pay the additional expense of the tenth census. The Indian Land bill was debated at some length, decided objection being made to conferring citizenship on the red men. David Davis introduced a bill to pension Justices of the Supreme Court who may become permanently disabled. The House passed an appropriation of $30,000 for a monument in commemoration of the battle of Saratoga. The postoffice appropriation was taken up in committee of the whole, and amended to provide that safety-heaters, saws and axes shall be carried in mail cars, and the Australian colonies shall be reimbursed in part for the cost of the British closed mails on the overland route. The bill then passed. The House of Representatives concurred in the Senate amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill. A majority of the House Committee on Elections made a report favoring the unseating of Martin (Republican) as the member from the First North Carolina district and of giving the seat to Yeates (Democrat). A minority report was also presented. The joint bill for counting the electoral vote came up, when the Republicans forced an adjournment.

A favorable report was made on the bill in reference to quartermaster stores furnished the forces of Gen. Lew Wallace during the Morgan raid in Indiana and Ohio to the Senate on Wednesday, Jan. 26. Mr. Ingalls introduced a resolution providing for the counting of the electoral vote in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday, Feb. 9, at noon. The resolution provides that "two persons shall be appointed tellers, on the part of the Senate, to make a list of votes for President and Vice President as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the State vote, which shall be entered on the journals, such entry to be a sufficient declaration thereof." The Senate spent considerable time in discussing the bill providing for conferring land on the Indians in severalty. Hoar's amendment to confer the right of citizenship on the Indians was rejected by a vote of 29 to 12. There was a long and acrimonious discussion between Plumb on one side and Hoar and Dawes on the other side as to how Massachusetts disposed of its Indians about 200 years ago. The pensions appropriation was reported, and the Senate went into executive session, when the President nominated ex-Senator Stanley Matthews for the vacancy on the Supreme Bench caused by the retirement of Justice Swayne. The nomination was referred to the Judiciary Committee. The House passed a bill granting Carr lake to the city of Council Bluffs. The resolution looking toward the establishment of a telegraphic system was favorably reported. By a strictly party vote the Morgan electoral resolution was taken up, but the Republicans filibustered until an adjournment was effected.

Mr. Dawes presented in the Senate, on the 27th ult., the petition of 50,000 citizens, praying for a full observance of the treaties made with the Indian tribes. Bills for public buildings at Quincy, Ill., and Minneapolis were reported favorably. Mr. Beck spoke for an hour in advocacy of his resolution for free ships, to which Mr. Blaine replied that from the inception of the war Congress had done nothing to uphold the navigation interests of the United States. The Naval Appropriation bill, which sets aside $14,720,787, was passed. Bills were also passed for the sale of a portion of the Leavenworth military reservation, to authorize the construction of a railway bridge across Niagara river, and to establish an assay office in St. Louis. The House indulged in an excited debate on the North Carolina contested seat of Yeates vs. Martin, and, on a demand for the previous question the Republicans refused to vote, breaking the quorum.

The Real Old Kirk.

A well-known and popular Scotch clergyman was some years ago favored with a visit of some of his congregation. Being of an hospitable disposition, and desirous of showing them every attention, he requested them to partake of some refreshment. Proceeding to the sideboard, he took out a bottle of brandy, and, holding it up to the light, remarked —"This will not do, it's the Free Kirk —hot and fiery; we'll put it back again." The next bottle he took up happened to be filled with vinegar cordial. It was replaced with the remark—"That is like the U. P. body—if it does little guid, it can do little ill." At last a bottle of whisky was produced, with the exclamation—"We're a' richt noo! Here's the real Auld Kirk o' Scotland; sit doon and make yoursel's comfortable."

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

[New York Telegram to the Chicago Tribune.]

Various reports have been recently published throughout the country concerning the construction of an entirely new and direct line of railroad from New York to Chicago by an independent and newly-organized corporation. While these reports have not been without foundation in fact, they have been incomplete in detail and misleading in statements. A visit to the offices of the Continental Railway Company, situated at No. 5 Cortlandt street, resulted in the procuring of the first authentic statement of facts which has yet been made. The Continental Railway Company is a corporation existing under special charters granted by the Legislatures of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Iowa, and under general charters from the States of Ohio and Indiana, granting authority to build a continuous line of railway from the Hudson river, opposite New York, to the Mississippi river, opposite Omaha, with extensions connecting Chicago and St. Louis with the East. This line has been surveyed the entire length, and several millions of dollars have been spent in the actual work of grading. Arrangements have already been made to put 10,000 men at work as soon as the weather will permit in the spring. It is stated by the officers of the company that ample funds are at their command to construct the road and equip it in the most complete manner. There is to be a double track the entire distance of the heaviest steel rails of English manufacture. This route between New York city and Chicago, according to the surveys, does not vary fifteen miles in the entire distance from a straight geographical line. The distance between these two points is 781 miles, or 129 miles shorter than the shortest route now in operation. By the Pennsylvania railroad and its connections the distance to Chicago is 914 miles; by the New York Central and the Lake Shore, 930 miles; by the New York Central and Great Western of Canada, 961 miles. Beside being the most direct route to the West, the elevations will be less than those of any other road, not exceeding forty feet to the mile at any point. The survey strikes the Delaware river at Belvidere, and the Allegheny at Mahoning, Pa. The Pennsylvania State line is crossed at New Castle, and thence the projected road runs to Akron, New London, Tiffin, Fort Wayne, Ind., Rensselaer, and Chicago. The most difficult engineering obstacle to be met with on the line is the crossing of the Delaware river, where a pier bridge is to be constructed 500 feet high. It is estimated that this road will be completed and in operation two years from next spring. A large staff of engineers will be distributed along the line of the road early in the spring to complete their labors. They will be followed by trains with iron and supplies. The entire work will thus be pushed forward with the utmost expedition.

It thus appears probable that the public will soon be provided with a system of cheap transportation by the construction of a new and continuous line of railway in a direct line from New York to Chicago, with low grades and light curves, built in the most substantial manner, with abundant appurtenances and facilities, operated in the interest of commerce and as the benefit of the people requires.

Youthful Criminals.

A New York Herald reporter visited the Jefferson Market and Tombs prisons, in that city, where youthful offenders against the law are detained. Warden McDermott informed him that their average age is from twelve to sixteen years, but sometimes they are as young as eight. One boy of fourteen was sentenced for twenty days, and his crime was stealing a pair of socks. The weather was bitter cold, and it was clearly evident that the child took them to keep from perishing with the cold. One of the boys, about thirteen years of age, said he had been arrested for stealing a zinc sign, which was insecurely fastened at the doorway of a large building. He admitted that he had been with several other boys, who started away with it, but on discovery had dropped it. This boy did not run away, and was arrested. His father went to a lawyer to secure his services for his defense, and was told that for $30 he could get the boy acquitted. The father was very poor, but in the belief that his son was innocent he pawned a number of articles, and managed to scrape together the requisite $30, which he handed to the lawyer. The latter, just before the trial, told the father it would be necessary for him to have $10 in order to secure the boy's acquittal, and that the $30 paid was simply his fee for legal services. The father had no means of raising the additional $10, and the boy got thirty days in prison, while the Toombs lawyer got $30 of the poor father.

One cell was occupied by a mere child of ten years. Unlike the cells in the Jefferson Market Prison, which are used for a like purpose, these cells in the Tombs are dark, dismal, and repulsive. The corridor in the part now under notice is narrow, low, and dingy, and the whole aspect of the place as repellant as Murderers' Row on the other side of the prison.

"What're you here for?" was asked of a boy in a cell.

"Stealing."

"What did you steal?"

"A pocketbook."

"How much money was in it?"

"Dollar and thirty cents."

"Didn't you know that you would be sent to prison if you stole it?"

"No, sir."

The boy was apparently of average intelligence, but very pale and thin in flesh. He both looked and spoke as if he were in ill health, and his appearance did not indicate more than eight years of age. Close questioning developed the statement that he had never stolen anything before, and that he went to church and attended school. And yet this mere child was incarcerated in this gloomy cell just as were adult murderers in the other side of the prison.

A mysterious star, called the Pilgrim, which was observed in 945, 1264 and 1572, is expected by astronomers to appear before long. It was described in 1572 as brighter than Jupiter, and "such was its brilliancy that persons were able to detect it at noon in a clear sky, and at night when the sky was so overcast as to hide all other stars." If it appears it will probably be visible for several weeks in the constellation of Cassiopeia.

THE CHINAMAN AT TABLE.

How the Weak-Headed Are Certain to Get Very Drunk.

From a paper by Mrs. J. H. Siddons on "John Chinaman at Home," the following is taken:

Desirous of knowing something of their social practices, I accepted an invitation to a wine party given by one of my friends at his private lodgings, and there I had a fair specimen of the Chinese drinking faculty. As Shakespeare's "Iago" has it (slightly altered), "Your Dane, your Almaine, your swag-bellied Hollander, and even your Englishmen, 'so potent in potting,' are nothing to your Chinamen!" It is common, at the table, to test the faculty of the several guests for holding a large quantity of liquor by calling upon each in his turn to make an impromptu couplet upon some given subject, or quote from the classics certain phrases containing some word agreed upon, or throw dice, or drop the chopsticks in certain specified ways into a bowl—the failure in any of those devices being a fine of so many cups of wine. The devices come under the general name of "Wine-pleasure rules." As impromptu rhymesters the Chinese are inimitable, the subjects often being a satire upon some person or persons present, but these are fleeting things of which no record is kept. It is otherwise with the wine songs consecrated to the Bacchus of the land. Here are attempted translations of one or two, in the metre in which the original occur. The two first lines will give an idea of the rhythm of the original:

"Kiwai, hwo lo, kiwai hwo lo
Jo yao kiwai hwo, skin kiwai hwo."

Come, merry be!
A joyous song, a merry glee!
If you wish to happy be,
Then be happy just as me!
Flowers you have and wine so cheery,
And the moon's sweet, softened looks,
And the running, limpid brooks;
Want you more? There are your books!
Though you've work, and hard it be,
Taxing mind's activity,
Sure you can a moment seize
To devote to joyous ease!
In the twinkling of an eye
Light and dark before you fly,
Morn is hardly seen to rise
Ere the night has shut its eyes,
Days and months like winds fly fast;
Nothing in this world can last.
Rich you are with rising sun,
In poverty ere day is done.
So the river in a glance
Swells the ocean's wide expanse.
Fallen virtue, that's your one;
All Heaven smiles on those that see!
If a draught, a taste, gives pleasure,
Sure there's more in Nature's treasure,
Now it's broken, then it's mended;
Bear it calmly, soon it's ended.
Hunger's but a fleeting pain.
Cold? You'll soon be warm again!
Is grief the burden of men's song?
I but laugh the whole day long.

Challenged by one of the guests (it was a party of six) to give some idea of Chinese poetry that was not Anacreontic, our host repeated, in his own language, the following on self-love. It will serve to convey an idea of Chinese ethics. Passionately fond of money, greedy of gain, as they are in practice, the Celestials do not altogether disregard the teachings of the great philosopher, Koon-foot-zu, whom the Jesuits Latinized into "Confucius." The subjoined lines will show that a love of virtue prevails and is associated with verse, a style of composition to which the Chinese are partial:

"Love yourself!" Where can you find
No love of self in all mankind?
Be your work in wood or steel,
Put your shoulder to the wheel!
Waste no time in idly sitting,
Or you'll see before you flitting
All the means you have in store,
All the hopes you had before.
While cold famine, grim and gaunt,
With dread death your household haunt.
To let your business idly lie,
To cringe, to fawn, to sponge and sigh
For wealth and power—not work, but play,
Incur bad debts—and never pay—
Is not the love of self I mean.
Another's horse I will not ride,
I sigh not for my neighbor's bride.
Another blames me all in vain,
I ne'er retort or blame again;
Let others censure, blame or swear,
I simply laugh and grin and bear.
So join with me, while day is long,
On "Love of self!" a joyous song.

It would be a poor compliment to John Chinaman to leave it to be inferred that he has only learned to drink wine a la Anglaise. His adoption of European practices is quite a furore with him. In 1840 he used nothing but the Sedan chair to carry him about the town in which he lived; but six years ago there were nearly 400 four-wheeled carriages in the city of Shanghai alone! The old junk has been superseded by the steamer, and in many other respects "Excelsior" has become the motto of the child of the Middle Kingdom.

Mr. Sassoon, of Belgravia Square, London, stables his horses in the topmost story of his house, and carries them up and down on an elevator. The purpose is to save the cost of ground, which is valuable in that fashionable neighborhood.

POLITICAL NOTES.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, Mr. Whitelaw Reid's candidate for the New York Senatorship, wasn't so much as named in the caucus. Yet Mr. Reid claims to be the personal organ of the President-elect.

IT was very kind in the Michigan Legislature, and characteristic of Legislatures generally, that, having refused to give ex-Gov. Bagley the Senatorship which he sought from it, it joins heartily in a recommendation to Garfield that he be given a Cabinet place, which he doesn't seek from anybody. It is a very cheap way of disposing of a man's ambition. Garfield is probably not at all concerned about Michigan, agreeing with Conkling, at the Chicago Convention, that any Republican can carry that State.—Chicago Times.

EVERYONE now, in speaking of the next administration, says a Washington correspondent, talks of it as if Mr. Blaine were to be President. It is common to hear men talk of the fine administration Blaine is to give the country. A prominent Democratic lawyer of this city, who has been closely allied with Mr. Tilden, said this morning: "I am glad Blaine is going into the new Cabinet. He is a big, brainy, active man. An administration with him at its head will be noted for its incisive aggressiveness and brilliant dash. It will also be a liberal administration, one that will look earnestly toward building up the real interests of the country. If the people of one section of the country need a canal or railroad, Blaine will say to them: 'Build it and you shall have all the money you need to help you out.'"

ALL the indications are, says a New York letter, that the same old syndicate that managed Grant's tour about the world and trained him for the nomination which he failed to get, have him still in hand for 1884. Who knows but that Tilden and Grant may be the contestants then? Mr. Tilden has wonderfully improved in health. He is living quietly, exercising freely, eating heartily of brain food, and is in the hands of a masseur, whose manipulation, so rejuvenating to the old man, has given strength to the veteran statesman, and almost made of him a new man physically. In his bucolic life at Greystone there is repose, strength and longevity. It goes without saying that he knows better how to conduct a Presidential campaign than any man in America, and if he had been at the head in the last contest there would have been no such blunders as Democrats now grieve over.

PRESIDENT HAYES has lost that small modicum of "sand" which was in his gizzard when he went to Washington. He has become actually afraid of Conkling, and, in the matter of appointments for the Senator's section of the country, "lets 'I dare not' wait upon 'I would,' like the old cat in the adage." For instance, he was aching to name a successor to District Attorney Woodford, of New York. An appointment could hardly be suggested that would not be an improvement upon this person, yet Mr. Hayes lets it lapse with the full knowledge that the appointment in such case would be made temporarily by the Justice of the Supreme Court for the New York circuit, who is a cordial friend of Senator Conkling. Justice Hunt has, of course, appointed Woodford, and Hayes is solacing himself by copious draughts of crab-apple cider, and by vaporings of what he will do to break down the Conkling machine in New York. Meantime the victorious Senator treats the Ohio little man with the utmost contempt.

THE negro voters are determined to have something of the plunder of the Republican party or quit its membership, but white Republicans, never dreaming of giving the negroes an office themselves, swear themselves black in the face because Southern Democrats will not do so. In the negro interest, Bruce, of Mississippi, is being pushed for Secretary of the Navy, but Garfield doesn't consider his name seriously for a single moment. Rainey, of South Carolina, was named by the Republican caucus for Clerk of the House of Representatives, when, the Democrats being in the majority, the act was a mere compliment. Now that the party is in the majority, it will no longer think of Rainey in connection with so honorable and lucrative a place. In St. Louis, J. Milton Turner, who was honored with an office, that of Minister to Liberia, a place where no white man in his senses would voluntarily go, spoke the other night of the neglect of the colored folks of Missouri when the spoils were passed round. He declared that "out of 2,000 public offices distributed in the State by the President of the United States, there were no negro Postmasters, Collectors of Customs, Surveyors of Ports, etc.; and that out of 200 appointments within the patronage of the St. Louis postoffice and several hundred made by the Mayor of St. Louis no negro had been appointed chief of an important department, created a policeman, Comptroller, Assessor of Water Rates, etc. The negroes held the balance of power here, and proposed at the spring elections to make their strength felt." Garfield told some negroes, the other day, that they mustn't think of themselves as different from other Americans, or demand anything for themselves as a class. Garfield forgets that nature has made it impossible to class a negro with a white man, and the negro himself would be better pleased with an office or two than with all the fine talk the gentleman at Mentor can give him.

MR. FRANK HISCOCK, member of Congress from the Twenty-fifth New York district, is a candidate for the Speakership of the next House. He has always been classed as an anti-Conkling Republican, but in order to strengthen his chances of success he recently called upon Senator Conkling with a view of forming an alliance. The latter, we are told, received his visitor with more than his usual haughtiness. He raised his form to his full height as he looked Hiscock full in the face and declaimed after the fashion of a proud political potentate who does not lightly grant favors to men who have been lacking in personal loyalty. Mr. Hiscock began by bluntly saying that he wanted Mr. Conkling's support in his canvass for the Speakership, frankly saying that he did not believe that he could succeed without his help. He understood the full value of the service he was asking, and subscribed fully to whatever reasonable terms might be demanded for an alliance. Said Mr. Conkling, slowly and impressively: "Mr. Hiscock, you ask me for my support for the Speakership. Now, my dear sir, I ask, in advance, what kind of a man I am supporting. There are in this sad vale of tears two kinds of Republicans. If you belong to a certain class, who are beneath any language, however contemptuous, you must not look to me. By ——, sir, if there is any one thing upon which I pride myself, it is the fact that I am a Republican—a stalwart Republican, if you please. There is no milk-and-water business here, no sniveling hypocrisy or selfish cant. To all loyal Republicans I am a friend; to the insipid make-believe Republicans, who make an endless practice of being superior to their wicked party associates, I am a sworn, unshrinking, tireless enemy." Mr. Hiscock took this lecture very quietly, and then asked, in a quiet fashion, what sort of a pledge Mr. Conkling would require from him to satisfy him upon the question of personal loyalty. Mr. Conkling replied in a still more emphatic manner: "It is a subject that will take some time for me to consider. I am free to say that I like you. You have never, to my knowledge, played the sneak or hypocrite; but, by ——, if you were my own father or my own brother I would want to know in advance just how you stood on one or two vital things before you could have my support. I tell you, sir, it is a matter far beyond any personal feeling. I should want you to be able to satisfy me that you are loyal to the stalwart element of the Republican party, and that you have no sympathy with the treacherous, traitorous, mendacious, hypocritical conspirators who are now seeking to betray the coming President into a contemptible disregard of the men who made him to-day all that he is. By ——! sir," said Mr. Conkling, with increased fire and energy, "there's going to be in future a square line of action drawn. The men who carried the last campaign on their shoulders, and who secured a hard-earned victory, are men who will not be overlooked. The same power that made can again undo. So when you come to me to ask my support you must first be certain where you stand. At the present time, as well as for the future, the loyal, stalwart Republicans do not propose to allow the cunning, sneaking, hypocritical, feather-headed Ohio breed of milk-and-water men to rule. We have submitted quietly, believing that relief would come in the natural order of things."

Proper Names.

Before the reign of Elizabeth, English names were few, simple, short and familiar. If a person had a new name of some length it was very sure to be shortened or nicked. In ordinary life few names were heard but Tom, Dick, Harry, Hal, Jack, Rob, Mob, Dob, Phip, Nancy, and similar abbreviations. But in the year 1560 an event occurred which in a few years changed half the names in England. The Bible was published in the English language, and one copy of the same, if no more, was soon to be found in each parish, perhaps chained to a desk in the church. Before that time, the English Bible was a forbidden book, and if a family had a copy, it was kept most carefully hidden, and never read except with great precautions. The Bible was sometimes fastened under the lid of a stool, and, if danger threatened, the book was concealed by closing the lid. Sometimes the odious detective, when he entered, would be invited to take a seat on that very stool.

If you wish to make a book universally desired, you have only to put the ban of the law upon it. In 1558, Elizabeth became Queen of England, and soon after this passionately loved and long-forbidden book was spread all over the kingdom. People read it as it had never been read before, and has never been read since. Peasants in remote parishes may be said in the most literal sense to have searched the scriptures; they ransacked them from Genesis to Revelations, and particularly the chapters containing little more than lists of names. People in general regarded every word and syllable even of the English translation as the veritable language of Jehovah. They soon began to name their children from it. The old English names rapidly went out of fashion, and Bible names succeeded them. Although the new fashion lasted little more than two generations, some of the old names never returned. Hamlet, for instance, was common in Shakspeare's day. Amice, Avis, Colet, Sibyl, Dinah, and many others are now scarcely known. Even Barbara, with its nick-name of Bab, Dorothy and Dolly, Olive and Olivia, Cecilia and Cicely, are no longer the favorites they once were.

Some of the old forgotten names were no great loss. We read in an ancient parish register of a certain "Original Bellamy," who had a son named Original, and his son was also named Original. The discovery of this entry led to that of other Originals of the same century. There was a John Babington in 1550 who gave his son and heir the name of Original.

Many parents, it appears, have given their children something ridiculous in the way of a name. Mr. Bardsley copies from the London directory the following, all of which must have been given with deliberate intent to fasten a joke upon the unfortunate children: Cannon Ball, Dunn Brown, Friend Bottle, River Jordan, Jolly Death and Sudden Death. A "Mr. Sudden Death" appeared as a witness in a London trial about two years ago. In this country we have had odd names like the following: America Sparrow and America C. Tabb. A certain Robert New christened his two sons Nothing and Something. We have had also Christmas Carol, Pepper Mixer, Opportunity Hopper, China Ware, Lemon Peel, Salt Cod and Always Gentle.

A CERTAIN gentleman must have been very proud of his wife when he described her as "beautiful, dutiful, youthful and an armful."

FARM NOTES.

ENGLISH dairymen say that high grade shorthorn cows when dried off fatten more rapidly with less food according to their size than any other dairy breed, and their beef is of superior quality, bringing a top price in the market.

THERE is no better soil in the world for potatoes than solid sward land. We find from our experience that the best seed is cut down to two eyes, thus producing few vines, but large vegetables. Our potatoes, Rose and Hebron, from such cuttings, were very large this year. They were, however, very crooked. This, perhaps, was caused by the uneven distribution of the manure.

WHEN corn is planted in drills, the drills should run north and south, it is reasonably said. In this case the eastern part of the corn receives the morning sun, the western the afternoon sun. Were the rows to run east and west, the north side of the rows would receive sunshine only at midday. To what extent the crop is affected by the direction of the rows is a fit subject for experiment.

WE have been looking over a great number of experiments with different kinds of concentrated fertilizers upon corn. The conclusion that must be drawn is, that while bone has shown the best effects in a majority of instances, in many others it does not appear to have produced any appreciable effect. We can only repeat what we have already said many times, that this is a question which each farmer, by careful observation and experiment, must determine for himself.—Rural New Yorker.

DUCKS hatch their own eggs rather better than hens. The hen, says a good authority, is not calculated for a longer period than the usual three weeks (except that most inveterate of sitters, the Brahma). For the first day or two the young of any birds should be kept quiet, and quietude encouraged throughout. If observed closely the hen that steals her nest and rears all her chicks will be found to possess quiet and regular habits and will not fatigue her young unnecessarily.

TREATMENT OF STRAY CATTLE.—The lawful method of treating stray, trespassing animals is to take them into custody and hold them for twenty-four hours, notifying the owners, if they are known, of the detention. If the animals are not claimed at the end of this time, they are to be driven to the public pound and placed in charge of the pound-keeper, who holds them for a reasonable time, and then advertises them for sale. The times of detention are fixed by statue or by by-laws of the townships or counties, and the pound-keepers are usually provided with copies of these laws for their guidance.

THE best time, says a writer in the Prairie Farmer, to remove evergreens is undoubtedly in the spring, just as the terminal buds are opening. They may be removed safely until they have grown three inches. The next best time is in the latter part of the summer, or just before the fall rains set in. It is true, however, theoretically, that they may be safely removed at any time of the year when the ground is not frozen, and practically true if extreme care is taken. Our opinion is that they are removed with least loss in the spring, as we have stated. As to mulch, it makes really little difference what the material is, so it will not blow away or scatter noxious weeds.

HOW TO KEEP BUTTER.—A correspondent says: "I learned one or two things about butter last spring. One of them is, that butter of all kinds should either be stiff and set away in a cool place, or, if not made so stiff, should be put in gallon or half-gallon jars, and either sealed up or thick paper (old letter paper will do) brushed over with the white of an egg fastened securely over the top. Before sealing them up, however, it is well to put about half a teacup of sugar over the top of each, but if made thick enough they will not need it. In canning fruit this should always be done, as it prevents them from moulding, provided they are not moved and jolted around."

FARMERS' GARDENS.—As a general rule farmers do not provide themselves with good gardens, at least not as good as they should. The excuse for this neglect is generally the same with all of them—they have not the time to bestow on them, and yet it may safely be asserted that an acre of ground appropriated to a garden, will be more profitable to the farmer than any other ten acres on the farm. The interests of the farmer, the comforts of his family, the good condition and health of his whole household, require such a garden on every farm in the country, and it should be a garden, not a mere excuse for one, a mere weed patch. It should be one so managed and arranged that every vegetable of a wholesome quality for human food, should be raised in it in plentifulness and at the earliest season. After a winter's diet on generally solid food, the human constitution requires the deterging operations of free vegetable diet.

CRIB BITING.—Crib biting, says the Western Rural, is a habit resulting from many causes, restraint put on the horse, by way of strapping the neck, etc., are more or less apt to produce other permanent injury; when the restraint is removed he will crib again. It has been suggested to cover the manger and woodwork within his reach with sheet-iron, or with fresh sheepskin, which may be smeared with aloes, but these means are of avail only while the horse stands in the stall. The process of rasping the teeth, as suggested to you, is simply preposterous. If the horse's front teeth really were too long, how could he then get the teeth or molars together to chew the food? All the teeth of the month, when not deviating from their normal condition, are worn equally, and by rasping the surface of the front teeth, the consequence will be that the lower teeth will not meet with the upper teeth, which will interfere with his ability to properly grasp his food from the manger, and will make it impossible for him to bite off the grass, and withal he will continue his habit of cribbing.

CORN TRIAL BY FARMERS.—In a series of seventeen corn crops raised in Saline County, Missouri, by farmers competing for a Grange premium of $200 for the largest yield, it appears that twelve crops out of the seventeen gave an average yield of over 100 bushels per acre, and this not for one acre only but for an area of ten acres in each case. Nothing could more clearly show the progress of good farming than this fact. When one man gets a yield of 100 bushels or over from a single acre it is not very remarkable, because it is getting to be of frequent occurrence. But when a dozen men, each cultivating a field of ten acres, get a product of over 100 bushels per acre for the whole area it may well attract attention. If twelve fields, aggregating 120 acres, are made to produce 12,000 bushels of grain per annum, together with its 500 tons of clover, what would the yield of the country amount to at the same rate of production, and how much longer shall we remain satisfied with thirty bushels per acre as an average yield for the whole country? If the above competition is a fair sample of granger enterprise and success, then we say let the patrons of husbandry go ahead, and let the farmers' clubs show the same spirit of progress. Then, indeed, the new decade and the croakers and doubters will pass away to join the bats and the owls of the buried epoch.—Experiment Record.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THURSDAY, Jan. 20.—SENATE.—Several hours were wasted in discussing Comstock's bill for removing disabilities of coverture, after which the matter was recommitted. Numerous resolutions were introduced. A bill was introduced to shorten the time by one month for the killing of quails and pheasants. Numerously-signed petitions were presented praying for the submission of a constitutional amendment for the ratification of the people giving the ballot to women. During the afternoon session Senator Banks directed an inquiry into the reasons for the nonfulfillment of the law by the Coal-Oil Inspector. The Committee on Claims was instructed to report upon the feasibility of making the Auditor, Treasurer and Secretary of State a Board of Claims to pass upon all claims against the State. Senator Spann introduced a bill providing a school or home for indigent children; and Senator Poindexter presented a temperance bill stipulating a $200 license for the sale of liquors, the money thus obtained to be appropriated toward the erection and maintenance of an inebriate asylum. Dealers are also made responsible for damages received from the sale of their liquors. Senator Bentley introduced a bill repealing the Railroad Whistling act, and making provision that the engines shall sound the whistle twice and ring the bell continuously until the crossing is passed. The bill is patterned after the Ohio law, with the same signals in use on the Wabash, Bee line and Pan-Handle roads.

HOUSE.—The House occupied the greater part of the morning session in debate upon the rate of interest. The Judiciary Committee submitted a majority report recommending that Buskirk's bill, limiting the legal rate of interest to 6 per cent., should lie upon the table, but the minority report recommending the adoption of the bill was accepted by a vote of 59 to 34. After considerable debate the bill was recommitted by nearly the same vote on the ground that not sufficient consideration had been given other features of the bill. Neither vote upon the subject was partisan. The State Bar Association's bill for submitting the constitutional amendments to a popular vote was reported upon favorably by the Judiciary Committee and the 22d of February agreed upon as the date of election. The bill passed, ayes, 74; noes, 23. Mr. McIntosh's resolution declaring it unlawful and unconstitutional for the General Assembly to pass an apportionment bill until the existing act had been in operation six years was laid on the table by a strict party vote—ayes, 51; noes, 36.

FRIDAY, Jan. 21.—SENATE.—The Senate today designated next Friday for memorial addresses and resolutions relative to the late Gov. Williams. Senator Wilson introduced a bill empowering the Governor to make all appointments now the special province of the Legislature, said appointments to be divided equally between the two political factions. Senator Shaffer offered a bill separating the Soldiers' Orphans' Home and the Institution for Feeble-Minded Children. The resubmission of the constitutional amendments and Brown's bill for the Constitutional Convention went over until Tuesday. The bill appropriating $16,000 for the payment of the Indiana Legion claims passed. A select committee of five, consisting of Senators Yancey, Wilson, Brown, Spann and Foster, was appointed, to whom all petitions in favor of woman suffrage are to be reported.

HOUSE.—Forty new bills were introduced, including one providing for electing the electors for President and Vice President, and repealing the present law requiring appointment of District Marshals to collect the vote. A committee was instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the number of judicial circuits in the State, and a resolution passed recommending Congress to pension all Mexican veterans except those who had not accepted the result of the War of the Rebellion, and had failed to have their political disabilities removed by act of Congress. Representative Cotton introduced a bill amending the present act so as to debar County Commissioners from levying a tax for township purposes exceeding 3 cents on the $100 for any one year in any county having a voting population of over 20,000, provided also that the township tax shall not exceed 1 cent on the $100 valuation. Bills were presented, allowing women to hold any school offices in Indiana, and for the taxation of both mortgages and judgment on foreclosure of mortgage, and to adjust the taxation between parties to such mortgages.

SATURDAY, Jan. 22.—The Senate was not in session. The House passed a bill amending the charter of Evansville, and passed a resolution to in the future hold but one continuous session per day, to give the committees time for work. The bill concerning allowances of claims against decedants' estates passed. Adjournment until Monday afternoon followed. During the morning session the proceedings were interrupted by the appearance of Senator Voorhees on the floor, he having stopped to pay the Legislature a visit while en route back to Washington from the funeral of Judge Paterson at Terre Haute. On motion of Mr. Kenner (Republican), Senator Voorhees was received with great ceremony, and, in response to an invitation, addressed the House in a few well-rounded periods, in thanks for the flattering reception.

MONDAY, Jan. 24.—SENATE.—Senator Langdon introduced a resolution expressing the opinion that the management of the State prisons should be consolidated under one board. Referred. The Committee on Revision and Codification reported a number of new bills, and the establishment of a State Board of Health was made the special order for to-morrow. A number of petitions were received, asking the establishment of schools for dependent children. Senator Vogles introduced a bill virtually doing away with what is called the "Provoke law," and Senator Spann presented one providing for the employment of short-hand reporters for all Circuit Courts in counties of over 50,000 inhabitants, or districts of over 100,000 inhabitants, the salary to be $18 per week when service is rendered. Senator Kahlo's bill regulating charges by sleeping-car companies was read for the first time.

HOUSE.—The House held an afternoon session, occupying the principal time with introducing and reading bills prepared by the Codification Committee, and reported by the Revision Committee. The majority of them referred to pleading and practice, and chief among them was the bill to abolish the Assessor in cities and towns, and transfer his duties to the Township Assessor. A majority of the Committee on Education reported favorably on the passing of the Compulsory Education bill, and the minority reported adversely. The latter was voted down by 75 to 15, and the bill made the special order for Feb. 2. At the time of the adjournment the House was considering the report of the Committee on Claims recommending the payment of principal and interest of the Tipton county swamp-land claims. Representative Moody presented a petition from the Auburn Soldiers' Association favoring the removal of the corner-stone of the State House for depositing underneath appropriate military memorials.

TUESDAY, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—The Committee on Executive Appointments asked further time and was given until the 28th. A concurrent resolution was adopted directing investigation of the Soldier's Orphans' Home. The re-submission of the constitutional amendments, after some discussion, was made the special order for Wednesday. The House bill on the same subject went to the Judiciary Committee. Comstock's bill providing for the establishment of a school for pauper children passed unanimously. So did Chapman's bill for the organization of water-works companies. During the day Senator Brown created a breeze by charging that the Republicans were purposely delaying a confirmation of Gray's appointments until Feb. 1, when the offices would become vacant by limitation. To allay his vehemence the committee promised to report on the date as above.

HOUSE.—The question of paying the 18-year-old swamp-land claims of Tipton county, involving $50,000, came up before the House again to-day and was recommitted for further investigation especially relative to the demand for interest. Gov. Porter presented a communication inclosing and commending a letter from Prof. Campbell on the relation of the United States geodetic survey to the drainage of Indiana swamp lands, in which he holds that all the main water courses are lower than the level swamp land, therefore, making it possible to reclaim the latter. A bill of 286 sections from the codification committees, thoroughly classifying the laws on the assessment and collection of taxes, was introduced. All the bills heretofore presented from this committee were advanced one stage and referred. The bills requiring voters to pay their poll tax before exercising the franchise, and precluding habitual drunkards, confirmed criminals and persons of insane parentage from marrying, were indefinitely postponed. The report of the committee recommending a bill creating a Police Judge was approved, and the House agreed with the Senate in ordering an investigation of the management of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home and Institute for Feeble-Minded Children. Senator Kahlo's bill to regulate the charges of sleeping-car companies provides that they shall not charge more than $1 for a berth, and $2 for a section for any distance less than 200 miles. Over this distance they shall be entitled to charge ½ cent per mile for berths and 1 cent for sections. Senator Kahlo has also introduced a bill to fix passenger fares at the uniform rate of 3 cents per mile.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 26.—SENATE.—The Senate passed a joint resolution instructing the Senators and Representatives in Congress to labor for the repeal of so much of the acts of Congress as confer especial jurisdiction upon the Circuit and District Courts of the United States of suits by and against national banks, resident of a State, without regard to the amount involved in such suit. The bill establishing a State Board of Health came up, and was engrossed after tedious discussion. It provides for a board of seven members, six to be appointed by the Governor, with consent of the Senate, and a Secretary elected by the board, who shall hold office four years, the term of one-half of the members to expire every alternate two years. It also provides a complete system of gathering statistics, and makes the State Board of Health the center of the system, giving it supervision of the registration of the births, deaths, and marriages, and provides for the collection of statistics through county, city, and township officers, and defines their duty, with certain powers in the investigation of an epidemic or unusual outbreak of disease in any part of the State. Mr. Poindexter's bill permitting the formation of companies to dredge the Ohio river at certain points passed unanimously; also Mr. Woolen's bill, making it a misdemeanor to buy or sell votes at an election. The first-named bill is a scheme to permit Angus Dean, of New Albany, to obtain from Congress the privilege of improving the Ohio river opposite Madison or New Albany in low water, to test the feasibility of a plan which he has invented for river improvement.

HOUSE.—The House had the usual wrangle over the purchase of Revised Statutes by the State Librarian for use of Legislators. Several hours were spent in advancing bills to second reading. Five new bills were introduced, among them the proposed consolidation of the blind, deaf and dumb, and insane under one board of management. The Senate resolution directing an investigation of the Coal-Oil Inspector was concurred in and an invitation was accepted to visit Purdue University, near Lafayette, by special train Tuesday next. Representative Robinson, of Decatur, introduced a bill making six months' failure of a husband to support his wife sufficient grounds for divorce. The concurrent resolution petitioning Congress to pass a law preventing the spread of contagious diseases among domestic animals was passed, and also the bill enabling manufacturing and mining companies from other States to purchase, hold and convey real estate in this state.

THURSDAY, Jan. 27.—SENATE.—A dry session of the Senate took place, owing to the absence of members on committee duty. Bills were passed: Providing for recording land patents issued by the Governor; prohibiting of pool-selling, and reducing the number of peace Justices to three in each township, with one additional for an incorporated city. The resolution to meet in joint session Wednesday next to elect Prison Directors was referred to the Prison Committee.

HOUSE.—The House held a business session, and accomplished a great deal of necessary routine work. A large number of bills were summarily disposed of by indefinite postponement. The claim of Benton county for prosecuting James L. McCullough for murder, although favorably reported upon, was practically killed by a decisive vote, upon the general ground that it would establish a dangerous precedent. The bill increasing the per diem of the Speaker to $8 was rejected, and the bill fixing the liabilities of employers for injuries to employes went to the Judiciary. A strong attempt was made to repeal the law creating a Coal Oil Inspector, as recommended by a minority report, but the report was rejected. It was agreed, however, that amendments were needful to the existing law, the chief objection against which comes from the border counties, who assert that owing to its restrictions oils which can be purchased in Illinois at 11 cents per gallon, cost 16 in this State. A compromise medical bill, agreed upon by all the medical men in the House, came from the special committee, and was ordered printed. Among the new bills introduced from the Codification Committee was one grouping together all the laws relative to holding property by married women, and one making a general codification of the laws relative to mechanics' lien, in which there were also a number of new features simplifying the methods by which persons supplying material for buildings can secure payment. A committee, headed by Representative Mason, was directed to investigate the management of the Deaf and Dumb Institute. A bill was introduced appropriating $19,712.63 to cover the deficits of William D. Gaston, late Trustee of Patoka township, Gibson county.

☞ We strongly recommend to mothers Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup. It never fails, is easy to take, and no after-physic is required. Price, 25 cents.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

AS AN UNFAILING SPECIFIC

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, etc., etc.,

Six genuine Arabs filed their preliminary applications in the United States Court in Washington, a few days ago, to become citizens of the United States. One of the applicants, who speaks English very well, was with Henry M. Stanley in Central Africa when he was hunting for the great explorer, Dr. Livingstone.

A Western woman, tall, gaunt, determined, followed a young man into a railway station at Pittsburg a few days ago, and pointed a silver mounted pistol at him. He stopped, deposited his baggage on the platform and mildly expostulated with her in the presence of the crowd. The woman calmly replied that she was his wife and she would'nt allow him to run away from her. He scratched his chin, and resuming his burdens walked back toward the train and embarked thereon, closely followed by the woman. The not very affectionate pair found a seat and the wife motioned her husband to take the seat next the window, which he reluctantly did and quietness reigned. From a passenger it was learned that the pair had quarreled all the way from Chicago, and that the man had threatened to desert his wife at Valparaiso.

Thirty obliska transported from Egypt from time to time are now standing in various parts of Europe. Of these there are in Rome eleven, of which four are higher than the New York obelisk. The highest of these, and the highest in Europe, being 106 feet without the base, stands before the church of St. John Lateran. The obelisk in the piazza of St. Peter's is 82 ft. 9 in. high. Both of these were mounted on high pedestals. The pedestal of the St. John Lateran obelisk is 44 feet high, making the entire height of obelisk and pedestal 150 feet. The pedestal of the St. Peter's obelisk is a trifle less than 50 feet high, making the whole height of the monument 133 feet 2 inches. If Commander Gorringe has brought with him the entire pedestal on which the New York obelisk stood at Alexandria, about the same proportion will be observed as those of the St. John Lateran obelisk, the pedestal of the former being 27 feet 11 inches, making the whole height of our obelisk 96 feet.

What a Blizzard Is.

"A blizzard," says a Dakota man "is the northwestern name for a gale of wind filled with snow and icy particles as fine as rice powder, with a temperature of 10 to 20 degrees below zero. A genuine blizzard is so fierce that you can neither face it nor distinguish objects ten feet away from you. In Dakota and Minnesota during the prevalence of a blizzard farmers only venture out of their houses with guiding ropes around their persons to enable them to find their way back."

THE ENQUIRER.

The People's Paper—The Greatest Newspaper in the West.

The Enquirer is just closing one of the most prosperous and successful years of its existence. We wish to thank the people and our patrons for their support. Your encouragement has made the task of publishing the best newspaper in the west a possibility.

We ask your aid and support for the year to come, and for the future, and pledge you that we will spare no expense to make the Enquirer for the ensuing year not only the best newspaper in the west, but the rival of any in America.

The world's news, recorded by a corps of fifteen hundred correspondents in all sections of the globe, will be found in the Enquirer every day in the year. The history of each day's events will be faithfully and fearlessly told, exposing fraud, rebuking corruption, and upholding the right. The facts of the world belong to the people, and will be presented to them by the Enquirer free of malice and undistorted for political or personal purposes.

In short, the Enquirer will continue to be a newspaper.

In the future, as in the past, the Enquirer will be found advocating the rights of the people of the states; the rights of communities, and the fullest liberty to individuals compatible with the general order and welfare of society.

All questions and parties shall be treated with candor and fairness, but the truth shall never be perverted.

The year 1881 will be an eventful one in the history of the state and republic. The inauguration of a new administration, with new men and new purposes, are themes of the gravest interest to all citizens who love their country. Upon all these topics the Enquirer will contain the fullest and most reliable information from its corps of able and faithful correspondents.

THE WEEKLY ENQUIRER

will be a paper that ought to be in the hands of every farmer, every mechanic, and every toiler in the land. As an agricultural paper, full of fresh, valuable and reliable information, it will be without a rival! A corps of contributors has been retained whose practical and theoretical knowledge in all branches of good farming is unsurpassed.

"Grizzly Bruin" Gets Tight.

A half-dozen prospectors camped one night recently, in the Sierra Nevada, ElDorado county, California. The ground was covered with snow, and when about midnight, a grizzly bear approached, the crunching of his feet aroused the whole camp. The bear trotted boldly up to within a few feet of the fire and seized the nearest thing that could be reached—a bag containing a few such articles as bread and a demijohn of the hottest whisky manufactured on the Pacific coast. The prospectors fired several shots at the grizzly, which caused him to seize the bag and scamper off. Relieved of the unwelcome visitor's presence, the party dropped off to sleep again, to be aroused about dawn by loud and long roars in a neighboring ravine. The men approached the ravine cautiously and were delighted to see the grizzly uproariously drunk and rolling in the snow. The bear had broken the demijohn and lapped up the whisky with an appreciative tongue. His antics were very funny—"as good as a circus," one of the prospectors says—and they were kept up until long after sunrise. He tried hard to climb up the side of the ravine and made ferocious dashes at the men, but every time he rolled down. At last the spectators shot him and moved on.

Story of a Somnambulist.

A citizen of North Turner Bridge, a village in Maine, was aroused the other night by his wife telling him a neighbor's house was on fire, and begging him to go and help put it out. He went and did valiant volunteer fire department service, and then came home and returned to bed. The next morning he remarked to his wife: "I feel dreadfully. I am lame and feel completely exhausted." "Well you may," said the wife, "after working so hard at the fire last night." "What do you mean?" said he. "Why, the Starbold house was burned last night, and you worked like a hero saving the other building." He seemed surprised to hear it, went out and took a look over the premises and came back. "Well, Marcia, the building is surely gone, but I never would have believed even you when you say that I went to that fire, if they were not gone. I don't know a thing about it." It turned out that he was in a state of somnambulism all the time of his brave action the night before.

The hired girl who was called up at four o'clock in the morning thinks arose two hours later would sound quite as sweet.

A RAIDER'S FATE.

How John Morgan Came to His Death—Shot While Attempting to Escape From a Company of Union Troops—The Story of the Killing Told By the Man Who Fired the Fatal Shot.

[J. R. Downey, in the Philadelphia Times.]

In reply to the question, propounded by Mr. H. V. Redfield, in the Weekly Times, I desire to state that I served with Andrew Campbell, who was then first lieutenant of company C., nineteenth United States infantry, in the year 1868-69. We were stationed at post of Madison, Arkansas, and from his lips, I had the details of the killing of the great calvary rider, who spread such alarm whenever he started on one of his famous riding expeditions. I cannot now recall Campbell's account of the disposition of the troops—if he ever knew how they were disposed—but I assume that your correspondent's account of that matter is substantially correct, and so I will confine myself to the facts in immediate connection with Morgan's death.

When company G., thirteenth Tennessee, had surrounded the house in which Morgan was, they received orders—of course verbal—"to halt and arrest any or every one who might attempt to escape therefrom," the officers of the command, doubtless, if not the soldiers, expecting to find someone there who might be worthy of their attention. Campbell was posted in close proximity to, and in full view of the rear of the building. While a portion of his command was effecting an entrance at the front of the building, a man whose most prominent article of dress was a common soldier's old and well-worn overcoat, hastily thrown on, emerged from the back door, and at once started to gain the shelter or protection of some vines and out-houses that were in the garden. Immediately upon his stepping into the yard, says Campbell: "I, in a loud tone, ordered him to halt, but instead of obeying he started into a run. I then repeated the order and at the same time brought my gun to my shoulder so as to cover him, when, seeing that he still disregarded me, I deliberately aimed at, and shot him. He dropped in his tracks, and died in a few minutes. But I did not know at the time, nor even had the least idea of whom it was I had shot." After the inmates of the house who were wanted, had been captured, the proprietor walked to the place in the garden (or yard) where he had fallen, and said: "Gentlemen you have killed John H. Morgan." This was the first intimation that Campbell, as well as perhaps the most of his associates, had of the identity of the dead soldier.

CAMPBELL'S STORY OF THE KILLING.

In this place I will say that the house was, according to Mr. R., owned and occupied by the widow Williams. Campbell was either mistaken as to the party who identified the fallen man, or else some one of those secured as prisoners assumed that position. Morgan's body was placed on a horse and taken to the Federal camp. If Morgan was murdered, then every soldier who is subject to surprise and capture and loss of life in attempting escape from capture, is also murdered; and yet there are, perhaps, thousands in a time of war who die that way. I remember to have closely questioned Campbell as to the minutest details of the affair, knowing the reputed character of Morgan as a bold and fearless man. I thought that perhaps there might have been desperate resistance or attempted strategy, to overcome which was additional virtue in his captor, but such was not the case, as Campbell says that to the order to halt he made no reply whatever, and seemed only intent on getting away. Considering the confusion that must have existed, the fact that a tired trooper had been suddenly waked from a sound sleep to the reality that he was on all sides environed by his enemy, I believe the statement of this only person who can decide, to be correct. I do not doubt but that, like many other brave men, the ordinary precautions of ordinary people for personal safety to him savored of timidity; yet, if through extraordinary indifference to the probabilities of war he met his fate, it cannot, in any sense, be called murder.

Campbell, occupying a position of danger in an expedition having for its avowed purpose the scattering of a force that had been a menace to our armies, very properly obeyed to the letter the orders which were designed for the death or capture of the rebel raider. Andrew Campbell was a soldier who allowed no trifling with his duty when that duty was imparative; his physique was splendid, and in strength, he was very much more than a match for an ordinary individual. He was nearly six feet in height; had a strongly knit frame; a rather pleasing address, and was either Irish by birth, or of Irish descent. When the war broke out, he was living in Arkansas, near Helena. Much against his inclinations, he was conscripted and placed in a rebel regiment, raised in his neighborhood. He embraced the first opportunity that offered to desert from his enforced service, and joined the Union army, which, he said, "was more in accordance with his political sentiments."

REWARDED WITH A LIEUTENANCY.

In recognition of his services to the government for having permanently relieved it of one of its most dangerous adversaries, Campbell, either at the close of the war, or at no very late subsequent period, was commissioned a lieutenant of the United States army, and was assigned to duty with the nineteenth United States infantry. He served for a period in the Indian territory, and afterward in Arkansas, under General Charles H. Smith.

Campbell's desertion from the rebel ranks, and his subsequent killing of Morgan, was well known to the young men of the country—many of whom had belonged to his original regiment—around about Madison, where he was stationed, and he was disliked, not only because he had forsaken rebellion, but also because he had been a principal actor in depriving them of the services of a noted leader. On one occasion, he and some others were drinking together in a saloon of a town, when one, who had formerly been an officer in the confederate army, who was athletic and a taller man than Campbell, proposed wrestling with him. He accepted the challenge, and landed his antagonist on his back on the floor of the saloon before he was rightly aroused to the requirements of the situation. Maddened by his discomfiture, and while he was regaining his feet from where he had been thrown, he drew a Derringer from his pocket, with which, there is no doubt, he intended to shoot the man who had so deftly floored him. Campbell, perceiving his danger, sprang upon his would-be assassin, wrenched the pistol from his hand, and, turning the muzzle in the opposite direction, he poured the contents into the assailant's head before he had fairly got to his feet. Fortunately for a human life, the bullet did not penetrate the forehead where it struck, but, being turned aside, merely resulted in a scalp wound, from which the man soon recovered.

Campbell, sometime after falling into habits of dissipation, and having but few mental acquirements either to balance his splendid physical organization or to offset his failings, his commanding officer, Captain T. C. Williams, intimating to him that he might resign or answer to a court-martial for irregularities, he chose the former and resigned his commission. When the command, of which he was an officer, was ordered from Madison in 1869, he was then residing there.

Thurlow Weed's Romance.

Thurlow Weed lately told a correspondent how he came to adopt a daughter. "It was in 1845," he said, "while I was in a barber-shop in Albany, I heard that a writing-master named Chapman had been found dead in his room, and that his daughter, aged two years, had been alone with her dead father for several hours. Chapman was a dwarf of intemperate habits. The little girl was to be taken to the almshouse the next morning. It was a sad case. I mentioned it to my family at the tea-table, without manifesting any feeling, but I saw at once that my wife and children shared my interest, and when I was leaving the house half an hour later, my daughter stood at the hall door and said: 'I will go with you, father.' She was right in her guess. Arriving where the waif was temporarily lodged, I found the child, and she came to me readily. I asked her if she would go home with me, and she spoke up, 'Yes, sir.' I remember her sweet voice now. Well, we took her home, and I never think of her without feeling sure that a blessing went into our house with that child." Mary Weed, as she was christened, died at the age of twelve. Mr. Weed subsequently learned that her mother belonged to a respectable English family, and that, before marrying the Albany dwarf, she had been the betrothed wife of a British officer, whose death blighted her hopes and sent her to this country. Mrs. Weed preserves a medal which was awarded to Mary by the American Institute when she was only seven, for excellent needle work.

A few years ago a Japanese publisher brought out a life of Washington in forty-five volumes, with illustrations in which the father of his country is represented in modern dress, wearing a heavy moustache, carrying a cane and accompanied by a Skye terrier.

Famous Men of Muscle.

Among the Greeks the successful athlete was crowned with laurels and loaded down with wealth and honor.

Milo six times won the palm at both the Olympic and Pythian games. He is said to have run a mile with a four-year old ox upon his shoulders, and afterward killed the animal with one blow of his fist, and ate the entire carcass in one day. So great was his muscular power that he would bind a cord around his head and break it by the swelling pressure of the veins. An ordinary meal for Milo was twenty pounds of meat, as much bread, and fifteen pints of wine.

Polydamus, of Thessalia, was of colossal height and prodigious strength, and, it is said, alone and without weapons, killed an enormus enraged lion. One day, it is recorded, he siezed a bull by the hind feet, and the animal escaped only by leaving the hoof in the grasp of the athlete.

The Roman Emperor Maximinus was upward of eight feet in height, and like Milo, of Crotona, could squeeze to powder the hardest stone with his fingers, and break the leg of a horse with a kick.

While a prisoner in Germany Richard I. accepted an invitation to a boxing match with the son of his jailer. He received the first blow, which made him stagger; but recovering, with a blow of his fist he killed his antagonist on the spot.

Topham, an Englishman, born in 1710 was possessed of astonishing strength. His armpits, hollow in the case of ordinary men, were with him full of muscles and tendons. He could take a bar of iron, with its two ends held in his hands, place the middle of the bar behind his neck and bend the extremeties by main force until they met together, and bend back the iron straight again.

The famous Scanderbeg, king of Albania, who was born in 1414, was a man of great stature, and his feats of sword exercise have never been equaled. On one occasion, with his cimeter, he struck his antagonist such a blow that its force cleaved him to the waist.

Maurice, Count of Saxony, was especially noted for the surprising muscular power of his hands. On one occasion, needing a corkscrew, he twisted a large iron nail round in the required shape with his fingers, and opened half a dozen bottles of wine with it. Another time he picked up a number of horseshoes, and, with his hands, snapped them in two as readily as though they were made of glass.

If history is to be believed, Phatyllus, of Brotona, could jump a distance of fifty-six feet.

Strutt, an English authority on games and amusements, speaks of a Yorkshire jumper, named Ireland, whose powers were marvelous. He was six feet high, and, at the age of eighteen, leaped, without the aid of a spring-board, over nine horses ranged side by side.—Brentano's Monthly.

"The Leopard Boy" Before New York Doctors.

[Cincinnati Gazette.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—Prof. George Henry Fox, in a lecture on skin diseases, at the college of Physicians and Surgeons to-day, exhibited, as an illustration, the "Leopard Boy." After the professor had explained that the color of different races depended upon the amount of pigment contained in the skin, the boy, a young negro about eleven years old, was led in.

He was scantily dressed, and his body is mottled with patches of white skin. Prof. Fox said that the spots had enlarged considerably since his first examination of the boy three years ago, and it was safe to predict that the process would go until the transformation would be complete.

The lad, in response to the questions, said that he was black at birth, and that the white spots began to appear when he was three years old. He suffered no pain.

Couldn't Stand the Cold.

A remarkable circumstance in connection with the recent cold snap was the effect on the fish along the coast, large schools being driven in shore and in shallow water. Strange as it may seem, it is asserted that the fish, particularly bass and trout, were observed to throw themselves bodily out of the water on land. An old negro caught thirty-one very fine large bass in this way at Raccoon Key, near Warsaw. On St. Catherine's a net thrown in the water was almost instantly filled by fine large fish, and fishermen found some difficulty in hauling the nets in. Others were observed to kill them in the water with oars. This novel occurrence was witnessed generally all along the island to the southward and in the rivers near the coast.—Savannah [Ga.] News.

How a Beautiful Young Girl Checkmated Simon Girty.

The wickedest white man of the early period of Ohio history was Simon Girty, who sided with the British in the war of the revolution, and commanded the Indian allies which were induced to fight against the colonists. Girty was as cruel as the worst red savage, and there are many traditions in the Sciota and Sandusky valley of his raids and outrages. In 1777 Fort Henry, which was situated on the Ohio river, near Wheeling, which was garrisoned by forty men, was suddenly attacked by a force of five hundred Indians.

He succeeded in ambuscading and slaughtering thirty of the garrison, leaving but twelve to defend the fort. Among the women and children was young Elizabeth Zane, a beautiful girl of seventeen. The twelve soldiers, commanded by Col. Shepherd, were good marksmen, and, knowing that surrender meant death for their wives and children, as well as for themselves, they resolved to fight to the last. But, alas! bravery availed them little, for it was not long before the small stock of powder in the fort was almost exhausted, and only a few charges remained to each man. In despair the colonel called his brave little band together, told them that at a house some sixty yards outside the fort, which their enemies had not yet dared to approach, there was a keg of gunpowder.

Whoever should try to bring it into the fort would be in peril of his life from the Indians. He had not the heart to order any man to such a task, but the powder was their only hope, and therefore it was his duty to ask if any one of them was brave enough to volunteer the undertaking. Instantly three or four men avowed themselves ready, but only one man could be spared. But while they were generously disputing among themselves for the perilous errand, Elizabeth Zane approached the colonel and begged that she might be allowed to go for the powder. Her request was promptly refused, but she persisted earnestly, even against the remonstrances and entreaties of her parents and friends.

In vain they pleaded and reasoned with her, urging more than once that a young man would be more likely to succeed through his power of running swiftly. She replied that she knew the danger, but that if she failed, her loss would not be felt, while not a single man could be spared from the little garrison. Finally it was agreed that she should make the first trial. When all was ready the gate opened and Elizabeth walked rapidly across the open space toward the house where the powder was stored. Those in the fort could plainly see that the eyes of the Indians were upon her, but either from curiosity or mercy they allowed her to pass safely and to enter the house. Her friends drew a breath of relief, and watched even more anxiously for her re-appearance, saw her come out soon, bearing the powder in a tablecloth, tied around her waist.

By this time the Indians suspected her burden, and in a moment more as she was hastening toward the fort, they sent after her a shower of bullets and arrows. They all, however, whistled by her harmless, and with wild, startled eyes, but undaunted heart, she sped on with her treasure through the deadly missiles, until at last she bore it in triumph inside the gate. By the aid of the powder and the enthusiastic courage which Elizabeth's self-sacrifice inspired, the little garrison was enabled to hold out until relief came to them. And so the noble act of a young girl saved the lives of all within the fort, and vanquished its five hundred dusky assailants. The Zane family became well-known in southern Ohio, and gave their name to the beautiful city of Zanesville.

A CANNIBAL CONCEIT.

The cannibal king of the cannibal isle,
Eyed Hannibal Hook with an animal smile,
And fingered his topical tresses awhile,
With a smack of his lips, and a giggle of guile,
And a critical leer in bon vivant style—
Then the rollicking, frolicking thing,
He bit off the nose
Of Hannibal Hook,
Nor thought, I suppose,
Of the freedom he took—
This horrible, cannibal king!

O, the cannibal queen of the cannibal king,
Was a kind of a languishing lout of a thing,
Who strung up her petticoats short with a string,
And walked with a grace, and a finical fling,
One elbow akimbo, her body aswing—
The beautiful, dutiful spouse!
She quietly took Off a finger and toe
Of Hannibal Hook,
Without thinking, I know,
How tough were his cheeks and his brows.

The terrible teeth of the horrible two
Were quick to infringe on the feast that they drew
From the lubricate limbs of the lubberly crew,
Who simply believed they had nothing to do
But to furnish their flesh for a cannibal stew.
So the cannibal couple arose,
And washed in the river
Poor Hannibal Hook,
Then looked to the Giver,
And prayed, and partook
In a way I dislike to disclose.

THE ANGEL OF SHILOH.

BY AN EX-ARMY SURGEON.

"You found the tavern full?"

The speaker was a handsome, intelligent-looking gentleman of perhaps 40—evidently a citizen of the village, and resident of the handsome but unpretentious dwelling-house in front of which he was standing.

"Yes," I replied; "I was too late by half an hour, so the landlord informed me."

"You shall be welcome here, if you will accept of modest quarters and plain fare."

The tone of voice, no less than the words uttered, assured me that the offer of hospitality was sincere, and with a grateful heart and a simple expression of thanks I passed through the gate and clasped the extended hand of the man who, although I had not even known of his existence till that minute, and who I had every reason to suppose a foe of the cause I represented—a rebel to the Government whose uniform I wore, yet whom I recognized a friend and brother.

"You are very kind," I said, "more kind than you know, for I am not only weary, but ill, or I should not have sought lodgings indoors while my comrades were exposed to the privations of camp life."

"I am glad of the opportunity to offer hospitality to a professional brother," he responded, "for I know from the letter on your hat-band that you are a surgeon, and I am a physician. This would have been sufficient to have prompted me to invite you in, but something else, a sudden but unexplainable impulse, which I could not resist, impelled me to it."

By this time I had been led into the family room—a most cheerful room. A beechwood fire blazed and glowed upon the hearth; a bright carpet with warm colors covered the room; an old-fashioned mahogany sideboard stood to the left, and a bureau of the same rich wood faced it on the other side of the room, and in one corner a clock of "ye olden time," and known by the title of wall-sweeper, counted off the seconds with stately precision, and sounded the knell of the dying hours in a solemn monotone. Easy-chairs stood back against the farther wall like sentries on an inner picket line, while the others were grouped about the cheerful fire, and these, as we entered, were occupied by persons whose faces I could never have forgotten had I seen them but for a moment, and which are now photographed upon my heart forever and aye. There were three persons in this group, a venerable old gentleman, a white-haired, matronly and kindly-faced old lady, and a golden-haired, blue-eyed young lady—father, mother and daughter of my friendly host, Dr. Jewell.

There is something in a name, else how should these people be so appropriately named? I wondered and pondered the more when I learned that the brightest and richest and rarest gem in the group had the beautiful name of Lilian.

I beg the reader's pardon—I have not told him or her, as the case may be, who I am, or when, how or where all this happened.

My name is Alden; a lineal descendant I am from John and Priscilla Alden, whose romantic history you have doubtless read in poetry if not in prose. My ancestors had gone West almost a century ago, hence those provincial prejudices so characteristic of those descendants of the Mayflower party who still cling to the crags of Plymouth Rock had been lost in the broad and fertile valleys of the Ohio, or they had wandered off and found a flower-bespangled grave on the boundless prairies of Illinois. At any rate they found no place in my heart.

The time of which I write was January, 1862. Place, Southwestern Kentucky. Grant's army was making a grand reconnoissance in force, with a view to feeling of the enemy before making an attack upon Fort Donaldson.

A cold, pitiless rain had pelted us all day, and was still pouring down upon soldiers and officers alike. When the village of B. came in view, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, I had trudged through the mud and waded swollen streams from early morn, having surrendered my horse to a sick soldier of the brigade to which I was attached, and was, therefore, worn and weary, and almost ill. Immediately after the order had been passed along the line to halt and pitch tents for the night, a large number of officers galloped on to the village and sought shelter beneath the roof of the hotel it contained. It had been my purpose to get a hot supper and dry bed also, but my professional duties detained me for some time, and when I reached the door of the inn I was informed that not only all the beds, but every square foot of the parlor and sitting-room floors had been pre-empted.

It was while sadly wending my way back to camp that I had the rare good fortune, or fate, to attract the attention of Dr. Jewell. My boots were covered with mud, my clothes dripping with water, and I felt as if chilled to the marrow of my bones and the center of my heart. It took but a brief time to warm me, however, for the elements of warmth were abundant. At his request I followed the doctor into his chamber and donned a suit of his clothes, while he sent my own by a colored boy to the kitchen to be dried. Returning to the parlor, I observed a large bowl of steaming punch, flanked by goblets, upon a table which had been drawn up near the fire, and by which an easy chair had been placed. The family arose as the doctor and I advanced, and the old gentleman delivered a very brief but very eloquent temperance speech. He said:

"You Northerners have peculiar notions about the use of liquor, at least some of you have. I have been told that in some places it is an insult to a guest to offer him a glass of hot punch. We Southerners think differently. With us it is an act of hospitality to invite our friends, and even strangers, to join us in a social glass. I do not know what your views are, but, believing that punch is a good medicine for a man who has been drenched by a cold rain, I ordered some prepared, and hope you will join us in a glass before supper. But if you have any conscientious scruples we shall respect them, and at once send the bowl from the room."

"I have no such scruples," I responded. "It is the abuse and not the proper use of stimulants that forms the basis of my temperance creed, and there are times when brandy is a blessing, and this is one of the times. I shall join you most heartily."

At the close of my speech the old gentleman gave place to his wife, who advanced and filled the goblets to the brim, while Lilian handed them around. When each of the gentlemen had been supplied with full and foaming beakers, and the ladies with smaller glasses only part full, the father said to the son, "Give a toast, Walter—one suited to the occasion."

The doctor complied by saying:

"May the acquaintance begun to-night ripen into a friendship before which all sectional and political prejudices shall dissolve and disappear; and may that friendship live and flourish in the hearts of all present when this cruel war shall exist only as a sad and sorrowful reminiscence."

"I most heartily indorse the sentiment you have so beautifully expressed," I responded, and beg leave to quote from a Northland poet in reply:

May the song birds of peace soon revisit our glades,
And our children clasp hands where their fathers crossed blades."

A reverent and fervent Amen burst from the lips of the old gentleman as he touched my glass with his and raised it to his lips; tears rolled down the furrowed features of his good wife, and tears stood in the blue eyes of the beautiful Lilian, and the long silken lashes that curtained those heavenly orbs drooped and quivered like the dew-laden willow fringe that hides from sight the crystal waters of a spring in the valley of Eden—the Eden of my childhood.

Supper being announced at this moment, the old folks led the way, and the doctor, taking my arm, followed them into a large, old-fashioned room, which served as both kitchen and dining-room. It was a most cheerful and home-like place; the table, which stood in the center of the uncarpeted floor, presented a neat, inviting appearance to a soldier who had been on short rations for some days, and who had eaten nothing for twelve hours. Ham and eggs, and delicious corn cakes, done to a turn, with sweet country butter, and coffee with real cream, constituted the bill of fare. It was ample, and I did full justice to it.

The evening hours flew rapidly past on downy wings of friendly converse, till the old clock in the corner announced the hour of 11, when the thoughtful mother mildly suggested that the Major was doubtless tired and would like to retire. I disclaimed any thought of weariness, and indeed I uttered but the simple truth in saying that I had not been so entirely refreshed for weeks. It is passing strange what power there is in good-fellowship to restore the wasted energies of the body as well as the spirit. So we sat another—a brief, a delicious hour—and then the good-nights were said, and I retired to sleep and dream. The blue-eyed Lilian formed the web, and horrid battle-scenes the woof of my visions. The beautiful girl had scarcely uttered a dozen words during the evening, but she had been a most eloquent auditor. She had sat almost directly opposite me, and my eyes rested upon her face as I addressed other members of the group, and they did not fail at any time to meet a sympathetic response from her heaven-tinted orbs; nor was there the least embarrassment in this, for her countenance bore such a perfect expression of innocent interest as to reveal a spirit at once modest and pure as an angel.

In my dreams a bloody battle was raging. My ears were filled with the boom of cannon, the crash of small arms, the scream of shell, and the shrieks and groans of dying men. The scene changed. I wandered over the fields of carnage. The dead were thick about me. A groan reached my ear, and I bent my steps in the direction whence the sound came. A soldier, in gray uniform, with a Lieutenant's strap upon his shoulders, lay upon the ground, with his head resting upon the lap of a woman. I said, "If I can be of any service, please command." A pair of blue eyes were lifted toward my face, and a voice, sad but musical, said, "Oh! I am so glad it is you; you are a surgeon as well as a friend, and my brother is dangerously wounded." Those eyes, that voice; could I be mistaken? No, it was Lilian, and the wounded young officer her brother. What joy, what happiness to be able to serve her; aye, perhaps save the life of her brother—the son of my friend.

A rap on my chamber door dispelled the vision, and the pleasant greeting of Dr. Jewell restored me to my normal state. But my dreams remained as a vivid memory of a startling reality. I could not but believe that it was a presentement, and, although I kept it locked in my heart as a sad, though cherished secret, I resolved to ask Lilian for a picture of her brother which she had shown me the evening before. So, just as I was on the point of leaving, I said, "Miss Lilian, I wish you would give me a photograph of your brother. It is possible I may meet him, and if I should it would prove my passport to his friendship." "I will," she replied, "for you may be of service to him, and I know you would do him a kindness if you could." "Most gladly would I, both for his own sake and as a reward, in part, for the great kindness I have experienced at the generous hands of his family."

The young Lieutenant's handsome face bore a striking likeness to that of his sister, and for that I prized it and cherished it. I wore it constantly in an inner pocket of my vest. The stirring scenes intervening dimmed somewhat the memories of my vision as time passed, but could not blot it from my mind.

The battle of Shiloh had been fought, and during the whole of it my mind reverted to the dream. It seemed but a repetition of a tragedy of which I had witnessed the rehearsal. Impelled by some strange impulse I could not resist, I wandered out upon the battlefield at midnight. Every spot seemed familiar. The dead faces were those that I had seen in my dream. A groan—aye, the same groan I had heard on that ever-memorable night of January, 1862. I hurried to the side of the poor fellow from whose agonized lips it came. He was prone upon the cold earth, with his head resting upon his left arm, while with his right hand he was striving to check the flow of blood from a gunshot wound in his left breast.

A glance told me I had found the son of my friend—the brother of Lilian. Fortunately, I had with me the means of stopping the flow of blood; also a canteen of water and a flask of brandy. No word was spoken until I had done all that could be done at once, when, with a faint voice and difficult articulation, he said: "You have saved my life, and I thank you."

"You owe me no thanks, Lieutenant; I should be an ingrate did I not serve, to the utmost of my ability, the son of my friend, Dr. Jewell, the brother of his precious daughter, Lilian."

"Is this a dream? How—where did you know my father and sister?"

"Be calm, my near friend; I will gladly tell you all, but not now. Enough that I have found you, and serve you."

In my arms I bore the wounded officer to my tent, and vigilantly did I watch by his side until morning came. He had lost much blood, and his wound was painful, but not especially dangerous; hence, he recovered rapidly, and within a month he was well again. In the meantime I had told him the story of my impromptu visit to his old Kentucky home, and the generous hospitality I had met with there. I showed him the photo of himself given me by his sister, and the marvelous dream which had prompted me to ask for the picture was rehearsed. "Doctor," he said, as I closed my story, "I don't think I am superstitious, but I believe your dream was a presentiment, given you by my angel mother. It was she, and not my sister, you saw holding my head on her lap. Lilian is marvelously like her mother, and could readily have been mistaken for her."

"At least, in a dream," I added, pleasantly.

"Yes, or by moonlight, in the waking hours. But please don't try to break my faith in the reality of that vision of yours. It has come true almost to the last particular."

"It has," I responded, "and I believe in its reality as firmly as you can."

I told the story to Gen. M., and it softened his heart so greatly that when I asked permission to take my friend to his home it was readily granted.

The reader may be safely left to picture to himself the joyful meeting of the long-absent son with his loving grandparents, father and sister, and the expressions of gratitude and friendship showered upon my humble self.

My leave of absence was for thirty days. I spent a fortnight of it with my Kentucky friends, and when I departed I carried with me two miniature portraits. One of them had golden hair, and eyes of heaven's own blue, and lips that rivaled the ripening pomegranate, and cheeks like the sunny side of a luscious peach. Nor was that all I had to gladden my bachelor heart. The original of the picture had said that "when this cruel war should be over I might come again, and then she would gladly go with me to my Northern home as my wife."

I have only to add that she is looking over my shoulder as I write, and trying to convince me that the public (meaning you, dear reader) will laugh at me for being so silly as to tell how I was captured by a rebel girl, and at her for being so easily converted from her secesh sentiments to unwavering loyalty to the Union.

The Man-Slayer.

A man who had committed a dreadful murder fled, and was pursued by the officers of the law and the relatives of the murdered victim. On reaching the river Nile he saw a lion on the bank, and, being dreadfully afraid, climbed up a tree. He, however, discovered a serpent in the upper branches of the tree, and, being greatly alarmed, threw himself into the river, where he was carried off and eaten by a crocodile. Thus the earth, the air and the water, alike refused shelter to a murderer. The foregoing fable was written fully two thousand years ago and teaches us how true it is that times change, and we change with them; also, that not every change is for the better. If the murder referred to had been committed now, instead of two thousand years ago, the murderer—unless he were a poverty-stricken, friendless wretch, a mere superfluous human quantity—instead of fleeing from the sheriff, would have hunted him up and given bail, in order to be better able to assist his attorneys in procuring continuances from term to term and tampering with the State's witnesses, stealing or quashing the original indictment, procuring changes of venue, appeals, reversals, remandments, and otherwise securing his complete vindication when, in the course of time or eternity, his trial came off, if it ever did. This fable teaches us that there was once a period when the murderer was regarded with such abhorrence that even the wild beasts and the elements refused him protection. It is comforting to know that there was such a period.—Galveston News.

They have a novel way of treating lunatics in Scotland. Instead of confining them in cells like prisoners, they put them in neat cottages with a plat of ground to cultivate. All appearance of restraint is removed, though of course they are closely watched. The plan is said to work admirably.

Small boy, watching his sister iron a piece of work with bird's nest of eggs down in crewels on it—I say, sister, if you keep the iron so long on those eggs you'll hatch 'em."

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

It is said that a poultice of fresh tea leaves moistened with water will cure a stye on the eyelid.

The true philosophical way of treating burns or scalds is to at once exclude the air, with cotton batting, flour, scraped potato, or anything that is handiest.

Ear-ache.—Take a small piece of cotton wool, make a depression in the center and fill it with pepper, gather into a ball and tie it up; dip it into sweet oil and insert it into the ear.

Mr. Scott, of Jersey City, claims that the following will positively cure neuralgia: Take the leaves of the large field thistle (not the Canada), press a gallon measure full of them and fill the measure full of water. Boil them down to a half-gallon. Strain off the water and let it cool. Of this take a wine-glassful every morning before breakfast and a wineglassful every afternoon just before tea. Take the leaves of the same kind of thistle, put them into a clean cloth, and pound them into a jelly. Put a layer of this on the afflicted part; bind on with cloths every night. Be sure and get the leaves fresh.

Colds, taken in hand promptly, are easily remedied. If they are allowed to cling on for a few days, they usually "run their course" of a couple of weeks, if not much longer. For a slight cold, accompanied with sore throat, a simple remedy, often effective, is a teaspoonful or more of powdered chlorate of potassa in a tumbler of water—all that will dissolve. A teaspoonful of the solution is to be gargled in the throat and swallowed, repeating it every hour or so. A sudden, severe cold is most often broken by a gentle physic of calcined magnesia or castor oil, with warm foot bath, and avoiding any chill or draught of air for a day or two. For filling up of the lungs and much gathering or coughing use a simple cough sirup, made by mixing equal quantities of sirup of ipecac, paregoric and castor oil, or sweet oil; shake well, and take from half to a full teaspoonful, according to age, three or more times a day as needed. A warm sweat is good, if great care be taken to have no chilly feeling for a few hours after. If one does not cool off very gradually, more cold will be taken. Croup is, in some families, much dreaded. Its guttural cough is unmistakable after having once heard it. When first noticed administer sirup of ipecac—ten drops for an infant, up to twenty drops to a large child—every hour or so until vomiting is produced. Then use the above cough sirup three times a day, or more if needed. If more than a slight attack, the sirup of ipecac is accompanied with foot baths as warm as can be borne, with a table-spoonful of good mustard stirred into each gallon of water. In addition the chest and neck are well bathed with camphorated oil or volatile liniment, and covered with flannel lined with thick cotton batting. It is well where croup is feared to keep ready for use a flannel cut to fit the chest and neck, with tying strings on the neck corners, and with thick cotton batting stitched on to the under side. These remedies have proved effective in ordinary croup. If at all severe and not yielding immediately to the above simple home treatment, a physician must be called in.

Monkey Shooting in Gambia.

The mere fact of slaughtering monkeys will probably not cause any great degree of pleasure to any one aspiring to the title of sportsman, though at the same time a man choosing to kill as many as possible might yet not consider himself altogether wanton in his sport, for the monkeys may be termed vermin. They are a great nuisance to the agriculturist, and cause much loss, especially in the ground nut plantations, where they frequently pick the seed out of the ground almost as soon as it is planted. To shoot the dog-faced monkey is easy, but to make a bag is quiet another matter. You may knock him out of a tree, or you may bowl him over on the ground, but you will not find him on the spot where you feel sure you saw him fall. Dead or alive, his companions carry him off, and pursuing monkeys on foot is not a game which man is adapted to play successfully. The most likely way to secure a specimen is to take a little boat and pull gently along close into the bank, just after sunset, at which time the monkeys frequently collect in the branches of trees overhanging the river; thus one may be shot so that he falls into the water, whence his friends are powerless to rescue him. The great drawback to this method of aquatic stalking is that in the upper river, and especially at the close of the day, the mesquitoes fairly swarm, coming down on one in clouds, and making shooting a matter of great determination and endurance. Certainly it is very easy to say that such and such game may be shot by lying out at night; and this necessitates an amount of exposure against which most Europeans are not proof, to say nothing of the attacks of the above pests, though they may, to a certain extent, be balked by wearing over the hands and face bags made of some light material—leno, for instance. Perhaps at some future date monkey skins may become of commercial value, and when they do the Gambia will be able to flood the market, and the ground nut growers will rejoice.—London Field.

Sudden Checking of Perspiration.

A Boston merchant, in "lending a hand" on board one of his ships on a windy day, found himself at the end of an hour and a half pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest, and, engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained two years; and for a long time afterward could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposures than this have, in constitutions not so vigorous, resulted in inflammation of the lungs—"pneumonia"—ending in death in less than a week, or causing tedious rheumatisms, to be a source of torture for a lifetime. Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children at age of 3 or 4 years the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after exercise, or work, or play, or of remaining exposed to the wind, or to sitting at an open window or door, or to pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, while in heat.

JOSH BILLINGS' WISDOM.

[Correctly Spelled From His New "Cook Book."]

The man who gets bit twice by the same dog is better adapted for that kind of business than any other.

There is a great deal of religion in this world that is like a life-preserver, only put on at the moment of immediate danger and then half the time put on hind side before.

Experience is a school where a man learns what a big fool he has been.

The man who doesn't believe in any hereafter has got a dreadfully mean opinion of himself and his chances.

There are two kinds of fools in this world—those who can't change their opinions and those who won't.

A good doctor is a gentleman to whom we pay three dollars a visit for advising us to eat less and exercise more.

Out in the world men show us two sides to their characters; by the fireside only one.

The world is filling up with educated fools—mankind read too much and learn too little.

Every man has his follies and oftentimes they are the most interesting things he has got.

Wages and Cost of Living in China.

There have been many books written on China from the time of Abbe Huc to the present. But most of them have been too general to present any precise idea of the actual social conditions in that vast empire. Recent official observation has, however, done much to clear away the mists which obscure real life. Most of the trades which we have are carried on in the Central Flowery Land. There are there the traditional "butcher, baker, and candlestick-maker." But there is a peculiarity which is not found in civilization. The artist obtains no higher rewards than the ordinary craftsman. There appears to be a dead-level for all who work with hand or finger. A master workman in any of the trades in China gets $3 per week, or $156 per annum. But the workman only gets half that remuneration. One dollar and fifty cents per week, or $78 per annum, is the average rate, and it is not every workman who can obtain it. Youngsters or women get 50 cents per week, or $26 per annum. It will be observed that these are the wages paid in the higher walks of art and mechanics. There is only one class of operatives who are more handsomely rewarded. Gold and silver-smiths do a little better. The silk-reeler, or spinner, sometimes gets from $1 to $2 per day, because the silk has to be reeled off the cocoons in a given time, and as a consequence the work has to be prosecuted day and night. Consul Denny, at Shanghai, thus figures out the expenses of living in connection with the compensation specified:

For a master, per annum—
For food, etc.	$ 72
For rent, etc.	$36
For clothing	12
Total	$120
For a workman, per annum—
For food, etc.	$ 45
For rent	12
For clothing	8

The same authority adds: "The master generally lives at the workshop, where he has, perhaps, two rooms, beside a place to cook in. The household furniture may be estimated at from $20 to $30. The ordinary workman, if married, will share a small house with a friend, and occupy one room, and have access to the kitchen. He may live with his parents, in which case his earnings go to the common fund. Under such circumstances, $10 to $15 will cover the value of the household furniture."

But the common laborer, whether in field or kitchen, does not get anything like the wages of the skilled artisan. The farm laborer, during harvest-time, gets, beside his meals—worth about 10 cents—from 10 cents to 15 cents a day, or from 70 cents to $1.05 a week. He can be hired by the month for from $1.50 to $2. If he gets permanent employment he is willing to accept $12 per annum, with board and lodging. If he works for shorter terms, 50 cents a month will suffice for house rent and $2 per annum will keep his wardrobe in repair. But there is a grade below these free laborers known as the coolies, who are often glad to work for 5 cents a day.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Not Equal to the Emergency.

He looked a bit hard-up, but he had a pleasant face and smooth address as he walked into the office of a railroad running West and asked for the superintendent. When conducted to that official's desk he began:

"I want the favor of a pass to Buffalo."

"Can't have it," was the prompt reply.

"I expected that answer, and am prepared for it. I did not come here with a tale of woe. I have not been robbed."

"No?"

"Not a rob. I did not lose my money on the street. I am not obliged to rush home to see my wife die. I am not a consumptive who is anxious to get home and die among his friends. All those pleas are old."

"Yes, very old and thin."

"And yet I want a pass to Buffalo. I feel that I have a right to ask it."

"On what grounds?"

"This morning I saved the life of a passenger on one of your transfer boats. He was a big red-whiskered man named Clark. Had he gone overboard, it would have cost you perhaps $50,000 to settle the claim."

"Clark? Big man with red whiskers? Wretched man, you know not what you did! That's the man who already has a claim of $20,000 against us for breaking his leg. If you had only let him go overboard we could have settled with his heirs for less than a quarter of the amount! Go out—go away. You have taken thousands of dollars out of our pockets by your meddlesome act."

The beat walked out without a word, but as he reached the door he was heard to grumble:

"I thought I was the best liar on the Atlantic coast, but I might as well hang up from this date!"—Wall Street Daily News.

The cute Yankees send $100,000,000 a year out of this country for sugar, but the French extract $55,000,000 worth of sugar out of the beet beets that they raise. The cute Yankees are tarnation slow in finding out this little trick.

DAY-DREAMS.

I lay within a vine-[illegible] nook,
And dreamed and watched the sunny hours away,
While every perfumed breeze the linden branches shook,
And sunbeams filtered through the whole calm day.
The branches of the linden whispered soft and—
Whispered sweet sounds to lull my dreamy brain—
Over me the golden curtains of sunshine spread,
And I lay dreaming of my ships upon the main.
Some great ships that plowed the rushing seas,
Fair ships that danced upon the foam-capped blue
That sped like graceful swans before the breeze,
And carried treasures o'er the main, fair one, for you.
My castles rose in grandeur and [illegible],
And turrets pierced the ethereal blue above
And there I watched my ships upon the sea
That brought rare treasures to my own sweet love.
And then I dreamed I had the poet's magic touch,
And tuned my lyre to songs of love and peace;
I lay with tinted dreams like these—ever such—
'Mid bird-song, and rustle, and whisper of breeze.

PITH AND POINT.

Are horses wounded in battle called hors du combat?

Are all the victuals mixed when the sailors have a mess?

It doesn't require a pair of horses to drag out a miserable existence.

Many persons confound the spirit of liberty with the liberty of spirit.

A young man's friends object to his being loose, but somehow they have an equal objection to his being tight.

Young swell—"I say, boy, what do you do with your clothes when you've worn them out?" Boy—"Wears 'em 'ome agin."

"Mary Jane, have you given the gold-fish fresh water?" "No, ma'am; what's the use? They haven't drunk up what's in there, yet."

When a dead man's property is put under the hammer, it is the sale of effects, but when a man gets sea-sick, it's the effect of a sail.

In a letter to a friend, a young lady states that she is not engaged, but that she sees a cloud above the horizon about as large as a man's hand.

Fragment of a letter written by a maniac who had formerly a superb intellect: "I am sad and uneasy, like a codfish who feels his wings growing."

The man who is asked to guess at a lady's age, and don't guess several years less than he believes to be exact, is making an enemy, and doing truth no good.

A Springfield minister remarked just before the sermon: "I should like to remind the congregation that we have a prayer-meeting at the chapel every Thursday evening, regardless of the weather. Those of us who were there last week were led to feel that there must be a scarcity of umbrellas among the people as a whole."

A Scotch clergyman, who was given to absence of mind, was once on his way to preach in a church a little outside of Edinburgh. The wind was strong in his face, so that in stopping to take a pinch of snuff he turned his back to it, but forgot to turn again to his original direction, and so walked back into the city without knowing it.

A young lady once hinted to a gentleman that her thimble was worn out, and asked what reward she merited for her industry. He sent her answer in the shape of a thimble, on which the following lines were engraved:

I send you a thimble, for fingers nimble,
Which I hope will fit when you try it;
It will last you long, if it's half as strong
As the hint which you gave me to buy it.

A man bought a gallon of gin to take home, and, by the way of a label, wrote his name upon a card, which happened to be the seven of clubs, and tied it to the handle. A friend, coming along and observing the jug, quietly remarked, "That's an awful careless way to leave that liquor!" "Why?" said Tom. "Because somebody might come along with the eight of clubs and take it."

Little Jean, 20 months old, was making persistent efforts to stand on her head. Her mother said, "I don't see what gave her the idea. She never saw any one do it." In a few minutes Jean came running with her picture-book open at the illustration in Mother Hubbard,

She went to the baker's to buy him some bread,
And when she came back he stood on his head.

"You don't seem to have made much money by bringing your hogs down here," was remarked to a farmer who had driven his hogs seven miles to town and then sold them for precisely what was offered him before he left home. "Well, no," said the agriculturist pensively. "I haven't made much money, but then," brightening, "you know I had the company of the hogs on the way down."

Not long since, in one of our neighboring villages, a young lady who had been engaged to a fine young man for some time met a richer person, and soon put off the old love for the new. She wrote to the old lover requesting him to return her photograph. Here was a chance for revenge, which he took by sending the following note: "I would gladly comply with your request, but if I do so it will spoil my euchre deck. I have a collection of photographs which I use for playing cards, and I do not wish to break it by giving away the deuce of diamonds."—Oil City Derrick.

Trichina in Oleomargarine.

An expert physician of Boston, having instituted a microscopic examination of oleomargarine, found many foreign substances in it, and among others the egg of a tape-worm, which he says is common in oleomargarine, it being in the animal fat of which the stuff is made. His view is indorsed by that of Dr. Dollinger, the celebrated English scientist, namely, that oleomargarine is nothing but raw fat, and they who eat it take the risk of trichinosis and all such diseases. In this connection the Boston physician said of butter: "Pure butter is a great nerve food, and contains a large amount of concentrated nourishment for the nervous system. It has been correctly inferred, we think, that impaired nervous systems can be improved more rapidly by the use of butter, other things being equal, than by any other form of food."

What to Do with Hats in Church.

To all wearers of silk hats, when once they get inside the church, the hat becomes a serious difficulty. Of all the various expedients by which ingenious church-goers have endeavored to dispose of their hats there is no one that has not proved fallacious. The extreme danger of placing a hat in the aisle immediately outside the pew is universally known. The first lady that sweeps up the aisle carries with her a confused mass of defenseless hats, which are deposited in the shape of a terminal moraine in front of the pew which is her final goal. Of course the hats which have been subjected to this process are reduced by attrition to a rounded form, and are covered by scratches, reminding one of glacial action on mountain bowlders. However interesting they may be to geologists, they are of no further value as hats, and can rarely be bent into a shape that will allow their owners to wear them. In the days when expansive crinolines were in fashion the fate of the hat deposited in the aisle was still more appalling. When a well-dressed lady passed by in its vicinity it disappeared totally from human sight. There are cases on record where one fashionable woman has thus caused the disappearance of thirteen separate hats during her passage from the church door to the pew in the neighborhood of the pulpit. What was the final fate of the hats was never ascertained. They simply vanished and left no trace behind. As to putting one's hat on the floor beneath the seat no man who follows this reckless course can expect anything but disaster. If there is a small boy in the pew he will infallibly discover that hat and kick it into the further end of the pew within the first thirty minutes of the service. If there is a lady in the pew a surgical operation will be required to remove her boot from the interior of the hat, while in any event the hat is certain to absorb every particle of dust within a radius of eight feet and to fasten it to the floor with the aid of forgotten Sunday-school gum-drops. Neither under the seat, on the seat nor in the aisle can the worried hat find rest, and the plan of establishing a hat pound in the vestibule, where the hats can be ticketed and kept during service, would simply result in converting a church into a hat exchange, where the sinners would secure all the good hats and the saints would be compelled to content themselves with the worn-out and worthless ones.

ANXIOUS TO RISE.

[From the La Fayette Daily Journal.]

There's plenty of room up stairs, as Daniel Webster said to the young lawyer anxious to rise, but despondent of his chance to do so; but no one need injure himself either in climbing the stairs of fame or those of his own house or business place. The following is to the point: Mr. John A. Hutchinson, Supt. Downer's Kerosene Oil Works, Boston, Mass., writes: Mr. Patton, one of our foremen, in walking up stairs last week sprained his leg badly. I gave him a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil to try. He used it and an almost instantaneous cure was effected.

The Improved Method of Kissing.

How to kiss scientifically, and still extract all the pleasurable essence of a kiss, is at present a subject of extreme interest in social circles, where young people have nothing better to occupy their minds.

The day when a young man could grab a girl around the neck and gobble a kiss in a rough but comfortable manner, is past. The time when he could circle her waist with one arm, get his shirt-bosom full of hair oil, and pirouette his lips over every square inch of her countenance, is no more. Science has proclaimed against it, and man shudders, but remains silent.

The old style of kissing, which sounds like some one tearing the clap-boards off a smoke-house, is now considered bad taste, and consequently going out of fashion; although the majority of the girls admit that science has cruelly destroyed all the comfort of a long-lingering, heart-thrilling kiss, and causes them to express no little regret at the change.

The improved scientific method of kissing is to throw the right arm languidly around the fair one's shoulder, tilt her chin up with the left hand until her nose is pointed at an angle of forty-five degrees—or rather until he has the aspect resembling the bowsprit of a clipper-built sloop—then stoop slowly and graze about her lips in a quiet, subdued sort of way, and tickle her nose with your moustache until she cries "Ouch!" This is scientific kissing; but there is no consolation in it—nothing to make a man feel like a couple of galvanic batteries were galloping along his spinal column. It is flat, luke-warm; it lacks substance, and, if not stale, is at least unprofitable.

Profitable Patients.

The most wonderful and marvelous success in cases where persons are sick or wasting away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them (profitable patients for doctors), is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters.—Cincinnati Star.

The Careful Father.

In a carriage of a train bound from Vienna to Pesth, one evening, there were five passengers—an Englishman, two Magyars, a mild looking man of sixty, and a handsome young German, who seemed dreadfully sleepy. The Englishman observed that the sexagenarian essayed to chat with the young German, who, however, yawned and soon slumbered. The sexagenarian become garrulous, and lamented his son's carelessness in money matters. "See him now, going to sleep in a carriage full of strangers. I think I'll give the young man a fright for once in his life," and lifting up the lapel of his coat, he laughingly drew out a pocketbook. At Pressburg the careful father said he must get out for a minute, but when the train moved on he didn't return. When the young man woke up they told him that his father had gone out and taken his pocketbook. "My father!" he shrieked, and, clutching his empty pocket, burst into a volley of most unfilial imprecation. "I haven't got a father," he howled out. "I never saw the—old scoundrel before. Good God! that pocketbook contained 3,000 florins. He must have seen it when I took my ticket."

The cheapest method to cheat the undertaker (who is generally around when Coughs and Colds prevail) is to buy and use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It always cures.

Not a Beverage.

"They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poor whisky or poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hope, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

The Game of Scandal.

There is a game called "Scandal," which creates a great deal of amusement when it is played properly. The persons who are engaged in the game stand or sit in a circle. The more the better; thirty or forty will make more fun than ten or twelve. When all are ready, the person appointed takes his right-hand neighbor aside and whispers in his ear a short story; it may be about some one present, or about some public personage; but whatever it is, he must write it down and keep it, as a proof of what his statement was. The neighbor, in his turn, repeats the story as exactly as possible to the person on his right hand, and he, having listened, passes it on. At last the tale returns to its original narrator, who writes it down as he received it. It is said, and I believe truly, that never once has it come back as it started. The most astonishing alterations occur. Innocent jokes have turned to frightful accusations, and only the reading of the first story can convince any one that he did not repeat exactly what he heard. There is no better type than this amusing play of the time-worn game of scandal that the world is playing, and has been playing ever since it began. That a number of innocent people, with no intention of distorting facts, cannot hand the simplest story from one to another in the same room for a few moments without ridiculous alterations, proves the impossibility of getting at the truth of any story which has passed through many lips. The disposition of the hearer colors the tale even as he listens, and more than this, many persons are deaf without being conscious of it, and in a peculiar way. There is an auricular illusion as well as an optical illusion. I know persons who, while intently listening, hear words that are not uttered, and who, in repeating the impression that has been made upon them, do not intend to tell falsehoods, but who will, nevertheless, say to you, with a bland smile:

"I have told every one that you told me that Mr. X.'s beautiful young wife had eloped, and they are so sorry for him." And while you deny that you made any such statement, and stare in wonder at the speaker, you remember having told her that "Mr. X.'s new country house was situated on a beautiful slope of the hill, and that he had bought it to please his young wife." I, myself, no longer believe anything I hear, and only half that I see.

When you hear an evil story of any one you know to be good, discredit it, and say so. Grapes are not gathered from thistles. Neither do thistles grow upon a grape-vine. The fruit tells you from what tree it came; but you know also what a tree is likely to bear. One you know to be good and sweet and kind and noble, is not likely to have done bad or cruel or spiteful or petty things. Why should you believe a tale of him who is the subject of scandal?

A Single Stone

from a running brook slew the giant Goliath, and millions of noble men since that time have died from a single stone in the bladder, which Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure would have dissolved and carried away.

The Lobster.

When a lobster shakes hands with you you always know when he takes hold, and are exceedingly pleased when it gets done. They have small features, and lay no claim to good looks. When they locomote they resemble a small boy shuffling off in his father's boots. They are backward, very. They even go ahead backward. They occasionally have a row like people, and in the melee lose a member, but have the faculty of growing out another. The process is patented both in this country and Europe, which accounts for not coming into general use with the human lobster so to speak.

A lobster never comes on shore unless he is carried by force. They are afflicted with but one disease, and that is boils. There is more real excitement in harpooning a whale or in having the measles than there is in catching lobsters. The fisherman provides a small hen-coop, and places in it for enticers, several dead fish. He then rows his boat to the lobster ground (which is water) and sinks his coop to the bottom, and anchors it to a small buoy (one from eight to ten years will do) and then goes home. When he feels like it again—say in the course of a week or so—he goes back and pulls his poultry-house, and if he has good success he will find the game inside the coop.

As an article of food the real goodness of the lobster is in the pith. Very few persons relish the skin, and physicians say it is hard to digest. We therefore take the lobster and boil it until it is ready to eat. Nothing is better for colic than boiled lobster. It will bring on a case when cucumbers have failed. For a sudden case we advise them crumbled in milk. Eaten at the right time, and in proper quantities, lobster stands second to no fruit known.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

THOMAS O. THOMPSON, Esq., the Mayor's Secretary, who, some few days ago, slipped on a banana peel and sprained his knee, writes that St. Jacobs Oil "acted like a charm."

A PRUDENT man advised his drunken servant to put by his money for a rainy day. In a few weeks his master inquired how much he had saved. "Faith none at all," said he; "it rained yesterday and it all went."

Almost Discouraged!

Such expressions are very common among those afflicted with a Cough or Cold. They have called on the doctor and he has prescribed. They have used nearly everything which has been recommended, but are no better. Hope abandons them, and they look with distrust upon all medicines. But there is an old family remedy advertised in this paper which possesses true merit. Allen's Lung Balsam will cure your Cold or Cough. Try it, and you will receive new hope and a perfect cure. It is pleasant to take and perfectly harmless. The city druggists all sell it.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility in their various forms, also as a preventive against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the FERRO PHOSPHORATED ELIXIR OF CALISAYA BARK, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic, and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

The Yard Measure.

Every one is acquainted with the nature and utility of the yard measure. It is the British standard of length, regulating all other measures, and consequently is the foundation of business transactions and professional operations of many different kinds. But its high utility is entirely dependent upon its fixed and uniform dimensions. It would be in the greatest degree inconvenient and unsatisfactory if a yard in one part of the kingdom meant something different to the measure which passed under the same name in another, or if the least variation were found in the yard measures of different parts. Hence it is necessary to have some authoritative standard by which the dimensions of the yard shall be accurately adjusted, and according to which the legality or otherwise of any measurement may be determined.

Many curious particulars are connected with the formation of this authoritative standard of the country; and few persons unacquainted with the facts would have any idea of the interest which thus attaches to so common an object as the yard measure. In our early history disputes often arose in the measurement of cloth, etc., and frauds were frequently committed. To check them Henry I. ordered a standard yard to be made and kept at Winchester, and decreed that it should be of the length of his own arm. This was a rough and ready mode of settling the matter, which presents the greatest contrast to the formation of a standard measure to the present time. The disadvantage attending it was that, in the event of the standard being lost or destroyed, it would be next to impossible to construct another of precisely the the same dimensions. To avoid any such difficulty, a scientific basis has been taken in modern times for the formation of the standard yard measure. Plainly stated, this basis is the exact length of the clock pendulum which vibrates seconds of time in the latitude of London. This may appear to some to be a simple rule, by which the standard may be determined with comparative ease; but on the contrary, it is a matter requiring the most minute and accurate research, which only astronomers and mathematicians of the highest attainments are competent to undertake.

EILERT'S EXTRACT OF TAR AND WILD CHERRY has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. Try this excellent remedy, and we are sure you will be convinced of its merits. Chronic Coughs, and even Consumptives, are cured by following the directions. Every bottle is warranted to give satisfaction. Prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago. Sold by all good druggists.

The Two Professors.

Some years ago Professors at Gotsingen, Michaelis and Kastner, were noted for learning and power in lecturing. They were rivals in popularity, and always at swords' points in personal intercourse. Michaelis was selfish and niggardly, Kastner liberal and full of sympathy, but eccentric in his methods. Their treatment of a poor student, which is one of the traditions of the university, illustrates their different characters.

The student went to Michaelis, and stating his extreme poverty, begged the privilege of attending lectures without the regular fee. The Professor hesitated, and noticing that the young man wore silver buckles in his shoes, said it was unbecoming a poor man to wear such ornaments, and he would accept them in place of the fee.

The young man took them off with a heavy heart, and went with unstrapped shoes to Kastner. He told of his experience with Michaelis, and begged a free admission to Kastner's lectures. Kastner went out a moment, and returned with an old pair of leathern breeches, saying:

"You must be in need of clothes, and you shall have these cheap."

The student protested that he needed no clothes, but the Professor insisted, and exacted a half-dollar. The student went to his room, angry at the new insult, and throwing the breeches on the floor, heard a sound as of money clinking, and found a purse of gold in the pocket. He carried it to the Professor, who refused to receive it, saying, "A bargain is a bargain. The breeches are yours, with everything belonging to them." The student was in funds for the rest of the term.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND., FEBRUARY 10, 1881.

JAMES A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN
EDITORS.

THE population of the state is 1,978,362. This includes 39,268 colored persons. There are in the state 33 Chinese, 4 Japanese and 233 Indians and half-breeds.

THE completed returns of the census show the population of DeKalb county to be 20,225, of whom 10,431 are males and 9,794 are females. But one colored person reported in the county.

THE census gives the entire number of people in the United States, as 49,369,595. If the present number in the house of representatives is allowed to remain as at present, 293, the ratio will be one to 168,407.

WE have received the initial number of a new edition of the illustrated English monthly "Chatterbox," price $1.00 per annum, including a premium to each subscriber of a steel engraving 18x24 inches. Specimen copies free. Send to Estes & Lauriat, publishers, Boston.

IN spite of all reports as to the finding of Charlie Ross, it is the belief of many that he is dead. It is more than likely that the villians who stole him made way with him soon after, and now allow the report of his discovery in different places to go uncontradicted, in order to shield themselves from detection.

ON Friday last the United States senate passed a resolution declaring that the vice president had no authority to count the electoral vote of a state, his only authority being the announcement of the vote as ascertained by the tellers. Only one, a democrat, voted in the negative. Republicans generally refrained from voting. On Saturday the same resolution passed the house.

IT is stated by one of our exchanges that a party of eastern capitalists has agreed to undertake the draining of lake Okeechobee and other lakes in Florida. If successful, this will reclaim about 12,000,000 acres of the best sugar land in the south. The tract includes what is known as the everglades, and is twice as large as the state of New Jersey, and when brought under cultivation, will produce more sugar than the United States can consume.

Old Settlers.

Pursuant to a call, a number of the executive committee of the Pioneers' Association of DeKalb county met at the office of the secretary in Auburn February 4, 1881. On motion, it was unanimously resolved that Dr. J. H. Ford, J. E. Rose, T. D. Gross, Nicholas Ensley and George C. Ralston be and are appointed an auxiliary committee of this association, and are hereby authorized, empowered and requested to devise and execute all means and measures they may deem proper and right to carry into execution the object of this association, and of making the next annual meeting a success, and especially to procure suitable grounds, speakers and music for the annual meeting, give the necessary notices by posters and otherwise, adopt a programme of exercises, appoint marshals, solicit and pay out moneys to carry out the object of such meeting, and to do any other act or acts they may deem proper in the premises.

The executive committee adjourned to meet on Friday, May 13, at 10 a. m. at the secretary's office in Auburn.

W. H. DILLS, Sec.

IN the course of some remarks in the state senate recently, Senator Brown, speaking of the late constitutional amendments, said: It is said that a registry law will protect the purity of the ballot-box; but history of elections bear out the truth of the statement that the greatest frauds and crimes have been perpetrated where a registry law has been in full and complete force. It is a bad instrument in the hands of dishonest men to defeat the will of the people at the ballot-box. The best way is to reduce the number of voters per precinct. Make the voting precinct so small that the leaders of the respective parties can ascertain who are and who are not lawful residents of the precincts. Then the vote can be counted out without requiring the board to sit up all night when honest men go to sleep and the dishonest ones stay awake to perpetrate wrong.

Some persons say that the constitutional amendments voted upon last April can be re-submitted to the people. The constitution has made no provision by which any human power can vitalize and breathe new breath of life into any constitutional amendments that have been lost. When you attempt to amend the constitution you must follow strictly not only the letter, but the spirit of the constitution. That point has been ably stated and completely sustained by the decision of the supreme court in this very case.

Dairymen's Convention.

ADAPTABILITY OF INDIANA TO BUTTER AND CHEESE DAIRYING.

There are many elements that enter into the science of successful dairying that exist in the state of nature in order that any state may be adapted to this particular branch of industry. And in my judgment Indiana has as good a combination of these elements as any state in the Union. The three fundamental elements in nature for successful agricultural pursuits are soil, water and climate.

The soil of Indiana is well adapted to any or all branches of husbandry, and there is no lack of place nor opportunity to engage in any or all branches of farming, and dairying ought not to be the exception. Indiana is the native home of the famed Kentucky blue-grass, one of the best grasses known to dairymen or stock-raisers. Successful dairying depends in a great degree upon the adaptability of the soil to the production of good, sweet and nutritious grasses. I find that Indiana is not only adapted to grasses of various kinds, both native and adopted, but grows them to perfection on the majority of her soils. Indiana is the state where the world-renowned Kentucky blue-grass was first discovered, a grass that has no superior for dairying or stock-raising. Besides this, clover and timothy are well adapted to the lighter soils, and by proper cultivation will grow to a good degree of perfection on nearly all varieties of soils in the state.

Cheese dairying is done in the warm part of the season, and depends upon a liberal supply of good, succulent food for the dairy stock. I think I have shown conclusively that in this particular Indiana has that element fully developed. But when we turn our attention to butter-making there is another feature to be looked after to make it successful to its fullest extent, that is butter-making in the winter season.

BUTTER DAIRYING.

Everyone is aware that better prices are obtained in winter than in summer for all kinds of dairy products, and especially so of good butter. This being so, is Indiana adapted to winter dairying? I will answer in the affirmative. But it requires a combination of the same elements to produce good milk at all seasons of the years. This point I amagine will be readily conceded by all, therefore it will be necessary to collect and prepare in a proper manner such grass, grain and vegetables as will produce the most and best milk during the season when the cows cannot roam over the fields and select their feed at their leisure and to their liking.

My friend, Mr. Broaddus, having the care and feed of dairy-stock under consideration, I leave the discussion of that branch to that honorable gentleman, considering him capable and willing to do the subject justice.

GOOD WATER.

The second element in the enumeration, but not second in importance to successful dairying is water. Every dairyman recognizes the importance of plenty of water in order to accomplish the best results. I am aware of an objection that has been raised against dairying in some localities because there is a lack of springs or streams for stock water. This objection can and will be overcome by energy and skill, and before the close of this association I shall endeavor to show that this objection is not well founded. There is no portion of the state where plenty of good water cannot be obtained by digging or boring to a reasonable depth, and by applying a wind engine, plenty of good water can be had for stock on any part of the farm.

of Indiana is no more variable than in those portions of the country that are called the dairy belts. We find that the former lines of demarkation of the dairy belts have been obliterated to a great extent by the introduction of science and art. We find that the hand of science has diverted some of the laws of nature from what was supposed to be their natural courses and utilized them for the advancement and benefit of mankind. Therefore let the dairymen of Indiana so arrange their plans and buildings that the roaring lion of climate may become the meek lamb, and the successful dairyman shall lead it.

THE Waterloo Press comes to us this week in its bright new patent dress. Where are your gibes now at the papers "not printed wholly in the county?" We have no doubt it will satisfy the law to advertise legal notices in such papers now. But joking apart, Brother B., we congratulate you on the change—a change which is being accepted by many of the most progressive editors of the Country.

—The time has been changed on the Saginaw road, and will be found correct in this paper.

FARM TOOLS!

Ever Shown in Northern Indiana, will be on exhibition in a few days at my old stand in Auburn, where a mammoth stock of goods in my line will fill a three-story building—the business room on the first floor being 140 feet deep, the second and third floors each 80 feet deep, besides a number of extra ware-rooms and sheds for large machinery.

My stock of Hardware consists of everything in the way of building and shelf goods, carpenters' tools, tinware, wagon and carriage goods, circular and other saws, belting, iron and wood pumps, iron, gas-pipe, scales, sash doors, blacksmiths' tools, cable chain, &c. In addition to the above we manufacture a full line of which we will sell in car-load or small lots. I also make a specialty of the

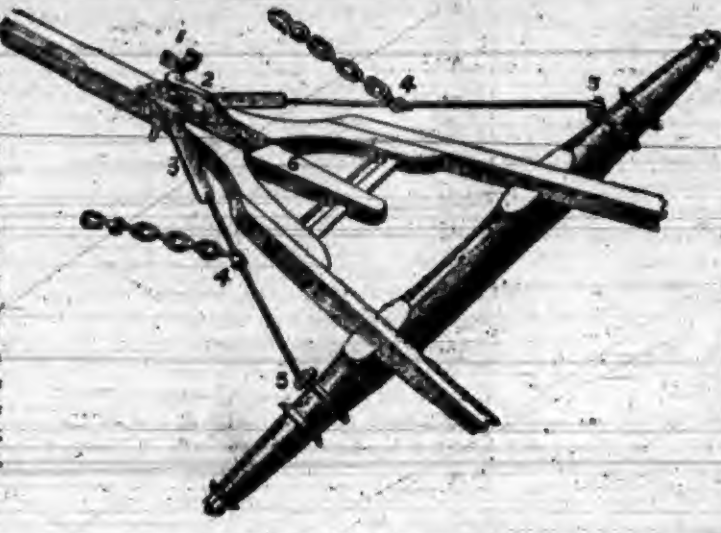
with all its improvements, making the best wagon in the market, at a price below any other first-class wagon.

THE IMPROVED WHIPPLE GUIDE.

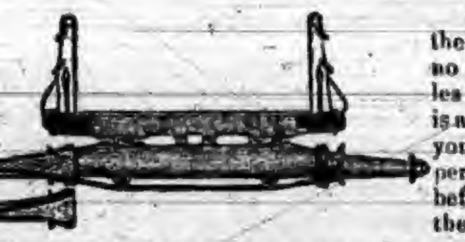
We wish to call the attention of farmers and teamsters to our improved Wrought Iron Guide. Also to our improved way of putting on the Whiffletree—doing away with bolts and nuts, which make it very unhandy.

The slot in the tongue torough which passes the wrench or draw bolt, (Fig. 1.) is two inches long by one and one-quarter wide, which gives all the side and end play necessary to make the guide work freely and easily. The Guide works independent of the tongue, throwing the whole draft to the points of the axle. (Fig. 5). See directions.



It is the greatest invention of the age with which it is almost impossible to break a tongue or rack a forward wheel, as both horses pull directly from the wheel that strikes an obstruction or goes into a rut.

It is worth ten times the price of it in saving horses' necks from galling, pounding their shoulders by the tongue swinging around and striking them, and, in nine cases out of ten, preventing or curing the horse from balking.



TRUSS ROD.—The truss rod, shown on the left, is so plain to everybody that it needs no explanation from us. A glance at the axles in the cut of the wagon shows you how it is attached, and any mathematician will tell you that a five-eighths round road of Lake Superior iron will stand the strain of 12,470 lbs. before it will separate, consequently before the axle will spring, and you then have the whole strength of the timber, same as in a cammon wagon.

I also desire to call attention to a few specialties in which we will have ready for inspection when the season opens, viz: The McCormick self-binder, the Osborn self-binder, with both wire and twine attachments included without extra cost. The Wheeler No. 6, combined. The Empire sweep or table rake. The best One-wheel Reaper in the world for $90. A good iron Mower for $62.50. The boss Malta Cultivator and numerous other good ones. Spring-tooth Harrows and a variety of plows ranging in price from $5.00 up.

Auburn Courier.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—J. J. Little, jr., left the COURIER office on Saturday last, where he has been employed for nine years without the loss of a single day, with the exception of a visit of a few weeks to Pennsylvania during the past year. Although the present proprietors are not so intimately acquainted with him as those he has longer served, yet we can truthfully say that during those long years, he has been an honest, faithful and reliable hand in the office. He has ever been strictly temperate in his habits, and never been known to do a mean or dishonest act. Jack, as he is familiarly called, leaves Auburn with a record that any young man may be proud of. He goes to Hot Springs, Arkansas, as foreman in the office of a daily paper published at that place. He takes with him the kindest regards of the COURIER and hosts of friends in Auburn for his prospects in his new home, whose highest wish need only be that his success in life may equal his merits.

—On Saturday evening last they had a fire at Pleasant Lake which burned the store buildings of Chadwick & Co., and L. I. Matson to the ground. Chadwick's stock of goods invoiced $8,500, on which there was an insurance of $4,500, and $1,000 on the building. Mr. Hoover occupied the Matson building with a stock of hardware which was invoiced at $3,000, on which there was an insurance of $1,500. Matson also had $1,000 insurance on the building. Most of the goods from the stores were saved, but in a damaged condition. Nothing was saved from either cellar. Mr. Hoover lived up-stairs over his store, and lost nearly all his household effects, on which he had no insurance. Mr. Mitchell also lived over the store, and lost a good deal of his household effects, which were uninsured. The parties intend to resume business again as soon as rooms can be procured.

—It takes Joe Ruffner to exercise horses. Dave Snyder had a horse that needed a little fresh air, and not having time to give it to him, he secured the services of Joe. Joe had the route laid out before he took his posish in the cutter, but he failed to carry out his programme. The horse had an idea, too, that Joe didn't know anything about. The result of the transaction is, that the horse "lit out" (and so did Joe), and it just took him about sixteen seconds to demolish that cutter. There wasn't one piece of it left large enough to make a respectable tooth-pick.

—There was a curious looking boot brought to Mr. Hague's shop for repair, the other day. It was manufactured in Germany. The sole was about the size and shape of an elephant's ear, and the straps, used to pull them on, would make a durable pair of tugs for a log team. There was something less than one hide (cow) to each leg, and a good survey of the brogans would make a brass monkey quake with fear. They would make an immense weapon to fill a fellows coat-tail with.

—The horse known as the depot colt, belonging to the Saginaw road, passed in his checks, so to speak, last Saturday. The colt was not worth quite as much as Goldsmithmaid or Rarus, but he was a good, faithful animal. He was let out to Tom, Dick and Harry for his feed, and our opinion of the matter is, that he got too much—feed we mean—and consequently there was no room for breath, and he passed quietly and peacefully to a land of greener pastures.

—The Auburn band will give a concert Friday evening and use the proceeds for the advancement of the organization. The new band is playing splendidly now and our citizens should encourage them. Mr. Calkins, of Corunna, will handle several different instruments that we guarantee will be worth the price of admisson. The entertainment will be held at Ensley's hall, and 25 cents pays the bill.

—There will be a dance at the Stamets House, Auburn Junction, on the 22d inst. On this date George Washington was born—the fellow who never told a lie, and chopped wood with a hatchet—and for a number of years in the past, this day has been celebrated by tripping the fantastic toe to the strains of sweet music, and why not continue?

—Sara Bernhardt, the girl who knocks the h off the rear end of her first name, and parts her surname with it in the middle, will not appear at Ft. Wayne. She don't take in any cross-road towns—no, sir, not she. Only asked the citizens of the above-named place to fork over $10,000 and furnish her with a special car. That's all.

—Last Thursday evening a party of juveniles came from Waterloo and stopped at the residence of Ed. Eldridge where they were joined by a number of our boys and girls, and the army stormed in upon the family of D. Z. Hoffman. They received a hearty welcome, and whiled away a few hours to their heart's content.

A Shocking Fratricide.

On Thursday of last week there occurred one of the most unfortunate affairs that has ever come to our notice. Near Corunna, in Fairfield township, this county, two young men named Nessel got into a quarrel about a rocking-chair, the oldest one picked up a stick of stove-wood and struck his brother on the head, hitting him near the temple, from the effects of which he died the following morning. An inquest was held over the body of the deceased, the result of which we give below. The brother who committed the rash act has given bond for his appearance at court.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

I, the undersigned coroner of DeKalb county, state of Indiana, on the fifth day of February, 1881, in Fairfield township, said county, and legally inquire and true presentment make in what manner and by whom Henry Nessel came to his death on the 5th of February, 1881, at his home in Fairfield township, said county and state, after having heard the evidence and examined the body, do find that the deceased came to his death by receiving a blow on the head with a stick of stove-wood in the hands of John Nessel, which broke his skull causing his death.

Given under my hand and seal this 5th day of February, 1881.

J. J. LATSON,
Coroner of DeKalb county, Ind.

Waterloo.

—Cisterns are full at last.

—Hotels are having a good run of business.

—Sleigh rides are all the fashion. So are frosted ears and toes.

—Miss Dell Johnson is visiting her sister at Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

—A pleasant party called on 'Squire Long, at his country home, last Friday evening.

—Gust. J. Beck is the proud "papa" of a fine boy. We will smoke about three days after date.

—Thos. Askey, of Kalamazoo, Mich., is paying his old Waterloo neighbors a visit this week.

—Archie Bowman and wife, of Cass county, Michigan, are visiting their parents and friends in Smithfield township.

—Ed. Long, the popular proprietor, of Long's Hotel, is "rounding out his fair proportions." Ed. is a standing sign of the good cheer within.

—John Peterman (the genuine rollicking John) formerly of this place, but now of Bucyrus, O., is visiting and shaking hands with his many friends here this week.

—At the meeting of the Grand Lodge 'Knights of Honor," held at Indianapolis last week, the following officers were elected, viz: W. N. Clift, G. D.; T. H. Walker, V. G. D.; J. G. Ackelmier, Assistant G. D.; Jesse Miller, G. C.; J. W. Jacob, G. R.; J. G. Godfrey, G. T.; Jas. Kenroy, G. G; S. N. Osborn, G. Guar.; Samuel Nelson, G. S.; Dr. S. T. Yancy, State Med. Ex. There are 111 lodges in Indiana in good working order, with a membership of over four thousand.

St. Joe.

—Institute at Spencerville Saturday last.

—A fire at the residence of Nelson Ulm one night last week. Loss, a summer kitchen, wood-house and some stove wood. Cause, the same old ash-box.

—The railroad company have been repairing the river bridge the past week.

—Fred. Johnson hauled to the saw-mill a short time ago a hard maple log which weighed seven thousand pounds.

—Osgood & Lyon, of Indianapolis, loaded three car-loads of dry cherry lumber at this place on Saturday. The same parties have five or six car-loads to ship.

—We frequently hear some of the friends of J. W. Dills ask why he does not come to town oftener. For their benefit we would say that we are informed that Jack is studying theology this winter, and does not have the time to spare to loaf in town.

—J. B. White, J. I. White, Thad. Meese, Isaac Meese, F. Melton, and Henry Jenkins, after an all day chase on Wednesday of last week, succeeded in bagging one little red fox, the pelt of which they sold to Mark Barney for $1,00, and dividing up they had 16 2-3 apiece, and they are all as happy as big sun flowers.

—The following was the programme at the social in Leighty's hall: Comic song, J. D. Leighty. Music by the band. Song, by W. K. Mitchell. WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE six-day go-as-you-please contest for the O'Leary belt in New York was won by John Hughes, "The Lepper," with a score of 568¾ miles, which is the best on record. O'Leary has entered him for the next Astley-belt contest in England. The other competitors who shared in the gate money, and their scores are: Albert, 558 miles; Vint, 550 miles; Krohne, 523 miles; Howard, 515¾ miles. This was an astonishing race, no less than five men covering more than 500 miles each, three of them equaling or beating Weston's great performance of 550 miles, and one of them all previous records.... Being ambitious in a judical way, Mr. Thornton offered to serve as Judge of Sullivan county, N. Y., for $1,200 per year, the salary being $2,500. This pledge to taxpayers in advance of election is held by the courts to be a bribe, and he will not be allowed to take his seat on the bench....Selina Peters, aged 12, was killed, and several companions seriously injured, while coasting at Bayside, N. J.

THE WEST.

THE farmers of California are endeavoring to dispose of their wheat at a remunerative price. All the ships to arrive for three months are under charter, and negotiations with the Central and Southern Pacific roads have not resulted satisfactorily. Farmers cannot sell their grain at present rates without loss, and the banks cannot foreclose loans made without creating a panic.... The picture-frame factory of Sammons, Clark & Co., on South Clinton street, in Chicago, has been burned. The loss is estimated at $27,000. ....Four brick blocks at South Bend, Ind., have been almost destroyed by fire, the loss being estimated at $30,000.

ALBERT P. and Charles E. Talbott have been convicted and sentenced to death at Maryville, Mo., for having, in September last, murdered their own father, who, at that time, was the editor of a Greenback paper at Maryville....During the year 1880, 10,462 persons died in Chicago, of whom 7,592 were born in the United States, 1,069 in Germany, and 786 in Ireland. The mortality among the infants was disproportionately large—there were 3,147 deaths of children under 1 year. The death-rate for the year was 20.79 per 1,000 inhabitants, while in 1879 it was only 18.01.... California has been visited by the heaviest rain experienced since 1861. It spread along nearly the whole Pacific coast, and has done immense damage at Benecia, Napa and Santa Cruz.... Gen. John Love, of Indianapolis, a gallant officer in the Mexican war and during the Rebellion, died at Indianapolis of heart disease. ....Under the stimulus of a bounty of $65, wolf hunting is the chief amusement at Palmyra, Wis....Stock men from the ranges in Western Nebraska report great loss of cattle from storms and snow.

The property of the company in California is assessed at $36,000,000 under the new constitution, but no taxes have been paid.

HENRY LAMB, the oldest person in Indiana, who claimed to have been a body servant to Gen. Mercer during the Revolutionary war, died at Mount Vernon, at the estimated age of 123 years.

THE SOUTH.

MOSES TWIGGS was hanged at Waynesboro, Ga., while his brother Frank, condemned for the same crime, was respited for thirty days....The car shops of the Jacksonville, Pensacola and Mobile railroad, at Tallahassee, Fla., were destroyed by fire. The loss was about $35,000....Flames swept away the Young Men's Christian Association building and twelve stores at West Point, Ga.

A JURY has decided that Tom Buford, who shot and killed Judge Elliott, of the Kentucky Court of Appeals, for deciding a case against him, was insane at the time of the murder.

TOM BUFORD has gone to the Insane Asylum at Anchorage, Ky., Judge Jackson declining to be held responsible for his acts if set free.

THREE children of Rev. Manning Hunter (colored), in Sumter county, S.C., were burned to death in a fire caused by a kerosene lamp exploding. The father was away preaching, and the mother was also absent....The village of Plymouth, in North Carolina, was destroyed by fire. Only a freight warehouse and one store escaped the flames.

WILEY EMBREY, a respected farmer of Butler county, Ky., and six of his children were burned to death, Mrs. Embrey and daughter escaping. The fire broke out in an upper room after the family had retired.

THREE men attempted to outrage Miss Georgia Hamblet, a young and highly-accomplished woman of Augusta, Ark. Her screams brought assistance before the brutes could accomplish their designs. They were captured and jailed. Subsequently a mob gathered, took them from prison and hanged them to a tree on the bank of the river. The ghastly work was completed by flinging the dead bodies into the river. The murdered men are reported to be the sons of wealthy planters of Monroe county.

WASHINGTON.

THE Internal Revenue Committee of the House have agreed to report to the House a bill taking the tax off savings-banks and national-bank deposits, bank capital, matches, patent medicines and bank checks. This will make a total reduction of $10,639,305 in the revenue.

THE Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends the amendment of the laws to provide that in all entries of lands, except for mining purposes and town sites, settlers may deposit moneys to have surveys made. This action is intended to cover an unsurveyed parallelogram which is now the refuge of the worst class of outlaws, and is not within the limits of any State or Territory. It is said to be one of the finest regions in the West, and lies north of Texas, between Indian Territory and New Mexico.....The President-elect will take up his permanent residence in Washington about Feb. 15.

APPEARANCES indicate the failure of the Funding bill, so far as this session of Congress is concerned, and Gen. Garfield's friends declare that in such a contingency he will call an extra session....The receipts of the Patent Office for the year ending Dec. 31, 1880, were $749,685, and the expenditures $538,865. GENERAL.

CLEOPHAS LACHANCE, a Canadian, who killed Miss Desilet for resenting his addresses, was hanged at Arthabaskaville, Quebec. The murderer walked to the scaffold without coat or hat, and shiveringly awaited execution. His writhings were terrible, and blood and water issued from his mouth....The steamer Rochester, from Boston for London, lost 548 head of cattle on her passage.

AMONG the most destructive fires may be noted by the burning of Trow & Co's flouring-mill, at Madison, Ind., the finest in that State, the loss being $120,000; the Down-Town club rooms, No. 52 Pine street, New York; Adams' cotton mill at Bainbridge, Ga.; a grain storehouse at Orangeville, Ont.; four stores at Johnstown, New York; and four carloads of cotton at McComb City, Miss....The ex-Presidential fund being raised by the New York Times amounts to $225,000, which will probably be given to Grant outright. Vanderbilt, Gould, Mackay, and ex-Gov. Morgan contributed $25,000 each.

THE sudden spread of small-pox in New York causes alarm among the health authorities. There are over sixty cases under treatment at the hospital on Randall's island. The black small-pox, which is supposed to have been introduced by Mennonite immigrants, continues its ravages at Jefferson, Dakota, which has been quarantined for over a month, thirty-two deaths having occurred. Fifty-two patients are under treatment in Chicago.... At New Westminster, British Columbia, four half-breeds were hanged for the murder of John Usher, one of a party who sought their arrest for stealing horses. On the day following they killed John Kelly. About two weeks ago the eldest of the prisoners tried to negotiate with the hangman to use rotten ropes, so that an escape might be possible.

POLITICAL.

THE Washington Post is authority for the statement that Gen. Sherman has so conducted himself as to gain the ill-will of the President, Gen. Grant, Gen. Sheridan, and the friends of Gen. McDowell....The students of the University of Michigan have formed a Civil-Service Club.

THE dead-lock in the election of State officers was ended in the Tennessee Legislature, by the election of Capt. James Nolan, Republican, Comptroller, and ex-Congressman D. A. Nunn, Republican, Secretary of State, four Low-Tax Democrats having gone over to them, and made their election barely possible.

THE Woman's National Anti-Polygamy Society met at Salt Lake City and passed resolutions urging Congress to sustain Gov. Murray in unseating Cannon.

THE Western Union Telegraph Company announces that it has taken possession of the properties and privileges of the American Union and Atlantic and Pacific Companies.... A dispatch from Victoria, B. C., says the three MacLeans and Hare were hanged at New Westminster for the murder of Constable Usher and a settler named James Kelly, in December, 1879.

FOREIGN.

A MEETING held by 20,000 miners at Leigh, England, was succeeded by a desperate riot, in which the Hussars charged upon the mob, injuring several persons....Skobeleff has been appointed General of Infantry, and decorated with the Order of St. George, in recognition of his services in the Turcoman campaign....Reed, Leppard & Co., coffee merchants of Frankfort, Germany, have failed. Further troubles in the coffee trade are reported from Hamburg.

PLACARDS have been posted in the Londonderry district of Ireland urging the people not to revolt, as the time has not yet come. The Land League denounces them as a fraud....Twelve fishing smacks have been wrecked in the Bay of Biscay, and forty-six men drowned.... The terms which Chili wants to impose on Peru and Bolivia as the price of peace are severe. They include the cession of some Peruvian territory; the surrender of the Peruvian and Bolivian fleets; the payment of an indemnity of $37,000,000, of which Peru is asked to pay $20,000,000 and Bolivia $16,000,000. The Chilians propose to occupy Callao, and to work the Peruvian copper and saltpeter mines until the indemnity is paid.

THE authorities evidently expect something unusual in Ireland, and extraordinary precautions are being taken. Arrangements have been made to increase the number of mounted constabulary at forty-seven stations in the outlying districts of the south and west, and mounted men will be attached to the stations to insure communication in case the telegraph wires should be cut.

THE entire revenue of Turkey is being absorbed in military preparations, and not even salaries will be paid until April.

GLADSTONE'S residence in London is guarded night and day by policemen, and he is followed to the House of Commons by an officer.

MICHAEL DAVITT, Secretary of the Land League, was arrested at Dublin on the 3d inst., for violation of the conditions of his ticket-of-leave. The arrest caused intense excitement throughout Ireland. In the British House of Commons, Vernon Harcourt refused to inform Parnell what conditions of his ticket-of-leave Davitt had violated to cause his arrest, the Irish members shouting "Shame!" and the others cheering. The Speaker refused to hear John Dillon, who continued to talk, and a motion for his suspension was adopted, and he was forcibly removed by the Sergeant-at-Arms. When Gladstone rose to speak, O'Donohue moved to adjourn. Parnell proposed that Gladstone be no longer heard, whereupon the former's suspension was moved and carried, the vote being 405 to 7. On his refusing to leave he was escorted out by six officers, the Home-Rulers waving their hats. Finnigan was then suspended, and, as twenty-seven Home-Rulers refused to vote, they were suspended in a body and removed singly by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Gladstone then moved that the Coercion bill be declared urgent, which was carried.... Thirteen lives were lost by the sinking of an English steamer bound from Balbao to Middlesboro.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

In the United States Senate, a bill was reported for the suppression of contagious diseases in domestic animals, on Friday, Jan. 28. The morning hour was filled by discussion on the Chicago Lake Front bill, Messrs. Davis and Edmunds being the chief contestants. Mr. Blaine introduced a bill to establish a United States Ocean Mail Service and revive foreign commerce by American steamships. In the debate on the Indian land bill, Mr. Morgan charged the Secretary of the Interior with withholding information due to the Senate. Mr. Dawes introduced a bill to establish the rights of the Poncas and to settle their affairs in accordance with the recommendation made by the recent Investigating Commission. Mr. Kernan introduced a bill to legalize the collection of taxes on account of shares of national banks. Mr. Wallace introduced a joint resolution, proposing a constitutional amendment, according to which the President and Vice President should be elected by direct vote of the people of the various districts. Each State is to have as many districts as it has members of Congress and Senators; each district to have one vote; the vote to be canvassed by a Board of State Canvassers, consisting of the Governor, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and Secretary of State. The return is then to be made to the Speaker of the House, and to be conclusive proof of the result. The votes are to be counted by Congress in joint convention, and a plurality vote to elect. In the House, Mr. Speer gave notice that after two hours' debate on Saturday on the contested seat of Yeates vs. Martin he would call the previous question. A resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of State for information in regard to the Halifax award. A lively debate took place on a bill to place Mark Walker, who had been dismissed for drunkenness, on the retired list of the army. Mr. Maginnis charged that the findings of the court-martial had reached the President in one of his spasms of reform. A bill for the relief of the widow of Capt. Page, of the navy, an officer who resigned at the outbreak of the war, caused a bitter political debate, participated in by Messrs. Conger, Cox, Bragg, Hooker, Hawley and Reed. No action was reached.

In the United States Senate, on Saturday, the 29th ult., Mr. Lamar presented the credentials of James Z. George, of Mississippi. Mr. Ingalls' resolution for counting the vote in the Senate chamber was referred to the Committee on the Electoral Count. After considerable debate, the Chicago Lake-Front bill was passed. The Indian Land bill came up, and was amended to provide for the education of fifty copper-colored lads at the Agricultural College at Fort Collins, Col., and to grant to each head of a family one section of land for grazing purposes. In the House, the day was monopolized by the North Carolina contested case of Yeates vs. Martin, the former being admitted. Mr. De La Matyr presented a petition, with 22,000 signatures, asking that encroachments by white settlers on Indian reservations be prevented.

In the United States Senate, on the morning of Monday, Feb. 1, Mr. Baldwin, of Michigan, took his seat, and the credentials of Mr. Conger were presented. Mr. McPherson introduced a bill appropriating $100,000 to fit out a war vessel to search for the steamer Jeannette. Mr. Dawes, commenting upon the killing of Big Snake, the Ponca chief, by white soldiers, presented a protest from Standing Bear and others against the sale of the old reservations. Senator Logan defended Secretary Schurz in this matter. The severalty bill was taken up, and an amendment adopted to allow allotments to be taken by individual members of a tribe which does not consent to take lands. Mr. Voorhees introduced a bill to pension the survivors of the battle of Tippecanoe. In the House, Mr. O'Reilly presented a bill providing that no telegraph company shall charge more for messages than the rates of the American Union Company at the commencement of this year. Mr. Springer put forward his postal telegraph measure. A bill was passed to enable the Utah Northern Railroad Company to construct branches in Utah, Idaho and Montana. Among the bills introduced was one to prevent food adulteration; one to compensate railway mail clerks for injuries received while on duty; one providing that two members of a firm cannot serve as Directors of the same national bank; that no money-broker, private banker or Director in any private banking house or savings bank shall serve as Director of a national bank in the same city as that in which the private bank or savings institution with which he is connected is situated; and that when a Director has less than ten shares of the stock of the bank he becomes disqualified, and cannot continue to serve. The Iowa contested-election cases were settled in favor of Messrs. Sapp and Carpenter, the contestees. At a caucus of Democratic Senators it was resolved not to consent to the principle established by the Ingalls resolution, but to hold a continuous session to force the passage of a resolution that the Vice President has no constitutional authority to count electoral votes.

Mr. Morgan reported from the Electoral Committee, on Tuesday, Feb. 1, as a substitute for Mr. Ingalls' resolution on that subject, the concurrent resolution adopted by the Democratic caucus. It was laid on the table to be printed. Consideration of the case of Big Snake, the Ponca chief who was killed while resisting arrest, was resumed. Mr. Kirkwood replied to the remarks made by Mr. Dawes on Monday, and defended the Indian Agent and the Interior Department from the charges preferred by that Senator. Mr. Dawes reiterated his previous statements, and the subject was dropped. Gen. Logan gave notice that he would next day call up the bill placing Gen. Grant upon the retired list of the army. The Pension Appropriation bill was under consideration. Two amendments were adopted. One limits the fee of the examining surgeon to $1, and the other provides that the money paid inmates of Soldiers' Homes shall be paid through the Treasurer of these institutions. The District of Columbia bill occupied the attention of the House of Representatives. No action was taken.

Senator Cockrell introduced a bill in the Senate on Wednesday, Feb. 2, providing for an appropriation of $5,000 for the publication of a descriptive catalogue of all public documents from July 4, 1776, to date. A message was received from the President transmitting the report of the special Ponca commission and outlining an Indian policy for the future. Mr. McPherson made a favorable report on the bill to appropriate $100,000 to equip a vessel to search for the Jeannette in the Arctic regions. The Morgan electoral-count resolutions occupied a large portion of the day, and were finally adopted. The House passed the District of Columbia appropriation. The Legislative appropriation, setting aside $17,181,000, was reported favorably. The Speaker presented a message from the President, accompanied by a recommendation from the Secretary of the Navy, that $200,000 be appropriated for naval stations on the American isthmus. The Apportionment bill coming up, Mr. Cox entertained the House with flowery tributes to our institutions and our progress.

The concurrent resolution on the Electoral count, introduced by Senator Morgan on the 14th of June of last year, was discussed in the Senate on Thursday, Feb. 3. The resolution declares that the President of the Senate is not invested by the constitution with the right to count the votes of Electors for President and Vice President of the United States. Senator Edmunds was opposed to the consideration of the resolution at the present time, and moved to lay it on the table, which was negatived by a vote of 22 to 22. Hoar, Windom, Booth and Conkling were opposed to the consideration of the question, as important and pressing business awaited the action of the Senate. During the discussion Conkling said he agreed with Morgan that the Vice President had no power in the matter of the count, and that the Senate and House had quasi-judicial authority over it. Senator Edmunds moved an amendment to the effect that neither the Senate, House nor President of the Senate were invested by the constitution with the power to make the count, but the amendment was rejected by a party vote of 28 to 18. The Republicans then absented themselves to prevent a quorum, and there was no final action on the resolution. The House took up the Apportionment bill. Mr. Cox offered an amendment fixing the number of Representatives at 307, while Mr. Sherwin, of the Census Committee, favored 301. The debate then assumed a political cast. Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky, declared that the second section of the Fourteenth amendment could not be practically enforced by legislation. Mr. White denied that there was a property qualification in force in Pennsylvania. The bill went over without action. Mr. King introduced a bill appropriating $20,000 for the distribution of cane seed. The Indian appropriation was reported with the Senate amendments, which were agreed to. The River and Harbor bill, which appropriates about $11,000,000, was reported.

Life's Drawbacks.

The rich man of 1805 would generally be thought to be only moderately well off in 1881. Wealth has grown with the facilities for its production, and we now reckon by hundreds of thousands instead of tens of thousands. But, with all this increased capacity for toil and accumulation, the human system remains just where it was. The millionaire can eat and drink no more on the average than the poor man. If he transgresses the laws of digestion he suffers as much as would the pauper. If machinery, and railroads, and telegraphs have saved time and the waste of muscle, they have greatly increased the wear and tear of nerves. We understand hygiene better than our ancestors, and so there are fewer deaths from fevers and epidemics. The average duration of life has increased thereby. Yet by way of unpleasant compensation, the mortality from brain, heart and kidney troubles is growing, and a premature and often sudden death is likely to be the fate of the enterprising man of business. Worry kills and so does over stagnation. The latter was the danger of the slow old times, while the former is the haunting specter of to-day. Safety lies in the calm middle way.

Comparatively few people have the courage or the opportunity to decline following the multitude, even when they know that the multitude is going wrong. Yet no one has more than one life to live, and he should use it to the best advantage. A fair support, with intervals of rest, and a proper attention to morals and refinements, is to be preferred to wealth gained by the sacrifice of every comfort, liable to be lost in the first financial storm, and perhaps not gained at all. Still the majority does not so conclude. Everything goes with a rush. Even the Sunday leisure of a former day is often deemed wasteful, though we can now do as much in six days as our fathers did in thirty. Hardly any one is satisfied to move on calmly and regularly. There has been no modification of natural laws in behalf of the supposed exigencies of the period.

Suicide by overwork is as sure and often as speedy as by dissipation, and the most successful toilers, if they do not actually die at once, are often unfitted for the enjoyment of wealth before they have gained it. There may be a feverish enjoyment in speculation and rapid acquisition, but there is none of the tranquil happiness of moderation, and the reaction when disaster comes is fearful.

There is the same restlessness in social spheres as in financial. Almost every one is striving and pushing, not with commendable ambition only, but with impetuous and selfish energy. Of course there are exceptions to the rule, but we have not misrepresented the characteristics of the day. It may not be possible to weigh the aggregate of happiness at present existing with that of any earlier period, for the growth of knowledge and the increased prevalence of philanthropic ideas should also be taken into account. Yet it may safely be affirmed that old sources of misery not only exist, but have been joined by new ones, and that a multitude of inventions has brought with it a multitude of anxieties.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Architecture in America.

In various parts of America there is evidence of the presence of good architects, and even of good decorative artists. Frank Furness has made himself felt at Philadelphia, Lyman Silsbee at Syracuse, and Robert Peabody in and around Boston. [By the way, how happens it that these leading architects should all be sons of Unitarian clergymen?] But generally the noble public buildings in America put to shame the private residences. The chief want appears to be a greater attention to household architecture. In and around both Cincinnati and St. Louis I saw a large number of houses that might have been made beautiful, and at the same time cost a third less than the expense evidently incurred. It does not seem to be realized in many American cities that it is a large part of the art of a trained architect to save money for his employer. If any one will stop long enough in the city of Syracuse, N. Y., to take a stroll or drive through its streets, especially James street (which, notwithstanding its plebeian name, is one of the prettiest streets in the world), he will see more beautiful homes than can be picked out from Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis all together. Yet Syracuse has only 60,000 inhabitants, and few of them wealthy, according to the standard of the three more western cities I have named. But Syracuse happens to have young architects who have studied their art and mystery amid the most beautiful houses and villas of Europe; they have learned that the best features of these can be combined for yet more beautiful effects; and they have learned that taste and skill go farther than money toward the construction of a beautiful residence.—Moncure D. Conway's London letter to Cincinnati Commercial.

WENDELL PHILLIPS says that no reform, moral or intellectual, ever came down from the upper classes of society. "Each and all," says he, "come up from the protest of martyr and victim."

A YEAR'S FAILURES.

The tables indicate that the mercantile failures in the United States, during the year 1880, were in number 4,735, with liabilities aggregating nearly $66,000,000. The failures for 1879 were in number 6,658, with liabilities of $98,000,000. The decrease, therefore, for the past year is 1,923 in number, and in liabilities $27,000,000, thus showing an improvement equal to 40 per cent. in number, and a saving in losses by bad debts in the same proportion. While the comparison of the last year with the previous one is so extremely favorable, the comparison of 1880 with 1878 is even more remarkable. In 1878 the failures numbered 10,478, while in 1880 they numbered only 4,735, indicating a lessened number of casualties by 5,743, equivalent to nearly 60 per cent. But in the amount of liabilities the change for the better is even greater, for in 1878 the indebtedness of those who failed was $234,000,000, while in 1880 it did not reach $66,000,000, a lessened amount by $168,000,000. When it is remembered that the number of persons now engaged in business as compared with 1878 is nearly 10 per cent. greater, and that the extent of the transactions during the past year at least trebled those of 1878, the significance of the lessened number of failures and the reduced loss by this cause will be apprehended.

The following table shows the failures for twenty-four years:

Year.	Failures.	Amount of Liabilities.
1857	4,932	$291,750,000
1858	4,225	95,749,000

Negro Songs.

Mr. Hughes, referring to the negro song of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," which he heard in Tennessee, and the words of the same, which he sent to the London Spectator, adds: "This, sir, I think you will agree with me, though precious, is obviously a fragment only." The fact is that all negro songs are in some sense "fragments," for they are never exactly complete—that is, there is no regular beginning nor end to them, but, with the perpetually recurring refrain of the chorus, the solo lines can be, and are, stretched out to suit the fancy of the singer. The music of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," is given in several publications of the "jubilee" order, but the words are never twice alike. There is a scrap of negro ditty, probably more thoroughly Ethiopian than anything now to be heard in the United States, quoted in Michael Scott's story of "Tom Cringle's Log," as follows:

> " Fader was a Gorramantee,
> Modder was a Mingo;
> Black pickaniny buora wantee,
> So dem sell-a me Peter, by Jingo,
> Jiggery, Jiggery, Jiggery."

This has the true ring of heathenism, while most of the "songs of color" which we hear are intended as a religious exercises.—Inter-Ocean.

Impromptu Ingenuity.

A striking instance of ingenuity in taking advantage of the resources of nature in an emergency is found in Sir Samuel Baker's account of his travels in Abyssinia. His stock of soap had become exhausted; and as he possessed abundance of various kinds of fat, including that of elephants, hippopotami, lions and rhinoceros, he determined to convert a quantity of the grease into soap. For this purpose he required both potash and lime; and how were these to be obtained? The neglock tree, he found, was exceptionally rich in potash; he therefore burned a large quantity, and made a strong lye with the ashes, which he concentrated by boiling. There was no limestone; but the river produced a plentiful supply of oyster shells, which, if burned, produce excellent lime. What was next wanted was a kiln in which to burn the shells, and this he constructed out of one of those great ant hills, which rise to ten feet high, common to these valleys, and which possess a very hard external crust. Two natives hollowed out one of those hills; a proper draught hole was made below from the outside; it was loaded with wood, and filled with some six bushels of oyster shells, which were again covered with fuel; and after burning twenty-four hours a supply of excellent lime was obtained. Then commenced his soap boiling, which was effected in a large copper pot of Egyptian manufacture. The ingredients of potash, lime and fat were then carefully mixed; and after boiling ten hours, and having been constantly stirred, he obtained excellent soap, of which he had in all about forty pounds weight.

PRIMEVAL MAN.

His Habits and Appearance Described by Prof. Boyd Dawkins.

At a meeting of the British Association, Prof. Boyd Dawkins lectured upon "Primeval Man." Prof. Dawkins, generalizing from the distribution of the animal remains found in the early tertiary periods, concluded that Europe was then joined to Africa. The evidence, found in the midpliocene period of the existence of the river-drift hunter in France, Italy, Spain, Greece, North Africa, and also in India, brought us, in his opinion, face to face in that period with the primitive condition of human culture on which, in all probability, all progress had been based. The absence of geographical limitations already referred to would account for the freedom with which the hunter passed to and fro. Subsequently, in the cave-men he found the successors of the river-drift huntermen of much higher type. He gave their habits the following hypothetical description: They dressed themselves in skins and wore gloves not unlike those worn at the present time. They wore necklaces and armlets, and probably pierced their ears for the reception of ear-rings for ornamentation. They used red raddle, and indeed some of the practices of the present time might be looked upon distinctly as being survivals. The skins with which they clothed themselves they sewed together with bone needles, and, from the sketches they had left behind on bones and pieces of skin and the like, it appeared that they were able to form a distinct idea of the creatures which they hunted, the representations thus left probably being the trophies of the chase. They were fowlers and fishermen, and it was evident from the figures of animals which had been discovered that the hunters of these times had great facilities in representing forms of animals on bone, but their attempts at representing the human form were rude. They had also left behind them evidence of the art of sculpture. They were ignorant of metals. They had no domestic animals. Apparently they were not in the habit of burying their dead. We were not aware of what sort of physique they had, but there was reason to believe they were most closely related to the Esquimaux. They were wholly different from the river-drift men. The river-drift man was in a state of primeval savagery; the cave man was of a higher type, but in his turn was wholly inferior to the farmer, herdsman and merchant who followed him. We had this proof of the development of the human race in times before history began, and it occurred to him they had no reason for fixing any limit as to where progress would end, his opinion being that man would go on increasing in knowledge and improving in the arts of civilization until in perhaps not a very remote tenure he would be as superior to the men of 1880 as we were superior to the early hunters and cave men.

Favorite Beverages.

I'll take a light drink, said the gasman. Give me something mild, said the timid man. Give me a straight drink, said the soldier. Crooked whisky for me, said the hunchback. Let me have something with body in it, said the undertaker. I'll take a Bourbon sour, said the misanthrope. Give me a brandy smash, said the hoodlum. I'll take a cocktail, said the poultry dealer. Give me a punch, said the horse-car conductor. I'll take a cobbler, said the shoemaker. Give me a schooner, said the sailor. I'll try a pony, said the horse-jockey. I'll take some bitters in mine, said the disappointed lover. Set 'em up again, said the proprietor of the bowling-alley.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1881.

SENATOR-ELECT MILLER, of California, lost an eye in the fight at Liberty Gap, Tenn.

CHURCH-DEBT-RAISER KIMBALL has visited 160 churches and raised directly and indirectly $11,000,000 from church members.

GEN. WINFIELD S. HANCOCK has been elected President of the National Rifle Association for the ensuing year. He has signified his acceptance.

ACCORDING to the recent census, Switzerland possesses a population of 2,890,000—that is, 120,000 more than in 1877, when the last census was taken.

GEORGE F. DALTON knocked over an usher in St. Peter's Catholic Church, in Brooklyn, for refusing to accept a penny thrown into the contribution-box by his wife. He cheerfully paid a fine of $25

A TEXAS paper reports the following as the number of Texas cattle driven north to Kansas and other Northern States and Territories during 1880 and previous years:

THE richest man in Boston is said to be Mr. Sears, who has an estate taxed at $3,085,000. The next-richest man is Mr. Moses Williams, who has accumulated $2,083,000 for taxation, and who, although past 90, is a vigorous man, and walks to his place of business every pleasant day. Each estate would sell for three or four times the assessment for taxation.

R. L. STUART, the sugar millionaire, of New York, intends soon to build a splendid dwelling house on Fifth avenue, at the north corner of Sixty-eighth street. The front will extend 200 feet along Fifth avenue; the side on Sixty-eighth street will measure 100 feet, and the garden behind the house, also bounded by the same street, will extend 150 feet further back.

"IT is a curious thing," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "that three of the most expressive words in the English language should have been added to it, if not by Irishmen, at least by men belonging by residence or descent to the West of Ireland. To burke, to lynch and to Boycott have all taken their places, if not exactly in classical literature, at least in the vernacular of the English-speaking race all over the world."

A CASE recalling the Berners street hoax in London, but unquestionably the result of mere accident, though none the less vexatious at the time, occurred lately in New York city. About 10 a.m. a very respectable foreigner arrived, who produced an advertisement cut from a morning paper, for a cook, the advertisement being headed with the address of the house visited. He was assured that it was a mistake, and went his way, but only to be followed by a dozen more persons. The moral is: Write your advertisements plainly.

IT is remarkable that the working classes of Germany have taken little part in the anti-Jewish agitation. At a stormy meeting in Berlin the other day, in which the Jews were denounced as a people "unfit to mix with other races," a workman had the courage to state that "after seventeen years' hard work in Berlin, although a Christian himself, his experience was that Jewish employers had, as a rule, treated him far better than his co-religionists." He accordingly proposed a resolution "in favor of religious liberty." The result was that the meeting hissed him and turned him out."

A DISPATCH from Jacksonville, Fla., says: A contract has just been agreed upon between the authorities of Florida and J. C. Coryel, of Jacksonville, and A. B. Linderman, representing capitalists of Philadelphia and the Pacific coast, to drain Lake Okeechobee, in South Florida. If the scheme is carried out 12,000,000 acres of the best sugar land in the world will be reclaimed. The territory reclaimed will include the celebrated Everglades, and will be in extent twice as large as the state of New Jersey. This is the largest contract on record, and when completed Florida can produce more sugar than the United States now consumes.

THE HON. A. H. Stephens received a telegram the other day, while he was at the Capitol, announcing that his old servant, Harry Stephens, was dead. Harry has been the major-domo of "Liberty Hall," Mr. Stephens' residence, for thirty years. Mr. Stephens bought him in 1851, and placed him in charge of all his affairs at his home. Harry was Mr. Stephens' body-servant during all that time, until about five years ago, when his present body servant, Aleck Kent, was secured in that capacity. Harry was well known by all habitues of Washington, before and since the war, who knew Mr. Stephens. The death of Harry has caused great grief to Mr. Stephens, and he deplores his death very much. The deceased was worth $20,000 in his own right.

CHANGES in the Supreme Court of the United States are more rapid than the life tenure of the nine Judges would seem to suggest. Messrs. Chase, Swayne, Davis, Miller and Field were appointed by Lincoln. Of these, Chase is dead, and Davis and Swayne have resigned. Clifford was appointed by Buchanan, and will soon pass away. There are but three Grant appointments upon the bench, and these are Waite, Bradley and Hunt. The latter has been physically incapacitated for a long time, but does not resign. The President had reason to believe that he would retire, and sent for Senator Edmunds to offer him the place. The Senator took the matter under advisement and, having consulted the Green Mountaineers as to the advisability of his quitting the Senate for the bench, informed the President that he would accept. Much to his chagrin Mr. Hayes found he was without Judge Hunt's resignation. The explanation is that Conkling, having got wind of Hunt's purpose, dissuaded him from it, in the hope that he would be sufficiently potent with Hayes' successor to influence the appointment to Hunt's place. Of the present Justices Hayes has had the appointment of Harlan, Woods and Matthews.

JUDGE NOAH SWAYNE, the retiring Justice of the United States Supreme Court, is of Quaker descent, and was born in Culpepper county, Va., Dec. 27, 1804. He began life as clerk in an apothecary shop, but studied law at Warrenton when quite a youth, and was admitted to the bar at Coshocton, Ohio, in 1824. He was elected to the Ohio Legislature in 1829, and again in 1830 and 1836, and was United States District Attorney in 1839. In 1834 he was chosen Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, but declined the office. He was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court by President Lincoln in 1861. The principal matter of public concern with which his name has been associated was the Legal Tender acts. He joined with the majority of the reorganized court in affirming the constitutionality of these acts. His name will also be linked with his late decision which affirmed in a similar manner the constitutionality of the income tax, his opinion being that such a tax is not "direct" within the meaning of the constitution, and hence that it need not be apportioned among the States in proportion to the population. Justice Swayne is very genial, and is happy in an interesting family of children. He married Miss Wager, an accomplished Virginia lady, who was heiress to a large number of slaves. These were immediately set free. This act was in keeping with the generous nature of the man—a largeness of nature that wins him a warm and popular regard from all who know him.

An Old Book.

An interesting glimpse into our early history is afforded by an old worm-eaten gazateer which was found lately in a private library.

It was issued in the first of this century, by J. Bain, of Baltimore. Geographical information is oddly mingled with scientific facts, and J. Bain's vehement opinions concerning the British, and the (then) "late war" with them, obtrude in every page. Those "ruthless invaders," he assures us, "exhibited a barbaric cruelty unequaled since the days of the Saracens and Vandals."

Philadelphia was then "the metropolis of the country." Washington could "boast of four churches, a gaol and a hotel." Boston had twenty-three churches. It had, also, "a fine row of warehouses on the north side of the pier, and a handsome street running from the pier to the town-house."

The Eldorado for emigrants was "The Ohio," which was then the far West. Long lines of high, canvas-covered wagons took their way over the Alleghany Mountains, drawn by eight horses, each usually decorated with an array of bells; the wife, children, chairs, plow, and a feather-bed were piled up in the wagon; underneath it ran the watch-dog; the father and oldest boy walked alongside, with their rifles slung on their backs.

The journey occupied two months or more, which the emigrant of the present makes in twenty-four hours. When the squatter was once settled, however, in his cabin, his bill of fare was as luxurious as that of a city gourmand nowadays. Bear's meat, venison, pheasant, and wild turkeys were the pieces-de-resistance of his daily dinner, while wild honey, golden trout, and partridges filled the smaller dishes.

It is a useful study to compare the lives and privations of our ancestors who conquered the grim forests of the New World with our own; the more useful because we find that with all their struggles they had, as a rule, more tranquil, slower, longer lives than our own. This was because they were not fevered by the modern thirst for riches and social distinction which now maddens even the poorest emigrant. Crops and clothes enough for the year to come, and a woods-preaching or a house-raising now and then satisfied their desires.

It was a poor, meager life, according to our more civilized notions; but it had in it a content which we have universally lost out of our own household furniture.—Youths' Companion.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

WOMEN physicians practiced their profession in Egypt over 3,000 years ago, and then, as now, there were medical schools that adopted the coeducation plan.

THE tallest trees in the world are in Australia. A fallen tree in Gippsland measured 435 feet from the root to the highest point of the branches. Another, standing in the Dundenong district in Victoria, is estimated to be 450 feet from the ground to the top.

THE chamois, bounding over the mountain, are indebted in no small degree to a species of pheasants. The bird acts as a sentinel; for as soon as it gets sight of a man it whistles—upon hearing which the chamois, knowing the hunters to be near, sets out at full speed.

THE twinkling of the stars is generally admitted to be due to moisture in the upper air. M. Montigny, in a paper published in Les Modes, holds that a very pronounced twinkling of the stars indicates either commotion in the upper regions of the atmosphere or a sudden fall of temperature there, thus denoting the conditions of an early appearance of bad weather.

WHEN a strong east wind blows over the Sea of Azoy the waters retire in a remarkable manner, and the people living on one shore can cross dry-shod to the other. But this hazardous journey sometimes involves the fate of Pharaoh, for a sudden change of wind will bring the water quickly back to its usual place, and travelers are frequently swallowed up by the fickle waves.

IT is on record that in the year 1531 a poor old man, residing in Tarentum, near Naples, was the subject of a very marvelous change at the age of nearly 90. His skin peeled off, it is said, and a new, soft and smooth skin supplied its place; his muscles again became plump and yielding; the wrinkles disappeared from his face, and the white hairs from his head; the fresh complexion of youth replaced the one, and dark, curly locks the other. Fifty years later he again became decrepit with a second age; and he died after he had passed his 150th year!

THE following problem is given to some new beginner in arithmetic to solve: The English language has one "t" and four substitutes for it, namely, et as in "eteisiphon," pt as in "ptisan," phth as in "phthisic," th as in "Thomas." It also has "a" and ten substitutes for "a," namely, ai as in "vain," ay in "ray," eigh as in "eight," eig as in "reign," ey as in "they," aig as in "campaign," ea as in "break," au as in "gauge," ao as in goal, aigh as in "straight." Combining the above, how many ways are there of spelling the word "tailor?" and then, writing the second syllable lar, ler, lir, lor, lur, lyr, larr, lerr, lirr, lorr, lurr, lyrr, llarr, llerr, llirr, llorr, llurr, llyrr, lour, laer, lieur, liaer, how many different ways are there of spelling the whole word "tailor?"

AUSTRALIA, with Tasmania, is only a little less in size than Europe. The hottest climate in the world probably occurs in the desert interior of Australia. Capt. Stuart hung a thermometer on a tree shaded from both sun and wind. It was graduated to 127 deg. Fahrenheit; yet so great was the heat of the air that the mercury rose till it burst the tube, and the temperature must have been at least 128 deg. Fahrenheit—apparently the highest ever recorded in any part of the world. For three months Capt. Stuart found the mean temperature to be over 101 deg. Fahrenheit in the shade. Nevertheless, on the southern mountains and table lands three feet of snow sometimes falls in a day. Snow-storms have been known to last three weeks, the snow lying from four to fifteen feet in depth, and burying the cattle.

The Chicago Police-Alarm System.

The public alarm houses are built of wood, and just large enough to admit a man. They are placed upon the sidewalk, as near to street corners as practicable, and securely fastened either to telegraph poles or corner stores. The keys to such houses are uniform; they are furnished to respectable citizens upon application at the station, and a record kept of the names of key holders. A mechanical alarm to register the location of the complaint is inclosed in a small box attached to the side of the house, which box also incloses a telephone for the use of the officer traveling that particular post, and which places the officer in direct communication with his commander at the station. The citizen who possesses a key can, by pulling down a lever which protrudes through a slit outside of the box, procure the attendance of three policemen and a horse and wagon in from one to four minutes after entering the alarm house. The wagon carries a stretcher, blankets, shackles, handcuffs, etc., and can be used either as an ambulance or conveyance for prisoners. The alarm-houses are furnished with patent locks, which, after opening, retain the key until an officer arrives with a master key, which he inserts in the reverse side of the lock and releases the original; this precaution is taken to prevent false alarms, and to keep the complainant at the alarm-house until the officers arrive to hear the complaint and apply the remedy.

The Cocktail.

In a vocabulary of drinking terms, the Retailer remarks regarding the "cocktail:" "A word of very uncertain origin. Conjectural etymologists have traced it to the Moeso-Gothic, the Chinese, the Cherokee, and the Gumbo; one has settled it to his own satisfaction that it is of Sandwich island origin; another that it is Celtic; and still another that Noah left the recipe to his son Shem, giving the beverage the name Ko'kdal, written in the old Hebrew character with the Massoretic points. The probability is that the name and the beverage were invented by the mound builders, and the most prominent philologists are inclining more and more to that opinion." The Retailer also gives the following information: "The cocktail is made of brandy, gin, whisky, or champagne, mixed with bitters, sugar, and a small—very small—percentage of water. It is an early-morning drink, and is highly esteemed for its medicinal properties. A large proportion of those who use it habitually will never eat solid food until the flooring of the stomach has been overlaid with cocktails. There is no time in a man's life when he is more deserving of heartfelt sympathy than when, in a condition of pecuniary collapse, he craves a morning cocktail and craves in vain."

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, Jan. 28.—SENATE.—The Senate confirmed the appointments of Gov. Gray in connection with the benevolent institutions, owing to the absence of the Republican Senator from Vigo, and Poindexter co-operating with the Democrats. It was a strict party vote enforced by the previous-question gag. The appointees confirmed were: Joseph Gilbert, Trustee of the Normal School; James F. Harney, Trustee to the Feeble-Minded Children; Mrs. Eliza Dodd, Manager of the Female Reformatory; Daniel Mower and Wm. V. Wiles, Trustees of the Blind Asylum; James A. Creavens and Milton James, Deaf and Dumb, and Robert H. Tarlton, Insane. During the afternoon, resolutions in memoriam of the late Gov. Williams, were presented and adopted, and eulogies were pronounced by Senators Comstock, Woollen, Bell, Brown, and others, after which adjournment followed, until Monday.

HOUSE.—The Codification Committee came in with several new bills, including propositions for a Board of Pardons, amending the law choosing Presidential Electors, concerning a Bureau of Statistics, and providing for an enumeration of males in 1883. Mr. Furnas introduced a bill permitting women to vote in Presidential elections. An investigation was ordered, the Senate concurring, of the House of Refuge, and a resolution unanimously adopted favoring control of railroad rates by Federal legislation. The example of the Senate was followed in the afternoon by eulogistic tributes to the memory of the late Gov. Williams. Ex-Speaker Cauthorn, of Knox, led off in these addresses, and was followed by Kenner, Ryan, Neff, Berryman and others.

MONDAY, Jan. 31.—SENATE.—The Senate reconvened this afternoon, and Senator Van Vorhes introduced a bill abolishing the office of the President of the benevolent institutions. The Committee on Education was instructed to report on the feasibility of consolidating the various educational institutions under one management. The bill to prevent marriage of drunkards, insane people and felons was referred. Senator Briscoe's joint resolution "that the sympathies of the people of Indiana are with the masses of the people of Ireland in their present legal struggle to reform the system of land laws at present existing in that country," was adopted.

HOUSE.—The House lacked a quorum, and spent the principal time in voting on motions to adjourn.

TUESDAY, Feb. 1.—The Senate did not meet to-day, and the House remained in session only an hour. It heard reports, received new bills and then passed the Senate concurrent resolution of sympathy with the people of Ireland, with the addition of an amendment by Mr. McShechy thanking Congressman Calkins, of this State, for his championship of this question in the lower house of Congress. Bills were introduced: Amending the act regulating general elections; authorizing owners of wet lands to drain and reclaim the same; prohibiting minors from loitering in saloons, and providing no exemption for married women from taxation. The bill to enable nine of a jury of twelve, seven of a jury of nine, and four of a jury of six to return a verdict was reported from the Judiciary Committee with a recommendation that it pass. It was made a special order for Friday at 11 o'clock. Then the House adjourned to the Union Depot, and, joining the Senate, set off for Lafayette and Purdue University.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 2.—SENATE.—A number of bills on third reading were taken up and passed, principally legalizing and amending acts. When Senator Van Vorhis' bill for the establishment and maintenance of a State Board of Health and Bureau of Vital Statistics was called up, considerable opposition developed, the Senators arguing that it was a useless measure, and likely to prove expensive. The bill failed by a vote of 19 to 23. Later in the day, however, the vote by which its passage was defeated was reconsidered, as was also the vote on engrossment, and the bill was referred to the Health Committee. Representatives and Senators in Congress were instructed to use all the means in their power to secure an appropriation of $100,000 for widening and deepening the channel of the Kankakee river, so as to make it navigable in Indiana. The bill providing for the licensing of engineers of stationary engines was discussed, and referred with instructions to make its provisions cover portable as well as stationary engines. The vote by which the bill amendatory of the Railroad Bridge law was engrossed was considered, and it was recommitted. The consideration of various measures relating to a constitutional convention on the resubmission of the amendments to the people was made the special order for to-morrow afternoon.

HOUSE.—Among the new bills introduced was a liquor-license measure and a bill for the election of County Superintendents and teachers in district schools by a popular vote. The debate upon compulsory education was postponed until Tuesday. The bill for refunding city indebtedness was referred for amendments. The bills for vacation of cemeteries within the corporate limits and for the election of a Police Judge in Indianapolis passed. Among the provisions of the Liquor bill, licenses are reduced to $50 per year, but cities and towns are permitted to increase to to any amount, and it is made a misdemeanor to sell to habitual drunkards. The Deaf and Dumb Asylum investigation was ordered to begin next week, and the investigation of the prison, south, matters is set down for Tuesday next.

THURSDAY, Feb. 3.—SENATE.—James F. Harney, Trustee of the Feeble-minded Children Institute, came before the Senate, demanding an investigation of his official acts. Senator Hart's amendment authorizing the deduction of indebtedness from the assessment list, came within an ace of acceptance, but was finally referred. The House resolution ordering an investigation of the Insane Asylum was adopted. Bills were introduced prohibiting the sale of firearms to children under 15 years of age, and providing for payment of expert witnesses. The contested-election case of W. B. Brownlee vs. Chas. L. Henry, from Madison county, was settled by the acceptance of the committee report, that the last named retire from his Senatorial seat. A resolution was introduced expressing the sentiment of the Senate that the ridiculous features of Senator Cadwallader's famous Whistling bill, passed two years ago, was due to careless enrollment and engrossing. Senators Shaffer, Bell, and Jayne were placed upon the joint committee to investigate the Insane Asylum, and Senators McCartney and Howard were appointed to look after the House of Refuge.

HOUSE.—The joint resolution ordering an investigation of the Insane Asylum was passed, and Representative Berriman appointed Chairman, the resolution passing by a strict party vote. Lloyd's bill, authorizing the purchase and conversion of toll roads into free routes, was favorably reported upon, but was afterward recommitted, with instructions to amend, so that a majority of the legal voters of the county are necessary before purchase is made. A sharp political debate was had over the passage of the bill establishing a Superior Court in Vigo county, the Democratic members of the committee reporting adversely, because the bill abolished the Criminal Court. The bill finally passed, 54 to 33. Clark county presented a claim of $4,000 for the prosecution and conviction, in 1874, of Wm. Kennedy, a convict who killed one of the guards in the prison South.

CORN MUSH.—When the water intended for mush begins to boil, salt, sift in the meal with one hand, stirring with the other to prevent lumps. When thick, set the kettle into the oven and let it bake an hour. This cooks the meal thoroughly without danger of burning.

"The Trapper's Last Shot."

He was probably christened James, but is always Jim now, and, along with the greater part of his Christian name, he has almost entirely lost his surname. If he had been a few shades lighter, he might have been "Colored Jim," but, black being the absorption of all color, this name would not fit him. So he is known, wherever known at all, as "Nigger Jim." He is an expert trapper and fisherman, but, rather singularly, considering these gifts, a poor marksman. For years he lugged about or carried in his boat an ancient flint-lock Queen's arm, so deadly in its action that it would kill pickerel with only a charge of powder, so Jim said; yet he rarely brought home any spoils of field or flood but such as were gained by trap or hook. Once, however, he made a very telling shot. It was on an October morning, and he was paddling his light trapping-skiff up the channel of Wonakakatuk as silently as any Indian could, when, as he rounded a bend, he saw through the tall stalks of the wild rice at least a dozen ducks sitting among the lily-pads in the edge of the channel, not six rods from him. Here was his long-sought opportunity, and no sooner did he descry them them than a backward stroke of his paddle stopped the headway of the craft just before she poked her sharp nose in sight of the unsuspecting fowl. Then he laid the paddle in the boat without the slightest noise, and as silently lifted from her resting-place his old gun whose true inwardness at that moment consisted of all the powder in her owner's possession and a handful of BB shot, both wadded with a half-pound or so of waspnest. He cautiously thrust her muzzle through the rice stalks, cocked her without a tell-tale click of the ponderous lock, set the breech-plate firmly against his shoulder, laid his cheek to the stock, took such long and deliberate aim that a spider, setting his snare among the rushes, made fast an end of his web to the rusty barrel before Jim, shutting both eyes, set his teeth, and with a sturdy pull unhitched. There was a dazzling flash in the pan as if a kettleful of lard had caught fire, and then the noble weapon belched forth a horizontal column of flame and smoke, kicked Jim and his skiff half the boat's length astern, and gave a roar that went bellowing down the creek, across the lake, and was tossed back and forth from Split Rock mountain to Shellhouse for five minutes before it lost its voice. When Jim got his eyes open and his wits gathered, he peered through the eddying smoke and saw—not a feather raised, nor one wounded duck fluttering its last, but some riding unconcernedly with their heads knocked off and some keel up in a quarter-acre of fine splinters. Then up rose two Boston men from among the rushes, and the fire and smoke and uproar and vicious recoil of Jim's gun were as nothing to the vials of wrath which they poured out upon his curly, devoted head. Never was such paddling done on these waters as Jim did till he put half a mile of Wonakakatuk's channel, seething with his rapid strokes, between himself and the scene of bloodless slaughter. Then he shoved his boat into the rushes and skulked ashore. Next day he offered his gun for sale, giving as a reason that she burned so much powder no poor man could afford to keep her. He effected a sale at $1.50, and has done no duck-shooting since. He says, with emphatic shakes of the head, "Any man that'll try to fool ducks with them wooden images 'll steal sheep! Yes, sir, 'course he will!"—Forest and Stream.

Waste of Horse Life.

The number of horses in the United Kingdom has been estimated at rather more than 2,250,000, and their average value can scarcely be set down at less than £30. Their collective value, therefore, falls little short of £68,000,000. That the nation incurs a loss if this sum is spent quicker than it needs to be is a self-evident proposition; that it is so spent is certain, if horses on an average become useless at a time when they ought still to be in full vigor. On this point few will be disposed to challenge the verdict of Mr. W. Douglas, late veterinary surgeon in the Tenth Hussars, who tells us that a horse should live from 35 to 40 years, and live actively and usefully during three-fourths of this period. "All authorities," he says, "now admit that animals should live five times as long as it takes them to reach maturity. A dog, which is at its full growth when between 2 and 3 years old, is very aged at 12 years. Horses do not, unless their growth is forced, reach their prime until they are 7 or 8 years old, which, by the same law, leaves them to live some thirty years longer. When these facts are kept in mind, together with these other facts that three-fourths of our horses die or are destroyed under 12 years old, that horses are termed aged at 6" [he should have said 8], "old at 10, very old when double that number of years, and that few of them but are laid up from work a dozen time a year, * * * the viciousness of a system which entails such misery and destruction of life cannot be too strongly commented upon." If we take the age of 3 years as that at which horses begin to work, and 12 as that at which they are worn out, it follows that the period of their efficiency is shorter by at least 14 years than it should be. In other words, the nation has to buy three horses when it ought to buy only one, and thus upward of £200,000,000 are spent every twenty-one years in the purchase of horses, when £68,000,000 ought to suffice. The loss, therefore, to the nation is at least £135,000,000 in twenty-one years.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

AS AN UNFAILING SPECIFIC

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, etc., etc.,

Take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

Some Curious Instances of Criminals Trusting in Heavenly Aid.

An old example was that of the wife of a famous forger and counterfeiter now in state prison. Her letters, found among his effects, contained some extraordinary minglings of religious injunction and incitement to roguery. "Make a good haul this time, dearest, and be sure when you come on to bring the new Bibles for the children." "I exult in your great success, darling husband, and hope, with heaven's blessings, you will soon be able to retire." "Won't it be lovely when we are quite independent and can all drive to church in our carriage on a Sunday?" These and many other as refreshing and unctuous sayings were scattered through a series of epistles that must have been highly edifying to the estimable member of society who received them.

Another instance in point turned up yesterday in this city. Two thieves, George Giles, from England, and Thomas Hill, of New York, who had been convicted in the United States circuit court of passing counterfeit money, were manacled together and taken from Ludlow street jail to the post office building to be sentenced by Judge Benedict. Just as they reached the corner of Park row and Mail street these fellows made a desperate effort to escape. Hill slipped his free hand into his trouser's pocket, withdrew his hand filled with red pepper and dashed the fiery stuff into the eyes of Deputy Marshal Jones, who had him in charge. At the same instant Giles, who had contrived, it seems, to slip his handcuff, vaulted over a pile of loose paving stones and in the confusion got off in safety. Mr. Jones, although blind and suffering agonies of pain, held on resolutely to Hill, and, after a savage and protracted tussel—during which a large crowd stood by open-mouthed and never offered to help the struggling officer—and with the help at last of a gentleman, Mr. Whitlegge, who mainly forced his way through the throng to the marshal's assistance, the rascal was secured.

Later on in the day Hill was searched and letters were found in his pockets which showed not only that the plan to get free had been concerted some time back, but the moment fixed and other details of the project had been communicated to a correspondent. This person, a woman evidently attached to Hill, addressed to him, in one letter among others, the cheering and edifying words that follow:

"DEAR TOMMY—I hope you will succeed in your undertaking on Wednesday, but I think, Tommy, it is very dangerous, as you may lose your life in the attempt. Tommy, you don't know how glad I would be if you only succeeded, only it is such a risk to run. I will pray for your escape from now until I hear from you that you escape safe. Place yourself in the care of God and he will bring you out all right."

Mr. Hill's judicious use, under Providence, of his pocket full of red pepper shows with what remunerative care the instructions of his pious adviser were carried into execution. It must, however, be admitted that, in spite of this promising beginning, Mr. Hill was not brought out all right. On the contrary he was put in again in a way that he no doubt thinks is all wrong.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Mons. Dupont, who was a widower, re-married. It was in full honeymoon, and he made countless tender protestations. "I will always love you," he said to her. "Always, always?" "As long as I live." "And afterward, you will not love me in eternity?" "But I have already promised that to my first wife."

He was a great bore, and was talking to a crowd about the coming local election. Said he: 'Jones is a good man. He is capable, honest, fearless and conscientious. He will make the very kind of an officer we need. He once saved my life from drowning.' 'Do you really want to see Sones elected?' said a solemn-faced old man. 'I do, indeed. I'd do anything to see him elected.' 'Then never let anybody know he saved your life.' The meeting then adjourned.

A jolly-looking German was quietly walking down Third avenue, looking up occasionally at an elevated railway locomotive, and perhaps wishing he could smoke as much as it could, when he was familiarly approached by a man who said, "Hello, Joe! What are you doing here?" The old man looked and said, "but I am not here at all." "Not here?" said the man. "What do you mean by that?" "Vell, now, you see my name is not Joe, and so how could I be here? You must mean some other man." New York Herald.

A Japanese laborer lives in a house of not more than four rooms; one for eating, sleeping and for sitting; one for cooking; one for bathing and one to spare. He never wears boots, nor brings mud into the house. He and his family sit on the floor when they eat, and take their meals at a low table. The floor of their dining and sitting room is covered with clean soft mats, upon which at night cotton comforters are spread to sleep under. Such a house can be built and furnished for $100 and though cheap and small is comfortable. The bath, found in almost all laborers' houses, is in daily use.

What is known as cut glass is glass with incisions and ornaments with smooth surfaces, appearing as if cut by a sharp instrument. The cutting of the glass consists entirely in grinding away successive portions by holding them upon the surfaces of wheels of stone, metal and wood, which are made to revolve rapidly. The first or rough cutting is sometimes given by wheels of stone, resembling grindstones. Afterwards wheels of iron are used, having their edges covered with sharp sand or with emery. To prevent heat by friction, small streams of water are applied. The last polish is given by brush.

A christain woman in Boston who was formerly in good circumstances, is reported to be making shirts and clothing for a large firm, the members of which are church members. For the sewing on a lady's ulster she receives one dime. For a shirt with six buttonholes and gussets the price is seven cents. It was not a very Merry Christmas with this woman, as she had to work far into the night to earn enough to keep body and soul together. The good people who buy the garments made by this woman and other toilers of her class exult over the bargains they secure and tell each other where they can get such things for the lowest cent.

A scientific newspaper gives some illustrations of depraved tastes in animals. An instance occurred in a sheep on a British mail and passengership, which while fattening for the table developed a marvelous taste for tobacco, which it ate greedily. This habit was a most conservative measure, since the cook was afraid to kill the animal, lest the mutton might be flavored with tobacco. Another case mentioned, was that of a kitten five months old, which had a liking for salads. Cucumbers dressed with vinegar were consumed with avidity, though not with Cayenne pepper. It has eaten boiled beef with mustard, and its mother was once seen to eat a slice of cucumber which had upon it salt, pepper and vinegar.

THE ENQUIRER.

The People's Paper—The Greatest Newspaper in the West.

The Enquirer is just closing one of the most prosperous and successful years of its existence. We wish to thank the people and our patrons for their support. Your encouragement has made the task of publishing the best newspaper in the west a possibility.

We ask your aid and support for the year to come, and for the future, and pledge you that we will spare no expense to make the Enquirer for the ensuing year not only the best newspaper in the west, but the rival of any in America.

The world's news, recorded by a corps of fifteen hundred correspondents in all sections of the globe, will be found in the Enquirer every day in the year.

The history of each day's events will be faithfully and fearlessly told, exposing fraud, rebuking corruption, and upholding the right. The facts of the world belong to the people, and will be presented to them by the Enquirer free of malice and undistorted for political or personal purposes.

In short, the Enquirer will continue to be a newspaper.

In the future, as in the past, the Enquirer will be found advocating the rights of the people of the states; the rights of communities, and the fullest liberty to individuals compatible with the general order and welfare of society.

All questions and parties shall be treated with candor and fairness, but the truth shall never be perverted.

The year 1881 will be an eventful one in the history of the state and republic. The inauguration of a new administration, with new men and new purposes, are themes of the gravest interest to all citizens who love their country. Upon all these topics the Enquirer will contain the fullest and most reliable information from its corps of able and faithful correspondents.

THE WEEKLY ENQUIRER

will be a paper that ought to be in the hands of every farmer, every mechanic, and every toiler in the land. As an agricultural paper, full of fresh, valuable and reliable information, it will be without a rival! A corps of contributors has been retained whose practical and theoretical knowledge in all branches of good farming is unsurpassed.

Selected Poetry

The Ravin Female.

Once upon an evening lately, while I sat me down sedately,
Over manuscript and proof sheet marking errors by the score,
Up the stairs some one came walking, and I fancied I heard talking;
Soon there came a gentle knocking, knocking at my sanctum door,
"An exchange fiend 'tis," I muttered, "come to scan the papers o'er;"
Only this, and nothing more.
Open then I swung the portal; men and angels! what a mortal!
In there stepped a stately maiden of the ancient days of yore;
Not the least excuse, sir, made she, not an instant paused or staid she,
But with the air of a book agent who had been there oft before,
Took her stand beside the table, just inside my sanctum door,
Quoth the maiden, "squeeze me more!"
"Squeeze thee more? my antique tempter! O, thou grim and gaunt implorer!
By the heaven that bends above us! now, what do you take me for?"
O you female fiend incarnate! you ungainly ghost! oh, darn it!
Do you allege I ever squeezed that withered form before?
Get thee hence at once—instanter! skip thee out through yonder door!
I will squeeze thee never more."
"Hold!" she cried, "you silly booby! you long lop-eared, hair-brained booby!
Can a ray of comprehension your dull intellect explore?
'Tis the life of Abner Squees, sir—and don't you forget it, please sir—
That I'm around here canvassing to get subscriptions for;
'Tis the best work ever offered in your blasted town before,
And the title's "Squees' Memoir."

ACADEMY OF OUR LADY OF THE SACRED HEART Feb. 8, 1881.

MR. EDITOR:—Having heard that the residents of your interesting little town were very much astonished, and perhaps somewhat alarmed at the arrival of a number of animated icicles last Monday morning, we think it advisable to explain the reason of their sudden and fantastic appearance. It happened thus: During more than three days, we had undergone, that, to school girls, severest of ordeals, semi-annual examination. At last it was over; algebra, arithmetic, rhetoric and grammar. Everything pertaining to scholastic duties was laid away in order, and, our tired brains, released from lessons, set about devising plans for enjoying the few days granted us before beginning the second session. Numberless times we had heard the sleigh-bells jingling past the academy gates, and looking out on the well-beaten roads, remarked to one another that "sleighing was unusually good." "Let us take a sleigh ride, said one;" "yes," said another, "oh! do," said a third and before many minutes, all were unanimous in declaring "a sleigh ride, just the thing!" We accordingly wrote to Dr. J. B. Casebeer, who agreed to furnish us with large comfortable sleighs, good horses and careful, gentlemanly drivers. Monday, the 7th inst., was appointed, and 8 o'clock a. m. of said date witnessed the departure of as merry a crowd as ever went sleighing.

Robes and wraps of all descriptions contributed to our comfort, and one careful individual, a firm believer in the utility of umbrellas in every kind of weather, stowed hers away, and induced a couple of others to do the same, to the great amusement of the company, but, as the French proverb says, "He laughs best who laughs last," for we were not more than half an hour on our journey, when, lo! it began to rain. Shawls were at once spread out, umbrellas opened, and the younger members of the party carefully covered up in the buffalo robes. Now, said the person referred to above, "who laughs at my umbrella?" No one answered.

Away we went, up and down the hills until we arrived at a farm house, where arrangements had been made to rest and warm ourselves, if necessary, but every one was so well satisfied with her present position that we drove on again.

Mr. editor, have you ever laughed until your cheeks and sides ached? If you have, then you will know how to sympathize with us. Indeed, some feared that our mouths would not regain their original shape.

Arrived at Auburn, we stopped a moment at Dr. Allen's residence to drop his two neices, the Misses Hanna, of Fort Wayne, and then went directly to Mr. Hollister's commodious restaurant, where, being ushered into his private parlors, we were not sorry to lay aside our ice-cooled wraps. Being carefully examined by the sisters, and finding that the sleet had not penetrated farther than our outer garments, all fear of taking cold was at once dismissed.

In less, than an hour we sat down to a bountiful and inviting dinner, to which we were prepared to do full justice, in spite of the large lunch-basket we emptied on the way.

Dinner over, we went at the invitation of Mr. F. Leas, to visit the jail and court-house. We were saddened at the sight of the cells, clean and comfortable though they were, and the iron bars and immense locks that secured the prisoners, and were glad to go to court for the first time in our lives. We viewed the town from the tower, saw the ruins of the school-house lately burned down, and realized the great loss there sustained by the scholars, which we hope may soon be repaired.

Bidding adieu to our very obliging guide, we divided into parties, some of whom went to the gallery to have the inevitable tintype taken, others, directed by Miss May, visited Mr. Plumb's office and residence, others again, called on Mrs. Charles Beugnot; all paid at least one visit to the confectioner. A number went to see Rev. Father Young, and were disappointed to find that he was absent. They were, however compensated by the inspection of his beautiful little church, the interior of which they described as very finely furnished, particularly the altars.

When at the appointed hour we all met at Mr. Hollister's, each had some pleasant incident to relate. One party told of an over-curious gentleman so engaged in watching them that he measured his length in the snow before he remembered the necessity of guarding his footsteps on slippery ground.

Shortly before four o'clock the sleighs were brought around, and we prepared to take leave of our kind friends. Those young ladies supposed to be delicate were comfortably seated in the covered sleigh, and the others well supplied with umbrellas were pleased to resume their places in the splendid open rig. All being ready we started on our homeward way in even better humor than when we arrived. Many condoled with us for having our trip spoiled, but we think it only added to the novelty of the occasion.

Do you remember what history relates of Philip of Macedon who, being informed, first of the birth of his son, the great Alexander, and then of several other fortunate events occurring on the same day, prayed that the gods would send him some slight misfortune, fearing that so many blessings might presage some great disaster. Now, what that trifling mishap would have been to Philip, we believe the rain was to us, and agree in saying that we had a most pleasant time, and were it not for the anxiety of the sisters at the academy, there was nothing for which we could wish.

The way was enlivened by singing, and as we entered the academy avenue the sweetest notes of "Home Again," fell melodiously on the evening air. We arrived at about seven o'clock, sat down to a warm supper awaiting us, but would not retire to rest until we had related every incident of the day.

When you receive this letter, kind editors, we will be again poring over our books, but before re-commencing our studies we have agreed upon the following:

1st. That Auburn is an interesting, attractive and enterprising town, of which DeKalb county may be proud.

2nd. That the people of Auburn are among the most agreeable and obliging it has been our good fortune to meet.

3rd. That Dr. Casebeer is a most courteous and attentive gentleman, and understands how to make a sleigh-ride thoroughly enjoyable.

4th. That Messrs. Healy and McCord are the kindest and most careful drivers we have ever met.

5th. That Mr. Hollister's is just the place for any party desiring good accommodations.

6th. That Auburn is exactly the right distance for a sleigh-ride from the academy.

7th. That we had a delightful visit and hope to repeat it next winter.

8th. That we tender our sincere thanks to all who contributed to our enjoyment, and will be happy to return the compliment by making their visit to the academy as agreeable as possible, whenever time or inclination leads them hither.

Before concluding, we think it well to inform you of the circumstance that led us to inflict this letter upon you: As we were returning, one of the young ladies remarked; "Oh, I must write an account of this ride to my mother." "Yes, do," said Mr. Healy, "and give it to me and I will have it published," so you must blame him if you find this epistle fit for the waste basket.

Again thanking you and friends at Auburn for their hospitality we remain

Very respectfully,
PUPILS OF THE ACADEMY

Storms in Nebraska.

One of the faults of the climate is the terrific storms, their frequency at certain times and their suddenness. Of these there are two kinds—the wind-storm and the dust-storm. Which is worst is hard to tell. A most unpleasant peculiarity of the storm is its appearance on the shortest notice. Vennor, who is considered by some as a tolerably good weather prophet in the east, would be lost hear. Sometimes when there are all the indications of an approaching storm, there is no storm, and vice versa, when the air is clear and pleasant, a storm may come scudding along in twenty minutes. The winds are very severe, and are very baneful. They sometimes blow for weeks and weeks at a time. The common trees here are the cotton-wood and box-elders. Many of these are blown to shreds by the wind, such is its force, and the softness of the fiber of the wood. Often the wind blows so briskly that one can scarcely keep his footing on the streets, and if a grocer or dry-goods merchant chances to leave boxes or casks out of doors, he has the pleasure of seeing them blown rapidly down the street, and very likely, if his sign-board is loose, it will follow after. No wonder that runaways are frequent in Lincoln. The soil is very porous, and it takes but a few hours to reduce a mud-puddle to a heap of dust, and then if the wind blows, you have what is known here as a dust-storm. The streets are not paved and the wind has full sweep. The air is filled with dust at these times, and life is but a burden, and this lasts often for weeks. It is impossible to keep clean.—[Correspondence Springfield Republican.

A New Grass.

Every season new varieties of potatoes, corn and other small grain are introduced and distributed through the country. Most of them sell for very high prices, and some of them prove to be of great value. Now, although grass is by far the most valuable crop produced in the country, new varieties are rarely introduced from foreign countries, and no pains taken to cultivate those found growing wild in the distant territories. Timothy is the fashionable grass, largely for the reason that it is easy to cut and cure it. There are, however, many objections to it, the chief of which is its tendency to run out very quickly when once introduced. Most of the grasses introduced from England do not succeed well here on account of our frequent drouths. The Battle Creek (Mich.) Grange of the patrons of husbandry calls attention to a new variety of grass called "Evergreen," and cultivated by one of its members. A committee appointed to examine it and decide on its merits, made the following report:

"Your committee, to whom was assigned the duty of examining the new variety of grass which is being introduced by Brother Caine, would most respectfully report that they have examined it carefully and are very favorably impressed, and believe it to be a valuable acquisition to our list of field grasses. Your committee would recommend that it be generally introduced and thoroughly tested under all conditions, that its exact value may be fully known. At the date of our visit, May 5, we found it growing on the farm of Brother Caine, and elsewhere in the vicinity, standing from four to ten inches in hight, and the roots extending into the subsoil two feet and upwards. It appears to be perfectly hardy, having withstood two winters without protection under favorable circumstances. We believe there will be no trouble in eradicating it—as we saw sods turned in October last which showed no signs of life at the time of our visit, although they had not been moved this spring. Your committee would especially recommend it for light soils, or those which are subject to 'wash' or 'gully' with heavy rains, as the roots form such a compact mass in the soil as to render injury from this cause almost impossible.

New Ballot-Box.

It is said that a man in Newton, Massachusetts, has invented and patented a ballot-box that he claims is fraud-proof. If this is the case he has struck a valuable thing, that as the ancients used to say, "will fill a long-felt want." The box is a very simple one, and works as follows: "The ballot is put in at the top, through a small slit, and then passes between two rollers, on the largest of which is a cancelling stamp. After the ballot is cancelled it falls into the bottom of the box, the receptacle for the ballots. The ballot is drawn between the rollers by the turning of a crank, and when it is turned a bell rings to call attention to the fact that the box is in operation. A register is attached, which shows correctly the number of ballots that have passed into the box. The ballots can be removed from the box at any time while voting is in progress, and be counted; but when they are taken out the cancelling stamp is changed, so that every lot removed from the box will bear a different stamp. If two or more ballots are put in at once, only one is canceled, and the register will indicate that only one ballot has been cast. The number of votes must agree with the number indicated by the register, and, if they do not agree, it shows that fraudulent votes have been cast.—Detroit Free Press.

The Monroe Doctrine.

[Extract from the Message of President Monroe.]

With the movements [of foreign governments] in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments, and to the defense [of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure, and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole nation is devoted. We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner, their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States.

Guns of the Brazilian Indians.

While visiting Brazil, I saw for the first time the blow-gun of the Indians of the country, called by the Spaniards cerbatana, by the Portugese guarantana, and by the Indians pecuna. It is made of any long, straight piece of wood of which bows, clubs and spears are usually made. The pole or staff is about eight feet in length and two inches in diameter near the mouth, and tapering down to half an inch at the extremity; it is divided longitudinally; a canal is hollowed out along the center of each part, which is well smoothed and polished by rubbing with fine sand and wood. The two parts are then brought together, nicely molded with a resin of the forest to make it hard. A couple of boar's teeth are fitted to each side of the mouth end, and one of the curved teeth of a small animal—resembling a cross between a squirrel and a hare—is placed on the top for a sight. The arrow is made of any kind of light wood, mostly of the wild cane, or the middle fibre of a species of palm leaf, which is about a foot in length, and the thickness of a match. The end of the arrow, which is placed next to the mouth, is wrapped with a very light kind of cotton, which grows in a pod on quite a large tree, and is called by the natives huimba; and the other end, very sharply pointed, is dipped in a vegetable poison prepared from the juice of a beautiful creeper called bejuco de ambihuasca, mixed with aji, or a strong red pepper, or whatever substance the Indians know to be deleterious.

The marksman, when using his pecuna, instead of stretching out the left hand along the body of the tube, places it to his mouth, by grasping it with both hands together close to the mouth-piece, in such a manner that it requires great strength of the arms to hold it out at all, much more to hold it steadily. If a professional marksman, he will kill a bird at thirty or forty paces.

J., has been sentenced to five years in the State prison for embezzlement.... New York thieves flung a bar of lead through the window of a jewelry store in Sixth avenue, while the proprietor was sitting inside, and abstracted $4,000 worth of diamonds and watches.

IT is given out in Wall street that Gould and Vanderbilt are hereafter to work together in the development of Southwestern railroads and in the construction of a line to the Mexican capital.

THE weight of snow and the withdrawal of supports caused the south wall of the old portion of the Lake Shore depot at Buffalo to fall, the roof burying a train. Five persons were crushed to death and several others seriously injured. There were several cases of miraculous escape, two persons having broken windows and leaped into Exchange street. The loss will be $50,000.

GEN. GRANT, Logan C. Murray and H. V. Newcomb propose to establish in New York, at an early date, the United States Bank, with a capital of $400,000.

A PASSENGER train on the North Pennsylvania railroad collided with a freight train at Rock Hill station. Two men were killed, four fatally injured, and five badly injured. The flag station was demolished, and the telegraph operator seriously, if not fatally hurt.

THE WEST.

THE Capitol Hotel at Dover, Del., burned to the ground, and the guests barely escaped with their lives....The Park Theater, on Twenty-second street, Chicago, and the Bijou Theater, Fort Wayne, have been reduced to ashes....Joseph Wade the Indianapolis murderer, has been granted a new trial, for error in the charge to the jury.... Two men and a boy were killed and two men injured by the explosion of the boiler of Frank Schmidt's flouring mill at Kinswick, twenty miles below St. Louis....According to Bradstreet the amount of lumber manufactured in the leading Michigan districts during the year 1880 was 3,938,187,227 feet, an increase of 351,510,514 feet over the production of 1879. More than one-third of the demand, or about 4,000,000,000 feet, was supplied by Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

THE grocery house of the Greeley-Burnham Company, the largest in St. Louis the adjacent store of S. R. Sale & Co., the coffee warehouse of Long & Hart, and the candy factory of O. H. Peckman & Co. have been burned. Loss estimated at $400,000.....In a storm at Gervase, Ore., a school-house containing 100 pupils and teachers was carried eighty yards. Several children were badly hurt, but none were killed.... Two brothers, named John and Henry Nessell, living near Kendallville, Ind., got into a friendly tussle. John became angry, and struck Henry with a stick of stove-wood, killing him almost instantly. The fratricide is under arrest....John Vinegrow, an insane man, while being taken to jail at Rockford, Ill., asked permission to walk behind the sleigh and get his feet warm. In a few seconds he was discovered to have cut his throat from ear to ear.

MISS ANNIE PIXLEY, the most amusing young comedienne on the American stage, is at McVicker's Theater, in Chicago, this week, with her California play. "M'Liss," a comedy which is always welcomed with overflowing houses. Miss Pixley has rounded and added to the character since it was first put in her hands until now it is worthy of the actress. She is supported by a fine selected company. Next week, Baker and Farron appear after a trip around the world.

JOHN H. HAVERLY has arranged with Chicago capitalists to erect, in that city, one of the finest theaters in the United States.... Damage of nearly $60,000 has been inflicted by fire on the town of Walnut, Iowa....The large pork house of J. C. Ferguson & Co., of Indianapolis, has been entirely destroyed by fire. The loss on the stock is $375,000; insured, $325,000; on building, $135,000; insured, $60,000.... The business portion of Omro, Wis., has been destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $200,000....Ab Barnes, a freighter, was asked to drink by James Fowler at Custer City, Dak., and, declining, was shot dead by Fowler, who was taken away by the vigilants, and his body was found the next morning hanging to a tree.

JAY GOULD has purchased 100 shares in the Vulcan steel works of St. Louis....Scout Culbertson and ten Yanktonais Indians were recently sent out from Poplar river, Montana, by Col. Ilges, to ascertain the whereabouts of Sitting Bull. They have returned with a report that the hostiles number forty-three lodges, and made seven camps on the march to their old stamping-ground at Woody mountain.

THE propeller City of Ludington got imprisoned in a field of ice off the Michigan shore, and was carried across Lake Michigan when it moved....Two men were killed by an explosion in a linseed-oil mill near St. Paul, Minn. The building then took fire and burned down....Bertie Clippenger, a messenger in the Michigan House of Representatives, while playing in the Capitol, fell sixty feet through the well hole, striking on his face on the marble floor. His death was instantaneous.

THE SOUTH.

NEARLY 5,000 persons witnessed the execution of Bush Bennett, a negro, at Eldorado, Ark., for the murder of Col. A. C. Jameson....Jennie Robertson, alias "Soldier Charley," has just died at Nashville, Tenn., aged 55. During the war she donned male apparel, enlisted at Chicago, and served several years as a soldier and teamster. She was betrayed, and lately lived a depraved life.

A BLOOD-CURDLING horror is reported from Owensville, Ky., George Preist, bachelor, aged 70 years, and his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Goodpaster, some years older, lived alone together. The sister has for a long time been paralyzed, and unable to get out of bed. Before retiring at night Preist started to throw on a back log and build up the fire. He lifted the log, and, in throwing it on the fire, fell with it, and, being unable to rise, was burned to death. His sister was laying on the bed, but was unable in her condition of health to get to him or render him any assistance. At last, by an almost superhuman effort, she got out of bed and dragged her brother's body out of the fire, and managed to get back in bed, and there was compelled to lie, being completely exhausted and unable to turn over, with her brother's dead and burned body lying in full view on the hearth. Nothing was known of the affair until the following day, when Mrs. Goodpaster's son went to his mother's to help his uncle feed the stock. As he stepped in the door the horrible and blood-curdling scene was opened to his view. There in bed lay his mother, with eyes widely distended and staring wildly with them, while on the hearth lay the body of his uncle, stiff and stark in death, badly burned, and with eyes, cheeks, ears and a portion of his neck eaten by rats, the whole presenting a ghastly sight. Mrs. Goodpaster had never closed her eyes during the whole night, and was lying there facing the body of her dead brother, and unable to move at all or make any noise whatever, and was compelled to see the rats eating the flesh from the face of her brother.... A woman with considerable money stopped for lodging at the house of a negro named John Damps, in Charlotte county. She was put in a room with Damps' wife, but in a different bed. Damps determined to murder the woman, and entered the room at midnight with an ax, and, with two fearful blows, he killed his wife, supposing her to be the visitor. The screams of the other woman informed him of his mistake. She fled; and he, after burying his wife, was arrested while burning the bed-clothing to conceal his crime.... Two Federal soldiers having recently been shot dead in the streets of San Angelo, Texas, their comrades made a raid, a few nights ago, and fired about indiscriminately, killing an unoffending citizen.

AT Museville, Va., a negro, convicted of a trifling offense, became enraged, and, with the assistance of some other negroes, assaulted all the whites with a bludgeon. One man was killed and two seriously wounded. The negroes escaped to the club-room of the "True Friends," who resolved not to give their comrades up. They paraded all night with the murderer at their head beating a drum. Twelve men, well armed, secured their arrest and lodged them in jail.... A fire at Memphis utterly destroyed the Southern oil works, with a large amount of material and product, the loss being $200,000....The Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio railroad was sold at auction at Richmond, Va. Clarence H. Clark, of Philadelphia, was the purchaser, at $8,605,000.

WASHINGTON.

INFORMATION has been conveyed to the President from the secret-service agents of the British Government that the Irish sympathizers with the Home-Rule movement in Ireland are contemplating an armed movement upon Canada.

IN reviewing the scheme of M. de Lesseps, the House Committee on Interoceanic Canals argues that an investment of foreign capital under a foreign charter cannot be disconnected from an assertion of foreign power, and that the Panama route offers to our commerce no advantages over that of other nations. The committee expresses the opinion that De Lesseps' scheme would cost $300,000,000, and would not be completed in less than twenty years. The Nicaragua route is held to be not free from objection, and inferior in advantages to Tehuantepec. The practicability of Eads' ship railway has been proven, and it can be constructed at one-fourth the cost of a canal with locks, and completed in five years.

POLITICAL.

THE Republican Executive Committee of Virginia adopted, by a vote of 19 to 7, an address calling upon Republicans to stand by the party organization. This action is considered a victory for those who oppose an alliance with the Readjusters.

NO LESS than three new trunk lines between New York and Chicago bid fair to be arranged within the present year. The Wabash system, having a traffic contract with the Great Western, of Canada, will run its trains over that road from Detroit to Buffalo, whence New York can be reached by the extension of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western. An alliance between the old Atlantic and Great Western and the New York, Ontario and Western roads will connect Chicago and Cincinnati with New York. The third scheme is backed by subscriptions of $13,500,000, and embraces the Lake Erie and Western and the Ohio Central roads, reaching New York by the Central New Jersey.

MICHAEL DAVITT was taken before the chief magistrate at the Bond Street Police Station for a private hearing. The result was an order to finish the remainder of his sentence, which was interrupted in 1877 by his release on a ticket-of-leave. It is generally believed, however, that he will be confined only until the agitation in Ireland shall have ceased. He was committed to Milbank penitentiary, where he at once assumed the prison garb.... A Berlin dispatch announces that Russia intends to place her loan on the American market.

THE Porte is preparing new taxes, including a poll tax and a forced loan from inhabitants of Constantinople, on the ground of their exemption from military service in other parts of the empire. CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

A motion to take up the bill to retire Gen. Grant was defeated in the Senate on the 4th inst. The Morgan resolution in regard to the Electoral count was passed; also the House bill appropriating $25,000 for a national museum, as well as a measure setting aside $175,000 to equip a vessel to search for the Jeannette. In the House, a bill was reported, authorizing the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to prosecute suits against the Government in the Supreme Court of the United States. An act for the sale of Indian lands in Kansas was passed, the rate being fixed at $3 per acre. In the debate over a pension bill Mr. Atkins expressed the belief that the Arrearages act would cost the Government $1,000,000,000.

The United States Senate was in session a short time on Saturday, Feb. 5, and passed a joint resolution inviting the Government and people of France and the family of Lafayette to join in the Yorktown celebration. Bills were passed for the erection of a public building in Quincy, Ill., and to erect a monument at Wyandotte Mission, in Ohio. The House passed both the Senate joint resolutions in regard to the electoral count. Some hours were spent in debate on the apportionment question.

The United States Senate took up the letter of the Secretary of the Interior in relation to census frauds in South Carolina, on the morning of Monday, Feb. 7. Messrs. Butler, of South Carolina, and Conkling, of New York, got into a rather personal altercation over the matter. Replying to the language contained in a speech by Mr. Conkling, during the campaign, Mr. Butler spoke of the charges and insinuations as being as malignant in their purpose against the South as the heart that inspired their utterance, and asserted that, although the evidence of the correctness of the census figures was conclusive and overwhelming of the author's charge, he had not had the honesty to make amends for his dishonorable perversions. Mr. Conkling replied to Mr. Butler that he inferred that the latter had designed his remarks as an assault upon him for something he had said in a speech last September. He thought that Mr. Butler had taken a long time to reply. As for the vaporings of that Senator he had no concern. Mr. Butler—The swaggering insolence of the Senator from New York has no concern for me. Mr. Conkling—The Senator is a person with whom I do not choose to bandy words or epithets here or elsewhere, least of all here. The subject was then dropped. In a debate on the District bill, Mr. Thurman declared that he would vote for licensing the sale of liquor. Senators Hamlin and Thurman were appointed tellers for the Senate in the electoral count meeting. Consideration of the Pension Appropriation bill occupied the remainder of the session. The House refused to suspend the rules and pass a resolution to appoint a commission to report a basis for a reciprocity treaty with the British provinces. The River and Harbor bill received a similar refusal. Bills were introduced: By Mr. Washburn, of Minnesota, providing that railroad companies can occupy such public lands as they may need for right of way of any proposed line by making entry at the Land Office and paying the Government price; by Mr. Robeson, compelling railroad companies to provide all passenger coaches with axes, fire-extinguishers, etc., and to punish with fines such companies as violate the law; by Mr. Ford, for distribution of the public lands; by Mr. Turner, a joint resolution that Congress has no power under the constitution to impose a tariff except for the purpose of raising revenue; by Mr. Gillette, a resolution of sympathy for the Irish. The Senate bill passed relative to the non-forfeiture of vessels for breach of the Revenue laws. Messrs. House and Crowley were appointed tellers to make a list of the electoral votes on the part of the House.

Mr. Bruce made an adverse report to the Senate on Tuesday, Feb. 8, on the joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law. The Pension bill came up in committee of the whole, and an amendment by Mr. Plumb was agreed to, appropriating $200,000 for fifty examiners. Mr. Blair introduced a resolution for a constitutional amendment to prohibit, after the year 1900, the manufacture, sale or exportation of liquors except for medical or mechanical purposes. The credentials of Philetus Sawyer, of Wisconsin, and Arthur P. Gorman, of Maryland, were presented. Senator Conkling introduced a series of resolutions calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for detailed information as to the administration of the New York Custom House and the working of the civil-service rules there. The resolutions were adopted. The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was reported to the House and referred to the committee of the whole. The east gallery was set apart for the use of the families and guests of Senators and members desiring to be present at the electoral count. The House went into committee on the Legislative bill, which was considered but not disposed of. Appropriate resolutions on the death of Congressman Farr, of New Hampshire, were adopted. Eulogies were delivered by Messrs. Briggs, Hall, Ray, Bland, Bowman, Sherwin and others.

In accordance with the constitution, the electoral votes were opened on Wednesday, Feb. 9, in the Hall of the House, in the manner prescribed by the concurrent resolution adopted a few days ago. Vice President Wheeler and the Senate filed into the Hall of Representatives shortly after 12 o'clock, the former taking a seat beside the Speaker, and the latter being given chairs in the front row of desks. The tellers having taken their places, the Vice President opened the packages containing the certificates of election and handed them to the tellers, who announced the vote. When the Georgia certificate was read, the Vice President said that, as the vote was cast on a day other than that fixed by act of Congress, the result would not be recorded until it should appear whether the counting or omitting would affect the general result. All the certificates having been opened and read, Senator Thurman announced in the language of the resolution that if the vote of Georgia be counted the result would be, James A. Garfield 214 votes, and Winfield S. Hancock 155 votes; but if the vote of Georgia be not counted the result would be, James A. Garfield 214 votes, and Winfield S. Hancock 144 votes. In either case James A. Garfield had received a majority of all the electoral votes. He made a similar statement regarding the vote for Vice President. The Vice President then declared Garfield and Arthur elected for the four years beginning on the 4th of March, and the Senate retired to its chamber. The House and Senate passed a resolution setting forth that no further declaration of the result of the election was necessary. In the Senate, Mr. Wallace submitted a resolution calling on the President for information in regard to the naturalization by the United States of natives of Spain. Mr. Windom introduced a bill authorizing the Mexican National Railway Company to construct a bridge to the center of the Rio Grande. The Pension Appropriation bill was passed. On motion of Mr. Voorhees, the joint resolution granting condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental Association passed. The House passed the Legislative Appropriation bill.

A bill was passed by the United States Senate on Thursday, Feb. 10, appropriating $300,000 to purchase ground and erect thereon a depository of Government records. Messrs. Pendleton, Anthony and Bayard were appointed a committee to make arrangements for the inauguration. Mr. Blair introduced a bill containing most of the provisions of the "Sixty-Surgeons" bill, which was excluded from the Pension appropriation bill on a point of order. Some minor matters having been disposed of, the Postal bill was taken up. An attempt was made to amend it by inserting an item of $1,000,000 to aid in the establishment of American lines of iron steamers. Mr. Voorhees presented a concurrent resolution of the Indiana Legislature for an appropriation of $100,000 for the improvement of the Kankakee river. Some private pension bills passed. In the House, Mr. Reagan succeeded in having the River and Harbor bill taken up, and appealed for its passage without amendment. A long debate upon the provisions of the bill took place, taking the whole session, which was enlivened by a "flare up" between Messrs. Reagan and Cox, in which some hard things were said by both. Mr. Cox finally expressed regret at his show of temper, and the cloud blew over. Mr. Murch offered a resolution, which was adopted, ordering investigation into the "influence" reported to have been used upon members of Congress by the Washington Gaslight Company in regard to their contract for lighting the city and public buildings.

The Strongest Man Living.

Joseph Pospischill, who is now a prisoner in the Austrian fortress at Olen on conviction of highway robbery, is said to be the strongest man living. One of the feats for which he was renowned was to support in the air, with his hands and teeth, a table upon which two gypsies danced, while a third fiddled. He and one of his brothers, only less powerful than himself, were wont to bear upon their shoulders a wooden platform shaped like a bridge, while a cart full of stones drawn by two horses was driven over it. One day, when the jail in which he was confined was undergoing a visit from the municipal prison inspectors, this Hercules volunteered to give the authorities a specimen of his powers, and, upon receiving permission to do so, picked up with his teeth a heavy mahogany table, nine feet long, and balanced it aloft for nearly a half minute.

The Phantom Denouncer.

A settler in New South Wales was missing from his farm. His convict overseer gave out that he had gone off privately to England, and left the property in his care. This was thought extraordinary, as the settler was not in difficulties, and was a steady, prudent man; but the affair was almost forgotten, when, one Saturday night, another settler was returning with his horse and cart from market. On arriving at a part of the road near the farm of his absent neighbor, he thought he saw him sitting on the fence; immediately the farmer pulled up and hailed his friend, and receiving no answer, got out of the cart, and went toward the fence. His neighbor (as he plainly appeared to be) quitted the fence, and crossed the field toward a pond in the direction of his home, which it was supposed he had deserted. The farmer remounted his cart and proceeded home.

The next morning he went to his neighbor's cottage, expecting to see him, but he saw only the overseer, who laughed at the story, and said that his master was at that time near the shores of England. The circumstances was so inexplicable that the farmer went to the nearest justice of the peace, related the circumstances and added that he feared foul play had taken place. A native black, who was attached to the station as a constable, was sent with some of the mounted police, and accompanied the farmer to the rails where the latter thought he had seen his friend. The spot was pointed out to the black, without showing him the direction which the lost person apparently took after quitting the fence.

On close inspection, a part of the upper rail was observed to be discolored; it was scraped with a knife by the black, who next smelled at it, and tasted it. Immediately after he crossed the fence, and walked straight to the pond near the cottage. On its surface was a scum, which he took up in a leaf, and, after tasting and smelling, he declared it to be "white man's fat."

Several times, somewhat after the manner of a blood-hound, he coursed round the lake; at last he darted into the neighboring thicket, and halted at a place containing some loose and decayed brushwood. On moving this, he thrust down the ram-rod of his musket into the earth, smelled it, and then desired the spectators to dig there. Instantly spades were brought from the cottage, and the body of the settler was found, with his skull fractured, and presenting every indication of having been for some time immersed in water.

The overseer was arrested and tried for murder. The foregoing circumstantial evidence formed the main proofs. He was found guilty, sentenced to death, and proceeded to the scaffold protesting his innocence. Here, however, his hardihood forsook him. He acknowledged the murder of his late master. He had come behind him when he was crossing the identical rail on which the farmer fancied he saw the deceased, and, with one blow on the head, killed him. He then dragged the body to the pond, and threw it in; but, after some days, took it out again, and buried it where it was found. The sagacity of the native black was remarkable; the more so as he averred that he didn't know how he came by it; he "just felt that what he said and did was right," was the only explanation he could give.

Japanese Art.

The excellence of Japanese art, says a foreign writer, is certainly not born of any deliberate or direct study of nature. Even the flower and bird compositions of the Japanese, exquisite as they are, are almost always, botanically and ornithologically, incorrect in drawing. Of dogs and horses, deer and oxen, and quadrupeds generally, the portraiture is childishly and ludicrously wrong, while of the human form and of the human countenance no attempt to limn the contours and lines of beauty and force, with either truth or grace, seems ever to have been made by the Japanese artist. Yet the special port and gesture, so to speak, of the subject, be it a flower, a bush, a mass of wind-blown foliage, a gnarled tree or a wing-poised bird, are rendered, maugre the faulty drawing, with incomparable vigor, with a fluent ease hardly to be met with among ourselves; with a feeling that has got the very core of the matter. Japanese sketches of social life, of tired peasants, doughty warriors, dainty damsels, traders, peddlers, street folk—aye, even of things divine—despite faulty and sometimes absurd drawing, show always a certain idiosyncratic quaintness, often of indescribable, and, to those not familiar with Japanese modes of life and thought, not at once apprehensible, humor or sly undercurrent of enjoyment, as if the artist were gently, but not unkindly, laughing in his sleeve at the amusing aspect, which, as well as a sad one, every phase of human life may be said, in some greater or less degree, to possess. The excellence of that art—viewing it as distinct from the decorative art of Japan, which is otherwise supreme within its limits of flat ornamentation—lies in the unrivaled ease and fluency rather than accuracy of its drawing, in the sobriety of its means and aims, and in the naive and admirable sincerity, and often truly Hogarthian wealth of incident with which the peculiar and indescribable moods of the Japanese artistic mind, arising mainly out of the study of conventional models, themselves evolved originally from a loyal though narrowed contemplation of Nature, are represented.—New York Post.

"MAMMA," said a little chap, as his indulgent parent gave him a second piece of pumpkin pie, "mamma, I guess this is locomotive pie." "Why so?" queried his puzzled parent. "'Cause, mamma, it goes so fast!" And in two minutes he passed his plate for a third piece.

IF you should be asked when a cat is like a teapot, you might reply, "When your teasin' it."

TOILET RECIPES.

HAIR INVIGORATOR.—A wash to stimulate the growth of hair in case of baldness is made from equal parts of the tincture of sulphate of quinine—five grains in an ounce of alcohol. For those who will use hair oil, pure sperm oil of the very finest quality, is the best. This must be procured in proper freshness and cannot fail being a powerful hair invigorator.

TO REMOVE WRINKLES.—Put pieces of court-plaster on the face where the wrinkles are inclined to come, just before going to bed, and remove in the morning. The plaster contracts the skin and prevents its sinking into creases and lines. It also protects and softens the skin. Warm water should always be used to wash the face in, as it keeps off wrinkles.

HARMLESS FACE POWDERS.—Rice powder, though expensive, is warranted perfectly harmless. Refined chalk is the safest thing to use, and costs far less than if put up under some other name and sold in boxes. Cascarilla powder is much used by Cuban ladies, and is considered harmless. Wash the face with thick suds from glycerine soap, and, when dry, dust on the powder with a puff or piece of chamois skin.

TO STRENGTHEN THE HAIR.—A solution of burdock tea will strengthen the hair as will also sage tea. The following is also highly recommended: One pound of yellow dock root, boiled in five pints of water till reduced to one pint; strain and add an ounce of pulverized borax, half an ounce of coarse salt, three ounces of sweet oil and a pint of New England rum; a quarter of an ounce of oil of lavender and ten grains of ambergris will perfume this nicely. Use the burdock tea two or three times a day at first; after a while once a day will be sufficient. Shampooing the head once a day with cold water will also have a beneficial effect.

HAIR RESTORATIVE.—A powerful restorative for the hair is half an ounce of oil of mace in a pint of deodorized alcohol. Pour a spoonful or two into a saucer; dip a small stiff brush into it, and brush the hair smartly, rubbing the tincture well into the roots. On bald spots, if hair will start at all, it may be stimulated by friction with a piece of flannel till the skin looks red and rubbing the tincture into the scalp. This process must be repeated three times a day for weeks. When the hair begins to grow apply the tincture once a day till the growth is well established, bathing the head in cold water every morning and briskly brushing it to bring the blood to the surface.

How The Banana is Developed.

The Cuba correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin writes: The manner in which the fruit is developed is quite interesting. From the midst of the leaves and at the top appears a large, smooth, purple cone, hanging down gracefully at the end of a stock. The flowers are all wrapped up in this cone, which consists of a large number of closely-packed spathes. By-and-by the uppermost of these sheathes disengages itself from the rest, curls up, and discloses a row of three or four long blossoms, with the young fruit of each beginning to form.

While this row of fruit is tender, the spathe remains hanging over it like a roof; but when the fruit has acquired some size and strength, the protecting shield drops off, and the next in order rises up, with a similar row of young fruit, over which it stands in the same watchful attitude, till it also drops off to be succeeded by another.

When one circle of fruit is completed, another is commenced below, and in due time another; while the common stem around which the fruit is disposed, grows constantly longer, and the cone of spathes diminishes in size, till it is all unfolded, and a monstrous bunch of bananas is finished, which seldom weighes less than twenty or thirty and sometimes as much as seventy or eighty pounds. Of all kinds of vegetable nutriment the banana is perhaps the most productive, and most easily raised.

After a plant has produced its bunch of fruit, the stem is either cut, or is suffered to wither and fall on the spot. In the former case, it is good fodder for cattle; in the latter it forms good manure for the young shoots which have been springing from the root, and which are soon ready to bear fruit in their turn. From these shoots or sprouts the plant is propagated.

Abolition of Millstones.

I found all the Minneapolis millers taking out their millstones and substituting steel rollers in their places. Wheat, by the new Hungarian process, is not ground but cracked. These rollers are about thirty inches long and eight inches in diameter. It takes five sets of steel rollers to finish the flour. Each set of rollers runs closer than the preceding. After the wheat passes each set of rollers it is bolted or sifted through coarse cloth. This cloth lets the disintegrated particles of wheat through, and passes off the bulky and large pieces, which are run through another and a closer set of rollers, and cracked again. The last rollers have little else but wheat hulls and the waxy germs of the wheat, which do not crack up, but smash down like a piece of wax. The germ of a kernel of wheat is not good food. It makes flour black. By the new system of cracking the kernel instead of grinding it, this germ is not ground, but flattened out, and sifted or bolted out, while the starchy portions of the wheat are crushed into powdered wheat or flour.—Chicago Tribune.

The Care of the Ear.

Only the softest materials and the gentlest pressure should be used in cleaning the ear. Dr. Wilson gives, in popular form, some very useful and practical information touching the removal of ear-wax. If the ticking of a watch can be heard at the distance of twenty-eight inches the hearing is good. Each ear should be tested separately. Noises in in the head, sometimes ringing, frequently are due to hardened wax in the ear. Sudden deafness is sometimes caused as follows: A small mass of wax, from ill-health or uncleanliness, becomes hard. A continued secretion of wax then blocks up the ear tube still more. An injudicious attempt is then made to remove the wax by introducing, perhaps, a match-end, a pinhead, or penholder, which, instead of removing, pushes down the wax and packs it against the tympanum; or by sudden draught or the act of swallowing the wax is suddenly pressed upon the membrane, and loss of hearing immediately ensues because the membrane can no longer vibrate. The removal of the wax is in some cases, especially those of longer standing, somewhat difficult; but with gentle treatment and patience may be finally accomplished and the hearing fully restored. The best means for removing wax, when not badly compacted, are half a drachm of sodium carbonate dissolved in an ounce of water, applied lightly, by means of a bit of absorbent cotton or sponge attached to a suitable handle. When the wax is much compacted it may be softened by means of water, quite warm, and a syringe.—Scientific American.

A Funny Flambeau.

A party of men assembled at Tommy Gent's bar-room, and after comparing notes and telling some big stories, the conversation gradually drifted to the comparative sizes of the chests of the parties present. Finally some one proposed that they measure chests. A tape line was accordingly procured and the measuring commenced. Each party swelled his chest to its greatest capacity, and the measuring continued with an abundance of mirth and good humor. At last Gent took the line, and passed it around the chest of M. Quinn, and was apparently greatly pleased with the result. To express his satisfaction, he placed his hands on either side of Quinn's head and commenced rubbing his ears. He had drawn his hands across the ears only twice, when he was frightened nearly out of his wits by seeing a bright flame shoot quickly upward, reaching nearly to the ceiling. The friction caused by rubbing the ears seemed to have caused the spark, which ignited the hair and the blaze sprang up almost instantly.

To say that Gent was horrified is putting it mild. He thought he had been the involuntary tool used to bring about Quinn's destruction by fire. The reader can imagine what his feelings would be were he to simply place his hand on a friend's ear and instantly he should find the friend's head in flames. Gent sprang back, threw up his hands, and ejaculated:

"My God! what is it!"

And still the flames rolled on.

Gent's face turned pale and the other gentlemen in the party hastily made room for the human flambeau, who, as he hastily paced the room, reminded one forcibly of the Circassian beauty with the red porcupine hair, only he had fire instead of hair. Some of the inmates of the room yelled "fire, fire," and others of a more religious turn of mind commenced praying. Gent's knees were beating the devil's tattoo on each other, as he nervously clung to the counter. He subsequently said he thought the master mechanic from Hades had surely come to see him.

Finally, after some lively work, the man whose head was being cremated succeeded in extinguishing the conflagration without calling out the fire department. As soon as he had the fire under control his companions regained their senses and gradually approached him.

"Sure an' I didn't know you was loaded," said Gent.

"Do you have such spells often?" asked another.

"I knew you were gassing fearfully," chimed in a third; "but I didn't think you would go off in that way."

And so they continued, while the man who was indulging in the torchlight procession proceeded to explain.

It seems that Quinn is a baker of bread, and while at work frequently has occasion to look in the ovens, which are dark. When doing so he merely strikes a match. In order to have the matches handy, he has acquired a habit of carrying a handful back of his ears.

Using ears for a match-safe is a new idea, and should be patented.

However the matches being stored away in the suburbs of Quinn's ears, they were ignited by coming in contact with Gent's hands, which are made rough by honest toil. The hair was oily, and what followed was nothing more nor less than an oil fire.—Oil City Derrick.

"WHAT," asked the teacher, "was the great obstacle Washington encountered in crossing the Delaware?" And the smart, bad boy thought for a minute and then made answer, "The toll man."

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1881.

SENATOR EDMUNDS is reported to have exercised the care of a wise man in saving $250,000 from the proceeds of his law practice.

GAMBLING has been, and still is, very greatly on the increase in London. Two new baccarat clubs have been formed, where individual losses have been counted by thousands—in one case by 15,000—and the prohibited game has found its way into clubs where by the rules it is prohibited. Difficulties about the settlement of accounts have already resulted from this, and, if it continues, lots of scandals may be expected.

SIR HERCULES ROBINSON, the new Governor of the Cape, will thoroughly satisfy the horsey element in that part of the world. No keener racing man exists. Ansley, the well-known trainer, has gone out to take charge of his stud. Sir Hercules never, if he could help it, missed any race of importance in Australia. His father was an Irish clergyman, and his mother a sister of Sir Hercules Langrishe, a well-known Irish Baronet.

THE death is announced of Mr. Cottrell-Dormer, a great English Squire, whose ancestor was appointed by Charles I. hereditary Master of the Ceremonies to the King. At his seat, Rousham, Oxfordshire, is preserved, among many heirlooms, a medal, placed around the neck of Sir Charles Cottrell by Charles II. at his restoration. Another ancestor entertained Queen Elizabeth, on her own invitation, and records in his diary: "The Queen is gone, thank God! carrying off my best silver cup."

THE recent earthquakes at Agram, and subsequent minor tremblings of a part of Scotland, suggest to a writer in the Gentleman's Magazine the possibility of a serious shock in London, which would entail a frightful calamity on hundreds of thousands of persons now residing in "desirable residences" of the very flimsiest character, only one brick thick. He estimates that a single shock would kill half a million people, and shows that, according to high geological authority, England must in time past have been fearfully shaken.

A FATAL case of poisoning from wearing colored stockings is reported from Port Jervis, N. Y. The victim was a 6-year-old girl, and the stockings were brown and gold. The day being warm, she perspired freely. Soon afterward unmistakable symptoms of poisoning appeared, and the doctor was called. He said the illness was undoubtedly caused by poison absorbed from the coloring matter in the stockings. She suffered the most intense pain, and at times her screams could be heard some distance from the house. She died after an illness of thirty-nine days.

A WASHINGTON correspondent says he rode down from the Capitol the other day in a 5-cent omnibus in which the only other passenger was the Vice President of the United States. Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister, whose salary, beside his income, is over $25,000 a year, walks every day from his home away beyond the White House to the Capitol, a distance of nearly three miles. He is a trim, modest-looking man with a business air and a quick, nervous step. Mr. Hill, of Colorado, who is worth a million or two, walks, while all around him dash the coaches of men who live on their Congressional salary.

JOSEPH BURGER, member of the Minnesota Legislature, is a curiosity. He enlisted in the Second Minnesota regiment of volunteers when only 14 years old. He was shot seven times, losing his left arm and most of his right hand, and is one of the seventeen in the United States who holds a gold medal for bravery, and was discharged as a Captain at the age of 18 years. When 22 years of age he was elected to the Missouri Legislature, and served five years in the House and Senate of that State, beside one term as Sergeant-at-Arms of the Missouri House. He was Postmaster at Burger, Mo., a town named after him, and now at the age of 32 is sent, after a ripe experience, to the Minnesota House. No man in the living world has such an experience. He was born in Austria, and draws a pension of $600 a year.

MR. C. K. LORD, General Passenger Agent of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, has adopted an ingenious mode of advertising. It is a volume known as the "Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Red Book," which is handsomely printed and contains a vast amount of information of value to travelers and to those interested in political statistics. That its compilation and preparation has cost time and labor of no mean order is proven by the completeness of the work. While it is an advertisement in one sense of the word, its great value as a reference book renders the fact that it is an advertisement a matter of secondary consideration. The aim has been to present the returns of the late election [illegible] in each county, and to this end the returns of previous elections are shown, and from them the gains and losses are compiled. The returns for 1880 are given as revised from official reports received from Secretaries of State. The "New Red Book," as far as it goes, is a complete political text-book. The present edition is confined to Congressional returns. A second edition will be issued within a few weeks giving the Presidential returns by counties in each State, and showing comparisons with the vote of 1876, with majorities, gains and losses.

HOW HE came by the name Sitting Bull is thus explained by Chief Gall. In his early youth, Sitting Bull, then yclepted Lame Deer, went out unnoted among brother buffalo-hunters, and came in at night carrying on his shoulders the carcass of a young buffalo, with a mystic white cross on its forehead, shot by him and borne for so many weary miles that he sunk exhausted at the lodge gate in a sitting posture. He thus became Sitting Bull, for the carcass remained on his shoulders and seemed a part and parcel of himself. The carcass of the animal was left there, the camp abandoned and ever since has been avoided as cursed by the spirit of evil, or at least as not good medicine. The scene of this occurrence Gall places indefinitely somewhere in the Black Hills, and thence Sitting Bull went out a chief whose power has aggregated ever since.

THE success which has attended the union of the telegraph with the postoffice in Great Britain has been as great as gratifying. The Committee of the National Board of Trade reported at the close of the year in favor of Government absorption, and predicted the very consolidation which has since taken place. In this report the results in Great Britain were dwelt upon. The English telegraphs were taken by the Government in 1869, and since the growth of the business of this department of the British postoffice has been as follows:

Number of offices in 1869	2,488
Number of offices in 1880	5,381
Number of messages sent in 1869	6,500,000
Number of messages sent in 1880	26,827,127

The increase in plant has been as follows:

Miles of line in 1869	5,651
Miles of line in 1880	23,156
Miles of wire in 1869	48,900
Miles of wire in 1880	101,251
Miles of submarine cables in 1869	139
Miles of submarine cables in 1880	707
Instruments in use in 1869	2,300
Instruments in use in 1880	8,151
Yards of pneumatic tubes in 1869	4,864
Yards of pneumatic tubes in 1880	48,636

The Cat in History.

A good deal of attention has been given of late years, by students of natural history, to the question of historical distribution of plants and animals, and many points of popular interest have been elucidated by their researches. It has been shown, for example, that while the dog has been a companion of man from the very earliest times, the cat is a comparatively recent addition to the complications of life. Cats were tamed, indeed, by the Egyptian priests and accorded religious honors and even worship. But the ancient Greeks knew nothing of the domestic cat, although mice were known to them from the highest antiquity. Indeed, mice were at times very troublesome to the Greeks, whole districts being sometimes devastated by them and the people driven away, as they are by grasshoppers from some places nowadays.

In order to cope in some measure with mice, the older Greeks kept weasels or martens, which were tamed for the purpose. The weasel, in particular, occupied somewhat the same place in the world that the cat does now, and numerous fables and proverbs relating to the weasel, which are still current, originated at that period. The old Romans knew no more about cats than the Greeks, and it is only in the fourth century after Christ that mention begins to be made about the cat as a domestic animal. Evidently it was at this time, or perhaps a little earlier, that the domestic cat was distributed throughout Europe and Asia.

It is not a little remarkable, though perfectly natural, that the introduction of the cat gave a new impulse to tales and fears of ghosts and enchantments. The sly, creeping, nocturnal grimalkin took rank at once with owls and bats, and soon surpassed them both as an exponent of all that is weird and supernatural. Entirely new conceptions of witchcraft were gained for the world when the black cat appeared upon the scene with her swollen tail, glistening eyes, and unearthly yell.

What Was the Dialect?

If you don't know how to say in a foreign tongue what you want to say, don't say you don't know what. Not a few Americans have been mortified, while airing their bad French in a Parisian store, to hear the polite clerk say:

"Monsieur will pardon me, but I understand English."

A story told of Representative Orth, of Indiana, illustrates the expediency of observing the above advice. He is of German descent, and is proud of his ability to speak the German language.

Some years ago he was appointed United States Minister at Vienna. When he was presented at court, thinking to pay a delicate compliment to the Emperor of Austria, he delivered his official address in German. The Minister credited himself with having done his part well. But there are always two impressions made by an address—that made on the speaker himself, and that on the hearer.

A few days after Mr. Orth's linguistic success, an American gentleman of high position was presented to the Emperor. His Majesty alluded to Mr. Orth in complimentary terms, he asked:

"In what dialect did Mr. Orth deliver his address? I know, of course, that it was not English, and I thought that I detected faint traces of the Teutonic tongue in some of the words."—Youth's Companion.

CAMEO CUTTING.

[illegible]

Cameo cutting is one of the most profitable arts to engage in. There are but a few cutters, and there is a steady demand for all they can produce. The cutters are very secretive, and greatly dislike to talk about their work. Most of the cameos are produced from sea-shells. A visit to a cameo cutter's work-shop found him seated at a table covered with tools, varying from a triangular-pointed steel instrument to the most delicate pointed bits of steel wire fastened in handles. Very fine files and knitting needles, set in wooden grips and ground to infinitesimal points, figured in the lot. On a pad of leather, before the cameo cutter, was a block of wood just big enough to be grasped with his hand, and cemented to the middle of it was an oval object that looked like a piece of alabaster, just big enough to make a seal for the finger of a man who did not object to wearing large rings. Upon this the artist was just finishing a copy, with a pencil pointed to needle fineness, of a photograph in profile of a gentleman, which was leaned against a little photograph easel before him. Having finished the outline, he laid his pencil by, and taking up a fine wire tool he scratched the pencil-mark around with it. Then he took a darning-needle with a sharp point and scratched the line deeper. He worked with a magnifying-glass at his eye, and stopped continually to inspect the progress of his work with critical minuteness. Then he went at it again, working slowly, scratching over the same line again and again, and always examining after each scratch. He changed his tools as he went on, and from the darning-needle descended to a trifling little fragment of steel wire, not as thick as an ordinary sewing-needle, set in a slender handle. With this he scratched and rescratched, until the lines he had drawn with his pencil had quite vanished, and a thin, fine streak of a dark color had marked the outline of the head he had been tracing his way around. Next he took one of his burin-like tools and commenced again. This time he worked on the outside of the outline, cutting and scraping at the surface until the white turned gray, then brown, and finally vanished, leaving the face in relief, surrounded by a black ground—that is, the portrait remained intact in the white substance which formed the outer layer of the cameo, while it had been cut away around it to the lower or dark layer. The portrait or figure is then modulated upon its surface until it assumes the roundness of nature. The edges are left square to the dark ground. This is necessary, as, if they are gradually rounded down, the outline becomes undefined toward its juncture with the relieving surface, owing to the white of the raised portion being partially transparent, and permitting the dark to show through it when it is thinned down. Care is taken to finish this dark surface as much as possible with the cutting tools, and so separate the white from it as to leave it smooth and unscratched. A final polish is given it, however, with putty powder, applied dry with a stiff brush, but the utmost care is necessary in this operation, as the slightest slip will ruin the work. This is the cameo-cutter's work, the mountings being the jeweller's work. The cameos sell, unmounted, for about $25. Italy is the home of cameo-cutting, and the finest works of art in that line are still turned out there. Genoa and Rome are the centers of production. There is a colony of cameo-cutters in Paris who produce some very good work. The cameos made abroad, are, as a rule, fanciful works, copies of statues, mythological figures and the like. The shells used in cameo-cutting are of several sorts, but all are ordinary sea-shells or conchs. Some come from the East and some from the West Indies. Many are imported, as there is commonly only enough material available in each one for a single cameo. These shells all have a white surface, but the inner layer is red, black and dark claret in color, according to the species. The pieces to be used by the artist are sawed from the shells and shaped into the square or oval form required on a grindstone. Then they are ready for the artist.

Horace Greeley's Memory.

To go back a moment to Dr. Chapin. He was the only preacher Horace Greeley cared to hear. Mr. Greeley attended his church with as much regularity as could be expected from an active journalist, who can call neither the day nor the night his own. He listened to Chapin principally on Sunday evenings. It used to be said that though he attended pretty regularly he did not hear the sermons at all—in fact, that he went to church to sleep rather than listen. It was his habit to shut his eyes when the sermon began, and keep them shut till it was over. But it may have been a mistake to say that he slept. Some men hear best, or seem to, with their eyes closed. Perhaps they are then able to keep their ears open all the wider. Mr. Greeley was once taken to task for sleeping through the sermon. He said that he had not slept a wink. "I'll bet," said his accuser, "that you didn't hear one word that Dr. Chapin said." The only answer was a clear and concise summary of the sermon from beginning to end. A smart reporter with his note-book, could not have done better. Mr. Greeley had heard every word, though he seemed to be dozing in his pew. His wonderful memory stood him in good stead then, as it did on many other occasions. He could depend on it for the salient points of any address or sermon, and he often made almost verbatim reports from memory alone. He and Chapin were the best of friends, and no man was more pained by the great editor's melancholy death than the pastor of the Church of the Divine Paternity.—New York Cor. Detroit Free Press.

Real Jamaica Rum.

Jamaica rum, so-called, as that article is sold in this country, has for many years had a dark color and a fiery quality which it never possessed forty or fifty years ago. This dark color is wholly or almost entirely due to ingredients which are put in the rum to color it. Jamaica rum, when first distilled, is as white as water; as colorless as any other rum; but in former days, in the primitive times before the abolition of slavery on the island, it was customary to use for a condenser, instead of the spiral "worm" known to most distilleries, a simple rod of bamboo, leading down through water, and the bamboo was in many cases prepared for the purpose by burning out a hollow passage through it, from end to end, with a red-hot iron. This imparted to the liquor a certain tint about like straw color. Of such was the "old Jamaica" that was so popular in London forty years ago. It possessed a peculiar odor and taste, unlike that of St. Croix rum, but not less distinctive; and this circumstance, of so much of the island rum possessing a kind of pale yellow tint, led dealers to venture on a slight additional coloring by the use of burnt sugar. In due time the rum-using part of the public, in both hemispheres, came to recognize "old Jamaica" as colored rum, and to expect that hue, or else suspect the genuineness of the article. Finally, the sophistication was carried to such an extent (chiefly by the use of burnt sugar) than no Jamaica rum could be found in the American market that was not colored very dark red, like dark brandy, and by the same means. A case bottle of unadulterated Jamaica rum—the last remnant of a Middletown importation of that article forty years ago—was of a pale lemon or straw color; and on removing the gilded glass stopper, the peculiar aroma or bouquet of the rum would fill a room—a very different color indeed from that of the stuff which is now sold, by druggists as well as in the dram-shops, for Jamaica rum.—Hartford Times.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

HOUSE.—The joint resolution ordering an investigation of the Insane Asylum was passed, and Representative Berriman appointed Chairman, the resolution passing by a strict party vote. Lloyd's bill, authorizing the purchase and conversion of toll roads into free routes, was favorably reported upon, but was afterward recommitted, with instructions to amend so that a majority of the legal voters of the county are necessary before purchase is made. A sharp political debate was had over the passage of the bill establishing a Superior Court in Vigo county, the Democratic members of the committee reporting adversely, because the bill abolished the Criminal Court. The bill finally passed, 54 to 33. Clark county presented a claim of $4,000 for the prosecution and conviction, in 1874, of Wm. Kennedy, a convict who killed one of the guards in the prison South.

FRIDAY, Feb. 4.—SENATE.—The bill providing for the establishment and maintenance of public libraries in connection with public schools in cities of over 10,000 population passed. Senator Menzies introduced a bill establishing a commission of five lawyers to be appointed by the Supreme bench to aid the court in bringing forward the immense legislation now on the docket. The afternoon was occupied with discussion of the resubmission of the constitutional amendments, and the proposed constitutional convention.

HOUSE.—A number of bills were reported from committees, including the measure proposing the abolition of city and town Assessors, which was amended by omitting the city of Indianapolis from its operation. The bill was then engrossed. The Fish Commission bill was reported favorably, with amendments reducing the number of members of the board to six, and the proposed appropriation from $5,000 to $2,000. After discussion it was referred to a special committee for further consideration. Several road bills were considered, but no definite action taken. Mr. Thompson's bill repealing the act authorizing counties and townships to vote aid to the construction of railroads, was reported favorably from the Committee on County and Town Business, but the bill was referred to the Railroad Committee. Upon the motion to engross Mr. Meredith's bill to establish a board to manage both the State prisons, a motion was made to have the Governor's nominations of Directors confirmed by the House instead of the Senate, but the House voted it down. An amendment proposed by Mr. Floyd, that the nominations be confirmed by the House and Senate in joint convention, was referred, with the bill, to the Prison Committee. The bill for the payment of non-resident witnesses in State cases, was referred to the Committee on Fees and Salaries.

SATURDAY, Feb. 5.—SENATE.—Bills were introduced: Appropriating $20,000 annually to Purdue University; looking to the establishment of homes and schools for children now in the poor-house; increasing the pay of the Speaker of the House to $10 per diem; creating a board of thirty inspectors for the benevolent institutions, to serve without pay, and six members to be women; providing that all ministers of the gospel of good moral standing, and graduates of a reputable theological college, shall have the right to preach in this State, and any minister of reputable character, but not a graduate, who has preached for ten consecutive years, may continue to preach. A committee was directed to inquire into the feasibility of selling University Park.

HOUSE.—The House fought for several hours over a resolution admitting George Meuser to the Soldiers' Home. It was finally adopted. A strong pressure developed for the passage of what is known as the Bridge law, permitting cities to issue bonds to insure construction, etc., but no definite action resulted. A bill was introduced requiring courts to commit girls under 16 years of age to the Female Reformatory, instead of the county jail.

MONDAY, Feb. 7.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the session wrestling with the bill providing for the resubmission of the constitutional amendments. The bill, however, was ordered engrossed, and made the special order for to-morrow afternoon.

HOUSE.—About twenty new bills were introduced, among which were: Abolishing the Grand Jury system, and bringing prosecutions before Justices of the Peace, and thence on appeal to the Criminal Circuit Court; establishing a whipping-post for wife-beaters; providing for the separation of the Department of Geology from the Bureau of Statistics; enacting a homestead-exemption law, for $1,500 in real estate and $1,000 in personal property where the debtor is the head of a family, and in other cases $300 in books or tools when the debtor is not a family man.

TUESDAY, Feb. 8.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the day considering bills on second reading. A resolution was adopted fixing on Friday morning to take a vote on the bill calling a Constitutional Convention and resubmitting the amendments. A concurrent resolution was also adopted calling a joint convention on Friday for the election for a Prison Director.

HOUSE.—A considerable and somewhat heated debate was developed upon Ryan's Compulsory Education bill. It abolishes separate schools for colored and white children. The Legislature will visit the Normal School at Terre Haute on Thursday. A resolution was adopted enlarging the scope of the investigating committees of the several benevolent institutions so as to inquire concerning the selection of officers thereof.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 9.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the bill authorizing counties to establish homes and schools for dependent children otherwise confined in poor-houses, and rejected the measure empowering the Governor to appoint the Trustees and Directors of the various benevolent and reformatory institutions. A bill passed authorizing counties to construct free gravel roads by issuing bonds not exceeding $10,000, running eight years at 6-per-cent. interest, the bonds to be redeemed by an assessment on the property along the line of the road. The Insurance Commission submitted a lengthy report and bill making an entire change in the law concerning the organization and management of home insurance companies, the effort being to favor the organization of home companies at every point. A bill passed limiting the time that cities may contract with water-works companies to five years, and authorizing a tax levy for water purposes of 25 cents on the $100.

HOUSE.—After debate on the Compulsory Education bill, the House rejected the minority report unfavorable to its passage, and recommitted the bill for further amendments. The vote on rejection stood 47 to 31. The Six-Per-Cent. Interest bill was considered in committee of the whole, and was made the special order for Friday. The bill giving women the right to vote at Presidential elections was favorably reported upon and ordered engrossed, and the one making women eligible for School Trustees was set down for Friday. The House declined to abandon the one long session for two each day. The Governor gave notice of the reappointment of Marcus R. Sulzer, of Jeffersonville, as Ohio River Commissioner. He was first appointed by Gov. Williams, but removed by Gov. Gray.

THURSDAY, Feb. 10.—SENATE.—The Senate unanimously passed the bill relating to guardians and wards. The report of the Revision Committee on the civil code was made the special order for Wednesday, and the resolution consolidating the two prison boards went over indefinitely. Bills were passed: Abolishing capital punishment; giving the wife of an insane husband control of their property, and authorizing cities and towns to vote aid to manufacturing and mining interests upon petition of two-thirds of the residents. The bill for preventing stock running at large failed to pass. The Educational Committee was directed to inquire into the necessities of Purdue University. Senator Brown presented a bill regulating the cost of transportation of freight in this State.

HOUSE.—The Attorney General reported to the House that the suits against ex-Auditor Henderson had been removed to Johnson county, and would be pushed to trial. The State Auditor reported the total cost to the State for the past six years of Purdue University school was $353,665.27. A bill passed giving three months' additional time to perfect the transfer of railroads purchased in good faith. A number of bills of minor importance passed. The proposition to exempt indebtedness from the tax-schedule was laid on the table. A lively time was had over the bill for the relief of Silas T. Brandon, Trustee of Jackson township, Jackson county, but the bill finally passed. A bill also passed, authorizing counties to appropriate 25 cents per day for the maintenance of children in orphan asylums.

Male Nurses for Men.

The London Lancet calls attention to the expediency of employing male attendants for male patients. It is a mistake to suppose that women are necessarily the only good nurses. In the opinion of some persons, who claim to be judges of the question, they are neither so quiet, so self-possessed, so precise, nor so strong as men. It is also alleged that no man who has been nursed by a gentle-handed male servant would desire, in any subsequent illness, to be attended by a female. It is said that whatever element of the female character or influence is desired in the sick-chamber can be best contributed by the presence of a mother, a wife, or a sister. When the circumstances exclude these forms of luxury it can seldom be necessary. If the employment of men to nurse men were encouraged, a great difficulty would be surmounted, and a good social reform begun.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

JAMES A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN
EDITORS.

ARTHUR, recently elected to the vice-presidency of the United States, is likely to be investigated as to his nativity. It is now claimed that he was born in Canada, and according to the constitution ineligible. Article 2, section 1, says: "No person except a natural born citizen of the United States shall be eligible to the office of president." And the 12th amendment says: "But no person constitutionally, ineligible to the office of president, shall be eligible to the office of vice-president." It is a new thing in our history, having never occurred before. But Mr. Arthur ought to have attended to so important a matter before.

SAY, boys, haven't you said about enough about that judgeship business? Junius says Mac would like to be judge; Mac says the same thing—so, as the late J. L. Morlan used to say, "what the devil do you want to quarrel fur." Mac says he is not a politician. Of course not; all Mac ever did was to stump the county, make speeches before clubs, work like a Turk all through each campaign, skin around on election day and see that all of his party voted, swear in votes, sit up all night with the election board and keep a vigilant eye on the count, and in various other ways take great interest in a campaign. We never knew until recently that it was derogatory to a man to aspire to the circuit judgeship. We always looked upon the position as being desirable, honorable and lucrative, and do yet; and if it is ever offered to us, don't wager anything on its insulting us, or on our denying that we would take it, because if you do you will lose every cent you put up on it.

ARTICLE 12 of the amendment to the constitution of the United States says in regard to counting the votes for president and vice-president: "The president of the senate shall, in the presence of the senate and house of representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall be counted." Had the republican members been willing to accept these plain directions, all the trouble and waste of time over the matter of counting the votes this winter would have been avoided. The same may be said of the trouble in the Tilden and Hayes contest. At that time, the senate being republican, insisted that the vice-president had the right not only to open the votes, but to count them and decide which should be counted in case of dispute. The vice-president, being a republican, would of course have decided the Louisiana and other contested cases in favor of Hayes. The house insisted that the countnig must be done by tellers, as has always been the case, and the result of their count be announced only by the vice-president, and in case of a double set of returns, as was then the case in several states, both houses should agree as to which one should be counted, and if they could not agree in this, the vote of the state should be thrown out. As the two houses failed to agree as to the mode of counting, the electoral commission was created.

ON Wednesday, February 9, the final count of the electoral vote took place, in the precise manner required by the joint resolution which has been so persistently advocated by the democratic majority in congress. At noon, the members of the senate marched to the hall of the house of representatives and were received by the members of the house standing. The box containing the electoral votes of the different states was opened, and the vice-president took out an envelop and handing it to the tellers, said: "This purports to contain the vote of the state of Alabama, and I hand the certificate to be reported." The tellers then reported the vote, and so proceeded with the votes of the other states. At the close, Senator Thurman, one of the tellers, announced the number of votes cast and the number each candidate had received. Whole number of votes cast, 3[illegible] necessary to a choice, 185. Of these James A. Garfield received 214 votes, being a majority of the whole, and if the votes of Georgia were counted, Hancock would have 155 votes, but if the votes of Georgia were not counted Hancock would have 144 votes; but in either event, Garfield would have a majority. The same statement was made as to the vote for vice-president, and the vice-president, Wheeler, declared that Garfield and Arthur had been elected president and vice-president. A trifling incident which occurred, was the subject of some comment at the time. The tally-sheet, kept by Senator Hamlin, one of the tellers, footed up so as to elect Hancock by thirty majority. The fact appears to be that the senator is not very "good in arithmetic," and had put several republican states into the democratic column. Perhaps the old habit of counting, in the wrong man has become so strong in republican members, that it will need watching.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., Feb. 8, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER: When DeSoto, many years ago, crossed the Mississippi for the first time with his harassed army and continued his fatiguing march through Arkansas, passing this point, he little thought that the water flowing from the mountain side would prove more efficacious in restoring man from a physical wreck than the waters he had vainly sought for in Florida. A few days residence here has convinced me that their curative powers are simply wonderful in a long list of diseases.

The springs are situated in one of the loveliest, most romantic regions I have ever visited, surrounded with beautiful mountains that look as though they were fashioned after a model, with their smooth surface and shapely proportions. The valleys and gorges intervening are generally narrow, and the one now occupied by the business portion of the city is just large enough for a street and a row of houses abutting against the mountain side, excavations being necessary to give them depth. A mountain stream comes poring down along this street walled in on both sides, and this is the dividing point between government and individual ownership. On the government side are the bath-houses, now quite numerous, into which are conducted the thermal waters as they come from mother earth. The houses are splendidly furnished and contain from twenty to forty bath-rooms with all their equipments. The water has to be reduced in temperature, as it comes from the springs at a heat of about 150 degrees. It is well known here that hogs and chickens have been frequently scalded in these waters without additional heat. There are sulphur, iron, arsenic and other qualities of waters here, some warm, others cold, but the hot springs are the ones most generally used.

There is an exhilerating effect in bathing in these waters at 100 to 110 degrees even to those who do not need them for some specific disease. At the invitation of Mr. McKeogh, of the Independent bath-house, I plunged into a tub filled with this water at 104 degrees, and I never realized such a pleasing effect before. It seems charged with electricity or some other quality that electrifies and exhilerates, and this sensation is experienced by all. No one here but what loves to bathe, and you will see the crippled rheumatic, the scrofulous, the blind, all hastening at early morn to their baths, eager to forget for a time the ills that flesh is heir to. Hundreds are here now seeking relief from innumerable diseases, and soon the influx of strangers will fill the many commodious hotels and boarding-houses here with the afflicted of all lands. But it is not the diseased frame alone that comes here for relief. The over-wrought business man, the wearied society belle, the dissipated fast young man seek to be rejuvenated and invigorated at this spot whence healing streams do flow.

The climate here is delightful, scarcely much warmer in August than where you are, with the advantage of cool nights. Spring opens here early, in fact you might say it is in sight, for the day is warm, the birds are muttering among the pines up the mountain side, and grass is growing along the banks at their base. Though the winter has been unusually cold, the thermometer reading as low as zero, yet it will retard the coming of spring but little. Early vegetables are being provided for, and gardens are receiving their first invoice of seeds.

At the mouth of the narrow valley a large plateau of ground appears which is being rapidly improved for residences. Many buildings are in course of construction, some of them very elegant and handsome. The hotels here are very good, several of them being run on the same style as first-class hotels in our larger cities. Hotel rates are pretty high yet, but it is thought that a general reduction will take place before long, owing to the competition. There is an effort being made now to reduce the price of baths one-half, but as yet only three houses are offering these rates.

The farming community is not a very extensive one within a radius of a few miles around this place, owing, evidently, to the stony and mountainous character of the country, but I am told that beyond this there is a general agricultural interest being developed. The mountains abound with game, such as bear, deer and smaller animals, both of the former now being offered in market. There are other features here, such as tarantulas, a large black spider-looking insect, which are met with occasionally in the woods, but I am told they seldom annoy any one, and there bite is not necessarily fatal. The centipede is another interesting creature with numerous feet, at the joint of each of which is a sting quite poisonous, but I cannot stop to particularize on all. There is so much which the newcomer sees that I have only skimmed over the surface.

TOM.

Arvan Americans.

It seems that a few persons of "pure blood" are trying to organize a semi-order of nobility in this country. It is the invention of Mr. F. G. Forsyth, of Portland, Maine. He wishes to begin by establishing a "College of Heraldry" for America. This will finally be merged into what he is pleased to term the "American Peerage." He has written to several eminent men in all parts of the country, asking their co-operation. Among these are John Wentworth Charles Francis Adams, George H. Pendleton, Edward Pierrepont and others. Only those can become members of the order, who can trace their descent "through a line of ancestry to some established noble or gentle house in Europe, whose origin is unmistakably aristocratic and not linked with trade." The members of the order are to be known as knights, and have "sir" prefixed to their names. The intention of the founder of the order is to make this the ruling class of the country—a privileged class similar to the nobility and gentry in England. Mr. Forsyth is collecting pedigrees for his American Book of Peerage, and it is surprising to see how many are able, or pretend to be able, to show noble descent. Heretofore fine blooded horses, cattle, sheep, etc., were the only pedigreed stock in this country. Now they must look to their laurels, for Mr. Forsyth is establishing an active competition.

Family Re-union.

EDITOR COURIER.—Myself and wife were invited by Mr. & Mrs. Philip Parnel, to meet with the Leas family at their house on the 3d of Feb. to celebrate the eighty-second birthday of their mother, Sophia Leas. Mrs. Leas enjoys fair health, is quite smart for one of her age and appears to enjoy these festive occasions. When I saw her placed at the head of a table that was loaded down with good things of the land, and surrounded by her children, I thought they all ought to rejoice that their mother had been spared to them so long. There were present of her children, John Leas, Waterloo; Mr. & Mrs. Sam'l. Miller, Angola; Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Leas, Hudson; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beard, Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Parnel, Smithfield; Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Leas, Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Leas, of Angola; Mr. and Mrs. Dr. E. R. Leas, Angola; Mrs. John Leas, and unfortunately Mrs. Susannah, the widow of Wm. Leas and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Yeagy were detained by sickness. In addition to the above there were eight grand-children present.

After partaking of an excellent and bountiful repast, which by its variety and style of serving evinced much taste on the part of Mrs. Parnel and her daughters. Returning to the parlor I learned what appears to me, one of the features of this family gathering. In In settling the estate of Mr. Leas the heirs have executed to Mrs. Leas notes drawing ten per cent. interest, payable annually on her birthday. I consider that a splendid arrangement and worthy of imitation. At the close of the festival the writer read the following essay, which the friends voted to have published:

"Ladies and Gentlemen of the Leas family: We have met this day to celebrate the anniversary of the eighty second birthday of Sophia Spangler Leas, your mother. And in order that we may learn a lesson while we are paying due respect to the aged mother, let us in our imaginations roll back the curtain of time, and for a short period contemplate the past. Think of that beautiful valley in the state of Pennsylvania, where eighty-two years ago to-day, a dear mother and a doting father had born to them a dear little bud of womanhood.

Me thinks I can see them with joy beaming from their countenance as they look upon this little bud that has been committed to their care. How anxious they become for its welfare and comfort. But their joy increases as they see this little bud begin to grow, and their anxiety increases with the development of this charge left to their keeping. But time passes, and this little one grows and blooms into a fine young lady; and soon attracts the eye and gains the heart of a young man and they become one. Then she leaves the home of the kind parents that have watched her with so much interest; for the brief years she has been with them. But time passes, and those parents go to that bourn from which no traveler returns. These ties being severed she clings with more energy to the man of her choice; but the wheels of time keep moving on, and in their revolutions many changes takes place, and to-day you can look back and re-call many incidents of your childhood days, and think of the anxiety and care that that mother bestowed upon your youthful heads. But to-day you are the ones that like family cares rest upon, and you can understand many things that mother said and did for you while children, that you could not understad nor appreciate at that time.

But time passes, and in its race it has carried nearly, if not all, of mother Leas' early associates to their final resting place. But God has spared her and has lengthened out her years far beyond the common age of mankind, and you have been blessed with the society of a mother from infancy to the declining years of some of you, while she has lived to see you all settled down and in good circumstances, and honorable citizens in the community where she lives.

We have contemplated the past, now let us, by the eye of faith, take a view of the future. Mother Leas has had her family preserved for her enjoyment far beyond that of most people but Time, the the great leveler of all things is on our track, and will soon overtake us and this family circle will soon be broken, and the chairs that encircle this social board will be vacated one by one, until they all will be left without an occupant.

Each of these family gatherings makes the number less, and ere long they must cease altogether. Mother cannot be at but a few more, but still she may fill the last chair. Be that as it may, it will make no difference if we are prepared and are ready to meet in an unbroken family circle around the great white throne where God will be our Father and Jesus Christ our elder brother. Therefore let us redeem the time as it passes and apply our hearts unto wisdom."

The next re-union will be held at the residence of Sheriff Leas, in Auburn, on the 3d of Feb., 1882.

J. E. THOMSON.

Our Common Schools.

EDITORS COURIER: While reading an article in your paper upon the "Bane of Our Public Schools," and thinking upon the one which was pointed out, viz: "low wages," it occurred to me that there might be some reasons why it was a bane. The law of supply and demand controls the wages of teachers as much as it controls anything else which may be demanded by the people. If the supply is greater than the demand, the result must be a decrease in price; and if the supply be less than the demand the reverse must be true. Every one knows this to be true, and acts accordingly. Knowing this, we, as teachers, have the remedy in our own hands. We should labor to have the standard of examination so raised as to exclude from our ranks those who are not capable of reaching that standard, or have not the energy to attempt it. In order to do this, we must be ably seconded by a superintendent who has the moral courage and manly stability to reject any and all applicants who may fall below this standard, even though they are personal friends or former pupils. He should also be a man who has no friends to reward and no enemies to punish. Such a superintendent we have now, and the teachers of the county regret that his business is such as to forbid his further service in that position. During his term of office the schools have kept up to their previous standard of excellence, and wages, though still too low are better than last year. There has been good work in the schools because care has been taken in the selection of teachers. Township institutes have become a recognized success, and great good has resulted therefrom. Let the teacher, and all others interested in the cause of education, look into this matter thoroughly and work together, and we may have another superintendent who will keep up the interest already existing in our common schools, and at the same time the wages will be increased.

—The high waters have done considerable damage, and especially along Cedar Creek. Last week on Wednesday morning, it began with a warm rain and a balmy atmosphere. Everybody expected it to be but temporary, but it was not so, however, and the rain came harder for several successive days, and the signs for a gigantic flood were plainly visible. On Saturday, Cedar Creek began to show what she could do in the deluge business, and, from what we have heard, her part was well performed. All the low lands on each side of the stream were covered with water, and the rumbling noise, as she took her course southward, could be heard at a great distance. Bridges were washed away, fences were torn down and carried off, dirt was washed away from the roots of trees and they fell to rise no more. Cellars along Main and Cedar streets were filled with water to the depth of several feet, and a number of articles therein were ruined. It is all over now, and our people can fix things up for the next time.

—The Eel-River road shows up the latest smash-up of railroad material. Last Sunday a train ran off the track between Auburn Junction and Cedar Creek, smashing several cars badly and destroying a quantity of flour and grain. The most prominent sensation connected with this smash-up is as follows: A young man from Butler, dressed in a suit of black broad-cloth and his "mug" adorned with a spring style plug hat, was on his way to see his girl. The conductor was on the engine when it jumped the track, and walking along to the rear end of the train, he spied some object crawling out of the mud and water that accumulated along the ditch. It arose, and there before him stood the would be lover.

"Hello, what's up?" asked the conductor.

And, emptying the water out of his plug, he remarked:

"I am a h——l of a looking thing to go and see a girl, ain't I?"

—Now as spring approaches, and our merchants are preparing to change their line of goods from winter to summer trade of merchandise, we would call their attention to the superior advantage they gain by advertising in the Courier. Our paper has far the largest circulation of any published in the county, and has a large list of subscribers at each postoffice. We have the finest display of type of any establishment in the county, and employ workmen who know how to do work in a neat and tasty manner. The citizen and the farmer expect each merchant to invite them, in the columns of their county paper, to come and examine their goods. The day has come that the people ask this, and the business man, who neglects this important point in his every day routine of business, throws to one side one of his most successful moves in life.

—Our readers will remember of an article being published in the Courier several months ago, relating to an accident on the B. & O. road, wherein the engineer was killed and the fireman, Theo. Swihart, was badly injured. Mr. Swihart, however, gradually recovered, and has, for some time past, been on duty on the same road. For a few weeks back, he has not been feeling well and took a lay off in order to recruit up a little. He kept getting worse, and finally died at his home in Garrett, the latter part of last week. Theo. was a lively, jovial fellow, and was rapidly gaining the confidence of his employers. It is generally believed that the hurt he received, caused his death. He leaves a wife, but no children.

—We learn through a letter from "Jack" Little, that he landed safely at Hot Springs, Arkansas, on Tuesday night of last week. His anticipations were somewhat blighted on arriving at the Springs, and "Jack" has already found out that it is not so nice to have the "mocking birds sing him to sleep every night." He took a stroll down to the city market one morning, and saw on exhibition crows, ground-hogs, opossums, coons, etc., but he also states that they had beef and pork, too. We suppose these extra dishes named above, are for sale expressly for the "cullered gemmen," and the white folks eat sweet potatoes and cracked corn.

—In a few weeks it will be time for our horse-men to advertise the superior qualities of their blooded steeds, and now while we have this subject in our mind, we will inform all owners of horses that we have a fine and elegant assortment of cuts made expressly for the getting up of posters and newspaper advertising. We have all the different grades, from the large, heavy Norman to the small, light race-horse, and we guarantee to put the work together in good style, and charge only a fair compensation for our labor. Call up and have talk about it.

—Many of the friends of Frank Larimore would, no doubt, like to hear of his whereabouts. We learn through a letter that he is at Baltimore, Md. He writes that another polar wave struck that locality last week. There is as much ice in the Chesapeak Bay as at any time during the winter—the same in Delaware Bay and Long Island Sound.

—Mrs Tom Scott is quite sick.

—Commissioner's court next week.

—Herby Weaver is under the weather.

—The express wagons are on wheels again.

—The blacksmiths' harvest still continues.

—Tom. Morris, of Angola, is visiting in town.

—Dr. Hother, of Garrett, was in the city Monday.

—Several signs took a tumble last Saturday night.

—Billy Murphy is busy in the paper-hanging business.

—The new paint company is now Steel, Case & Weyer.

—A good theater troupe would be well patronized just now.

—Theo. Reed is now employed at the Excelsior hardware store.

—Don't throw your ashes into the street; it spoils the sleighing.

—There were no services at the Presbyterian church last sabbath.

—Rob't. Showers is limping around with a big toe frozen to death.

—Tom Mays will not move his family to Hot Springs until spring.

—Miss Etta Showalter leaves to-day to visit her brother in Decatur.

—Hi. Rasely is again among the living. He was in town yesterday.

—Billy Little smashed his thumb while loading logs, last Monday.

—Miss Frankie Ryan is visiting with her friends at Waterloo this week.

—Hon. L. D. Britton, of Corunna, gave us a short call on Friday last.

—Wm. Lanham is not extensively engaged in the poultry business now.

—Do not forget the dance at the Stamets hotel, at the junction, February 22.

—The workmen at the hub and spoke factory are now paid at the end of each month.

—A pleasant party was held at the residence of Wm. Sthair last Saturday evening.

—The doctors seem to be at home a good deal now. There's not much sickness.

—Charley Hoff is taking a lay-off and Mr. Gilland wraps up groceries during his vacation.

—The engineers of the new Lake Shore road passed through Lagrange on Saturday last.

—A literary society will be organized this evening, at the residence of Miss Mollie McKay.

—The log men who have been laying idle for several days, have resumed operations again.

—The passenger trains on the Lake Shore road began to run again on Tuesday of this week.

—There will be services at the Lutheran church next Sunday morning. Rev. Rice officiating.

—Quite a number of our citizens "took in" Fort Wayne yesterday, to attend the soldiers' re-union.

—Auburn pays the highest price of any town in the county for wheat, and in fact all kinds of grain.

—See the new advertisement of Root & Co., in another column. This enterprising firm means business.

—Elmer Lowry, an employe of the Saginaw road, at Jackson, Mich., is spending a few days at home.

—Johnny Gossage says he is going south in the spring. St. Johns will add a good citizen to its population.

—Mat. Zirves, of Waterloo, came down here Tuesday night after Dr. Cowan, his wife being very sick.

—Charles Klotz is selling McDonald's exposure of the great whisky-ring frauds. Every one should read it.

—Next Tuesday is Washington's birthday. We don't know when his little hatchet's birthday day comes.

—Those "who have been thar" say the new Baptist minister is far superior to the average country preacher.

—Frank Rush, of Butler, and Billy Spake, of Garrett, were in the city Monday. Come to see their girls, don't it.

—Lute Miller takes a deep interest in the success of our band boys, and has contributed quite freely to their wants.

—Commissioners court next month. There will be some bridge contracts to let, owing to damages by the high waters.

—Mitch. Houston's new butcher has begun work. This establishment does a large skinning business the year around.

—Why is it that our churches have not held a series of protracted meetings this winter? "There's always more to follow."

—Rev. S. V. McKee, of Mishawaka, Indiana, will preach in the Presbyterian church next Sunday morning and evening.

—The invoicing fever is raging among the merchants. If you find that you have more than you want, divide with us.

—There is an occasional counterfeit silver dollar in circulation. It has the true ring, but is lighter in weight than the genuine.

—Johnny Specht has been suffering from erysipelas in the face for several days. His head was swollen to twice its original size.

—Our farmer friends say that the snow of Saturday was a splendid thing for the wheat, otherwise it might have been frozen to death.

—Howard Coe, who published the DeKalb County Democrat, at this place some years ago, is living at North Manchester, this state.

—Sam Puff is mixing up dough at Ed. Baker's place. Sam ought to have nice light bread, if the Puff has anything to do with it.

—Several of our old saloon men have abandoned the business, and inexperienced parties are trying their hands at it. "There's millions in it."

—There was a pleasant dance party at the residence of Wash Link, Auburn Junction, last Friday evening. They had a hoppin' good time.

—Our popular barber on Seventh street, W. Edgington, is always improving his shop, making things as pleasant as possible for his customers.

—From the Elkhart papers we learn that Will. Forshey, of the Junction, has been hanging around there for several days. Went to see his girl, eh?

—Charley Picker has purchased a lot on Van Buren street, in rear of Berry's machine shop, and will erect a brick dwelling thereon the coming summer.

—Letsht's mon-dawk war Fawsonocht, un von de mommy kick-lin g'bock'a hut, don is olles recht; un von net don pifed mer uf de Fawso-nocht.

—Tom Gross was the only man on Main street who cleaned off his sidewalk after the recent snow. We move that our town dads give Thomas a pension.

—Dr. Kelly and G. M. Ray, of Syracuse, the former a pill peddler, and the later a dispenser of Blackstone, were shaking hands with their many friends here last Monday.

—The Air Line trains now run over the B. & O. to Avilla and thence to Kendallville, and from there back on the old line. High waters have washed away the bridges.

—We have added several hundred subscribers to our already large list, in the last few months, and would just as leave take that many more. Come right along, gentlemen.

—Der Mike Kiplinger un der Oscar Denison ben un ding g'mocbed for seck ha'va. Se shwet'sa der tun far es g'palent gre'ga, un ich glawl vor'hosh'dich das es ba'taawia date.

—Someone poisoned Ed. Eldridge's pup. Any man who would do such a mean thing as this to so smart and innocent a dog, out to be used as a target at a country shooting-match.

—The Wabash Courier, named after us, is one of the best local country papers we ever read. Its articles are gotten up in a spicy and intelligent manner, but rather too personal.

—Our neighbor, Kib., who dishes out hardware below the Courier office, is one among the earliest risers in town. He is a lively, thorough business man and his success in life is assured.

—The delinquent tax-list, published in the Porter County Vidette, occupies one page. It is a nice piece of workmanship, however, and shows plainly that the Vidette is not run by boys.

—Chas. Spake, all the boys know Charley, tried to play a tune on a cog-wheel, at Garrett, and got two fingers badly mangled. They will probably have to be amputated.

—It does not pay to buy cheap buggies, as many have found out to their sorrow, and the best place to buy one that is substantial and fully warranted, is at the Eckhart Carriage Works, Auburn, Ind.

—The faithful agent of the B. & O. express company, Chris. Baker, is on duty every day, rain or shine. And, by the way, Chris. is getting a wide reputation as a hotel man. When you go to the junction drop in.

—The Lake Shore railroad has made arrangements for an immense increase of its facilities. It will include 55 new locomotives, 1,750 freight cars, a number of passenger coaches and other equipments, costing in all $3,000,000.

—A pleasant surprise party was held at Richard Elson's residence Monday evening. The scholars of Dr. Sears and Mr. Elson's Sunday-school classes arranged the programme, and a happy time was had.

—When physicians recommend Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup for coughs, colds, etc., of long standing, it certainly must be good. Call at the drug-store and try a bottle of it, the price is only 25 and 50 cents.

—No cough nor cold, however obstinate, can resist the healing qualities of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. It completely cures when all others fail. Try it. Only 25 cents a bottle; large size 50 cents.

—A street peddler, who blew a second-hand horn to gather a crowd, was on the streets Monday. His sales were not very large, our people prefering to buy their goods at home, and thereby receive good, substantial articles.

—Conny Little, our Con., made the valedictory address to the audience at the band concert last Friday evening. Cony started out in immense style, but when he came to the winding up point, he wasn't there. He had forgotten where the box was, and ——ed off his elegant and sublime words without end. The audience began to fall asleep, one by one, when Con. was ——ed by Chris. Baldock and carried behind the scenes.

—Quite a number of the soldier boys attended the re-union of their old regiment, the 44th, at Fort Wayne this week.

—If certain cats don't quit "yawen" around our house of nights, there certainly will be a reduction in the cat census very soon.

—James Stonebraker's dwelling-house near Corunna was destroyed by fire on Saturday of last week, loss, about $1,000, insurance, $150.

—The party subject is beginning to wear out. Instead of having six each week they have only one, and the father of the high-toned youth finds the change very convenient to his financial box.

—Mitchel's saw-mill was filled with water so as to prevent the workmen to perform their labor. This is the first time in the history of the mill that the water has been so high as to stop the running of the machinery.

—Will. Snaffer would like to visit his friends in Waterloo oftener, but then some of them have such a care less way of borrowing a fellow's cutter. But Will. never gets mad when a girl has to be taken out riding.

—Easley's block came near swimming off last week. The water in the basement was up to the first floor, and if there hadn't been so much heft to the building, it would have gone down stream—but it is hard to make brick float.

—We hear that a gentleman from Fort Wayne, contemplates opening a saloon and billiard hall, in an up-stairs room on Seventh street. A saloon without a back door attached to it wouldn't be worth five cents on the dollar.

—Dr. Allyn, who has been hobbling about on crutches for several months, caused from being thrown out of a buggy, is now at Ann Arbor having his limb operated upon. We hope the doctor will meet with a successful result.

—List of unclaimed letters in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., February 12, 1881: Isabella Brown, Mrs. E. M. Brown, Alexander Bowers, Harrison Burgett, Henry Dawson, L. Q. Hardesty, Laura E Jones, Mary Walters.

Jos. Rainier, P. M.

—Clarence Shell, who has been buzzing about town with Doc. Ryan for a partner, for several days, has returned to his home at Fort Wayne. We hear that several of our young ladies tried to get him cracked, but be wasn't that kind of a Shell.

—Monday was St. Valentine's day, and the boys and girls of tender years had lots o'fun picking out and sending characteristic valentines to each other. The postmaster was, of course, in a good humor, and just calls it one of his busy days.

—Tom Cool has a fine looking pair of four-year-old colts that have been driven together for some time, but from some cause unknown, one of them kicked the other on the leg Monday night and broke the limb square off. We are sorry that Tom has met with this sad misfortune.

—Nessels, the murderer, was placed in jail last Thursday and bailed out by his friends on Friday, the bonds being placed at $1,500 instead of $1,000. He is an innocent looking fellow, and we have no doubt, feels sad over the rash act he recently committed.

—George W. Gordon is agent for th History of the 44th Indiana Regimen written by Dr. Rerick, of Lagrange. The work is one of unusual interest to the friends of this noted regiment, and a copy of it should be in every household. We predict for the work a large sale.

—An Iowa clergyman charges for marrying couples, four cents a pound for the groom and two cents for the bride.—[Lagrange Standard.

We would advise some of our young kids, who are so anxious to double-up, and cannot pay the five dollars asked by Indiana clergymen, to go to Iowa.

—A young man by the name of Taylor, brakeman on the Saginaw road, while coupling cars at the junction, recieved a severe injury of the right hand, which will probably result in the loss of the thumb. His injuries were dressed by Dr. Littlefield, who thinks there is a possibility of saving the thumb, although, if saved, will be more in the way than useful.

—Sunday last was one of those mean, disagreeable days. The streets were barren of people. The hotels were "patronized" extensively, and the old inhabitant, as well as the young weather-cock, gave his opinions of the weather, and told all present exactly how spring would open up. The girl who had just got her winter hat, or her pull-back dress fixed over, was compelled to stay at home and meditate over the thoughts of Julia Jones, if she could only see her walk up the church isle with her new out-fit on. Truly it is said, "life is but a dream."

—The concert given by the Auburn band, last Friday evening, was a successful undertaking for the boys, the proceeds amounting to $41.25 leaving them in the neighborhood of $35.00 to further the interests of the organization. The night was rainy and the wind blew hard, and otherwise the audience would have probably been twice as large. We learn that the boys will give another entertainment ere long, assisted by the Corunna band, and by putting the two together, our citizens can look forward for a first-class concert.

Neighborhood Nippings.

—An Irish Land League has been established in Fort Wayne, with Judge Robert Lowry as its president.

—Parties at Milford expect to run a hack to Syracuse lake during next summer for the accommodation of pleasure seekers.

—Syracuse Gazette: Last week Alf. Roberts shipped by express to a friend in Pennsylvania, a pike caught in Syracuse lake which measured three feet and a half in length and weighed eighteen pounds. Beat that if you can.

—The hogs of Joseph Perrin, of South Toledo, went on a big drunk, the other day. Some casks of native wine had been placed outside the house, when by some accident, a spigot was knocked out of one of them and the hogs drank their fill, and all got drunk as lords.

—Last week, some prisoners confined in jail at Fort Wayne, attempted to escape by throwing pepper into the jailer's eyes, and then pounding him over the head with a club. The plucky jailer and his assistant were equal to the the emergency, and the rascals having failed in the attempt, are now put into closer quarters.

—The D. Pauw Plate Glass company, of New Albany, Ind., one of the largest plate-glass manufacturing concerns in the world, are to remove their works to Pittsburg. Already the company has purchased thirty acres of land at the southern suburbs of the city. The company paid $500,000 for their works at New Albany, and the works at Louisville cost $200,000. They expect to save $125,000 a year in the cost of coal alone by removing to Pittsburg.

—During the past week the country has been visited with most destructive floods. Bridges have been carried away at Logansport, Merom, South Bend, Toledo and numberless other places. At New Orleans, part of the city has been flooded for several days, and some of the railroads cannot enter the city, but transfer their passengers to boats, some miles out. At Toledo, the middle ground has been ten feet under water, and the railroad sheds and other property, much damaged. No trains could pass through for a number of days. The Lake Shore road, could only run partial trains from Toledo west. At Cleveland, the water and broken ice came tearing down the river to the lake, where it gorged and the water began rising in the lower parts of the town, but a cannon was taken out on the pier and some thirrty shells thrown upon that portion of the ice that still held together. This broke the ice and let the gorge clear itself by moving into the lake, and the danger was past.

FLOODS AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

At Washington, the breaking up of ice in the Potomac, has caused an unprecedented flood. The ice packed up against the Long Bridge, causing the water to rise rapidly, until it covered all the lower part of the city. Half of Pennsylvania Avenue was flooded and boats were used to take people across from one side to the other. Part of the grounds at the White House, were under water. The Botanical Gardens were destroyed, and water filled the basement of the census office, so that the records of the census had to be removed to prevent their destruction—all were saved, however. In a foundry, the melted iron was allowed to run out, to prevent its coolling into a solid mass in the cupola, as the water was rising in the building. The rush into the water, of the hot iron, caused a violent explosion, injuring several workmen. A lime house took fire from the wetting of the lune, and the fire spread rapidly. The firemen, working waist deep in the water finally subdued it. Saturday night, one end of the Long Bridge gave away and the water began to subside.

—The young man who "dishes up" locals for the Terre Haute Gazette, in speaking of a wedding trousseau, wrote that the bride wore a pair of slippers on her dainty feet which would fit a fairy bride. The intelligent compositor had it: "The bride wore a pair of slippers in her dirty feet which would fit a ferry-boat." The Gazette man was over at Indianapolis "doing" the legislature for a couple of weeks afterward, was the reason the irate bridegroom did not lick the editor.—[Lagrange Democrat.

For Sale or Rent.

Desiring to change my business, I wish to either sell or rent my saloon and stock. It is A. No. 1 saloon—the best in Butler, being supplied with an ice-house full of ice. For further particulars, call on or address

For Sale.

A residence in the south part of town, new house containing eight rooms, good cistern and well. Also, good house in west part of town containing five rooms, with wood-house, well, cistern and large lot, will be sold at a bargain. W. H. McQuiston.

WATERLOO.

—Mrs. John Leas is on the sick list.

—Judge Best has returned from "Goshen."

—Several cases of sickness reported near town.

—Meeting still in progress at the U. B. church.

—The Presbyterian church elected new officers last Thursday evening.

—Miss Katie Brown has returned from a protracted visit to her relatives.

—Mell. Johnson's box at the postoffice was filled three times with valentines on Monday.

—Jule Dennison's big sticks of candy survives, but the small boys look in at the window with longing eyes.

—C. W. Gillette, agent of the Jackson road, has provided a comfortable sitting-room for ladies at the depot.

—Several trains on the Lake Shore road had to be abandoned on account of high water in the middle ground at Toledo.

—Over six hundred valentines were put into the postoffice here on Monday, and a corresponding number of the people made happy.

—Mr. Chilcoat, of Edgerton, is visiting his Waterloo friends this week, and from his looks we have come to the conclusion that Edgerton is a very healthy town.

—M. E. quarterly meeting last Sunday, Rev. Greeneman presiding. In the evening he preached an interesting missionary sermon. Subject: Mexico. It was listened to with great interest.

—The Presbyterian social will be entertained by the ladies of the church, at the residence of Henry Willis, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 23. Supper from six to eight o'clock. All are invited.

—Brand and Duncan have been so busy dealing out groceries, that they delivered a sack of buckwheat flour instead of Indian meal. Luckily it fell into honest hands, and an exchange followed.

—Miss Kring preached her farewell sermon Monday night: Her next field of labor will be Elkhart. We understand that a great many have joined the Evangelical church, since these meetings began.

—Jacob Kahn, of Chicago, was in town over Sunday. The only change we see in Jake is, that if anything he is a "leetle" fatter than he was and a more whole-souled fellow than Jacob Kahn is, indeed, hard to find.

PERFECTED PLANS.

The General Committee at Washington Showing Great Energy, and the B. & O. Road Backit up Most Effectively.

The fourth of March is coming closer and closer, and as a consequence thereof the activity displayed by the committees at Washington and by the management of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company is most apparent. The general committee, in the perfecting of all the plans necessary for the complete success of the inauguration display, has its hands full, but as there appears to be no end of money or of enterprise and energy, there is no doubt but what the event will be a memorable one. The Baltimore and Ohio having the great advantage of the only direct track from Chicago to Washington, will undoubtedly be very largely patronized, and to meet the demands on the road the company has recently added very largely to its equipment and perfected its schedule to accommodate any number of trains and put them through on prompt time. The placing on of its dining-car line has proved a very popular move on the part of the Baltimore and Ohio, and now with its diners, its palatial sleepers, its elegant day coaches and fast time, the old reliable route will be more popular than ever. The company will place on sale round-trip tickets at low rates, good going on any train from the first to the third inclusive, and returning on any train up to the night of the seventh.

FASHIONS.

Purple, maroon, blue and sage,
Red and yellow, all the rage,
Satins, velvet, silk and wool,
Dresses scant and dresses full,
Gathered, pleated, shirred and plain,
Short and long and demi-train,
Aprons, trains and jaunty coats,
Wraps, dolmans and redingotes—
[illegible] on dress parade,
[illegible] cavalcade!

Gray-haired matrons, blondes, brunettes,
Pretty school-girls, coy coquettes,
Eyes of blue, of black, of brown,
From the country, from the town,
Hair in coils, in curls, in braids,
Merry children, nursery maids,
Tall and slender, fat and short,
Characters of every sort,
Congregate from near and far;
To revel in the world's bazar.

Plaids and stripes and polka dots,
Suits for coaches, suits for yachts;
All the world is but a stage
For archery or pilgrimage.

Bend the Leghorn hats in shape,
Drape the shawls of Canton crape,
Hail the fates that now restore
Fashions à la Pompadour;
Celebrate the grand event,
Join the toilet tournament.

THE NEW SCHOOLMASTER.

It was a warm twilight in early October when the new schoolmaster arrived at the Forks. He came on foot, with his traveling-bag slung over his back by means of a cane—a sturdy young man, with red hair, shapely features and an independent gait. He held his head as if he were determined to thrust it through every obstacle which came in his way, and looked neither to the right nor to the left, though a glance over his shoulder would have revealed to him, through the fringes of the gigantic pine trees, a sunset picture such as is seldom seen in this cold New England region.

There was more than the usual number of sitters in the store that night, drawn thither by the fact that the new schoolmaster was expected, and, when that gentleman reached the dingy little building, they were all on the steps to greet him.

"New schoolmaster, I calc'late; step'n the scaterable awhile, hey?" said the store-keeper, who was also the school-agent and mill-owner—the one great man of the place.

"Would like to, but the fact is I've been a-travelin' all day, pretty much, and am gettin' to be rather sharp-set. Besides that, I'm afraid my boarding-mistress 'll get tired o' waitin' for me, and clear away her supper-table."

"Ah, yis; wal, pr'aps ye'd better keep along. The widder hain't overpeahunt. That's her haouse over there—the second on the right. Hope I see you well, mister."

The second house on the right was cosy and inviting. It was unpainted, but the curtains at the windows were daintily white and clean. Great trees stood and gave it a pleasant, sheltered look, though the leaves had nearly all fallen. A row of milk-pans hanging on the fence reflected the sunset clouds in their glowing surfaces, and suggested the perfection of household neatness. A motley brood of fowls are eating their supper with a great deal of cluck and clatter from the hands of a rosy, energetic-looking matron who stood in the doorway. A young girl with a complexion like a picture of Greuze was driving a speckled cow up the lane which led to the barn. The cow's horns were fancifully decorated with a garland of the "traveler's joy," still beautiful, though its leaves were slightly discolored by frost, and its white blossoms changed to airy, silver down. The girl's rustic broad-brimmed hat was also decorated with leaves, berries and dried blossoms. The picture was worth seeing, but the schoolmaster evidently had not an artist's eye.

At the first glance he said to himself, "Pity that girl doesn't know how to spend her time in a more profitable way than to trim up a cow in all that nonsense."

The girl colored to the deepest crimson when she discovered the stranger's eye upon her, and she disappeared into the barn with her cow as quickly as possible.

The woman in the doorway disposed of her dish of corn, felt of her back hair and made haste to decorate her plain matronly features with a bright, hospitable smile.

"The new schoolmaster, I s'pose," said she, holding out her hand.

"I—I don't know," replied he, gazing after the retreating figure of the young girl in a dazed sort of way.

"What!" came in a tone of extreme astonishment from the woman, who regarded him with sudden suspicion.

"O, excuse me, the fact is, I am the new schoolmaster. I wasn't thinking, or rather, I was thinking about something else."

She smiled, and catching the merry twinkle in her eye he laughed aloud, but it was a vexed, embarrassed laugh, utterly destitute of mirth.

"She'll find me a different sort of a chap from what she imagines, I rather guess. It's the first time I ever forgot myself because a girl had a pretty face, and I mean it shall be the last," he said to himself.

"Walk in, Mr. Watkins; I kept supper waitin' fur you. I recon ye're pretty hungry travelin' so fur, or did you ride instead of travel?"

"You're right, marm, I am hungry. All the dinner I had was a dish of bread and milk at Grindall's."

"Miss Grindall don't pervide for stage passengers ez I should think she would. She's a-getting dretful kind of shifless lately. Ef you'll jest wait a minute or tew I'll stir up the fire a little. The tea's got a mite cold."

"O, yes, I can wait a few minutes when there is such a lively prospect of having something to eat before me."

"Do you follow school-keepin' all the year around, Mr. Watkins?"

"No, marm, I do a little tin peddling in the summer time. The women folks down below as well as up here have to have their turn at teaching then."

"Tin peddlin' is a dreatful payin' business, I've heard tell?"

"Well, it is tolerable. 'Taint quite as genteel as school keeping, but I'm for getting on in the world. I've most paid for a snug little farm already, and I and my mother manage pretty comfortably."

"This ain't so bad," thought the widow. "He's forehanded enough for so young a man, and he's orful took with Phebe. I never see anything like the way he looked at her. I did lot on her marryin' a preacher, but folks so high up in the world hain't so dreadful common, especially single ones. But, there, it's no use; she's so bashful she won't speak to nobody, won't let nobody git acquainted with her, all I ken say or dew."

"Phebe," she called, stepping to the door: "I wish you'd hurry in 'n pour the new schoolmaster's tea for him whilst I go daown sullar 'n work over my butter. Ets got tew be done afore dark, yeou knoew."

Phebe appeared with a look of dire distress on her lovely countenance and did as she was bidden, but she did not once lift her eyes during the whole time she remained in the room.

"This bread is first-rate, full as good as my mother makes, if not better. I shouldn't wonder if you made it yourself, now," said he, attempting to speak with his usual jaunty, self-important air. But, for some reason or other, he felt a strange embarrassment, and was surprised at himself. "What is there about this pesky girl that makes such a fool of me?" he thought, angrily.

The distress on Phebe's face deepened to actual despair as she gasped a hardly-audible "yes." She wished with all her heart that the bread was as heavy as it it had been yesterday, then, perhaps, he might have kept silence. "You're a going to be one of my scholars, I hope," he proceeded, with a glance of open admiration, though given with a rather shame-faced air. He did it to assure himself that he dared to do it, feeling unhappily like the old woman who did not know whether she was herself or no.

Phebe stammered something, which sounded like "I don't know," and moved as far away from the table as possible.

"Bashful as a partridge," he thought. "Well, so much the better; I don't like forward women. She ain't used to seeing anybody but lumbermen, and river-drivers, and that kind of clodhoppers, I s'pose, and is kinder flustrated at seein' me. But what do I care about her, anyhow; I've got such a start in the world that I ought to marry a rich woman. Rich widows are plenty every now and then. I don't imagine her mother has got much of any property."

As soon as he had finished his meal, Phebe hastily removed the dishes from the table and escaped into the kitchen, and he saw nothing more of her until the next morning. She appeared then in celestial blue, which harmonized wonderfully with the rich sunburn on her blonde cheeks, and one of the other boarders, a handsome, stalwart young lumberman, who sat beside her at the table, regarded her with devotion and talked to her in a low tone—so low that no one else was able to hear what he was saying.

Phebe seemed filled with confusion, and, beyond a blushing yes or no, made no reply, but the schoolmaster became instantly fired with jealousy, and commenced to draw all attention to himself by his boastful and pompous talk. He talked both of commerce and learning until the two young lumbermen looked properly subdued and became silent.

"Speakin' of books," said the landlady, "I bought one of a peddler last summer. It has got an orful pooty cover, but there's poetry inside; p'ra'ps you'd like to read that. I can't say as how I enjoy sech readin' myself, but Phebe she's all kerried away with it."

"I generally make my own poetry," said the schoolmaster, grandly.

An awed hush succeeded this announcement, and for the first time Phebe lifted her eyes and looked the consequential gentleman full in the face. It was a shy, brief glance, but filled with half-awed, half-admiring interest. The schoolmaster started when he met their gaze as if he had received a blow, and from that moment he was a changed man, so bound by the chains of love that his mind took no more ambitious flights; so anxious with its doubts and fears that he lost his flippant manners, and became subdued and silent; so humbled by its insight that he no longer held his head above his fellows; so softened and changed by its influence that his mercenary projects all went to naught.

At the end of the week it was voted by the other boarders that the schoolmaster was a "good feller, awfully diffrant from what he seemed at first." At the end of the month he was called "kinder grumpy," at the end of two months it was surmised that he was in love. Never was lover so tormented. The shyness of his lady-love was remarkable; she was never visible except at meal times and in the school-room. He spent all his leisure time in planning how he could meet her, but his plans always failed. If he found her alone in the kitchen at work, she would drop whatever she had in her hands and slip away in a flash. If he attempted to walk to school with her she would manage to elude him with truly wonderful adroitness. Once he hid behind a tree to waylay her on her way to school, but she seemed to guess his intentions by intuition and walked a half-mile out of her way to reach her destination by another road. Spelling-school evenings, when all the young fellows in the region round about congregated in the old school-house, each one waiting on the door-steps, when the exercises were over, to whisper, "May I see you home?" in rosy maidens' ears, Phebe clung to the skirts of some sober married female for protection, and insisted on going home in her shadow. In school-hours there was no opportunity for love-making. Phebe was a model scholar. She never missed in her lessons—she neither whispered nor laughed. All the other girls were continually asking questions of the master. They hung round him at recess; they lavished upon him all sorts of coquettish attentions; but Phebe was never troubled over her arithmetic, and never approached him from one day's end to another. So the days went on, and the term was nearly ended. He had spoken to Phebe's mother, and she had expressed her pleasure at receiving him as a son-in-law, but declared that she "couldn't dew nothin' with the gal; she was headstrong, as well as bashful, and, if she were to speak to her, it would only make the unhappy matter worse."

It was a clear, bright, winter morning. The clouds clung, like [illegible], to the highest boughs of the forest through which the schoolmaster passed on his way to school. An opening in the trees revealed the snow-covered peak of a distant mountain which shone like a beautiful star in the fair bosom of day. The wind wafted the spicy odor of the pines. A brook, singing under its prison wall of ice, seemed like a voice from fairy-land promising spring. The stillness surrounded one like a dream. The schoolmaster hung his head in deep thought. He must speak to Phebe. All his subtle plans to accomplish this end had failed heretofore, and the time when he should leave the place was nearing. He had been trying to find some excuse to keep her after school for a long time, in spite of its being held a great disgrace by the older girls to endure this punishment, though the boys and the smaller girls were often kept until nearly dark in the afternoon. But when was Phebe known to miss a lesson, or to commit a misdemeanor of any sort? "The only thing I can resort to is to keep her after school on the pretense of having discovered her whispering or laughing," he said to himself. "It is mean, I know, allfired mean, but there's no other way."

Fortune turned her face toward him that day, however. For some reason or other, Phebe was in an absent-minded mood and blundered unaccountably in her grammar lesson. Having once failed, she went from bad to worse, and got into such a maze of bewilderment that all the other girls laughed at her.

"You will stay a while after school to-night, Miss Phebe, and we'll see about this lesson," said he, more sternly than he had intended to speak, with a ring of triumph in his tone.

A murmur of disappointment ran round the room, but one glance at the determined face of the master was sufficient to hush it. Phebe accepted the punishment with comparative coolness. She colored deeply, of course, but she neither hid her face in her hands, nor wept, nor betrayed angry defiance. But the master was in a fever of uneasiness during the remainder of the session. He half expected rebellion. He feared that she would attempt to leave the school-room with the others in spite of his command, and sternly resolved to be on his guard against such a proceeding on her part.

His fears were groundless, however; when the bell rang for dismissal Phebe remained quietly in her seat, her demure eyes fixed upon her book. There had been a great deal of laughing and whispering, a great many failures in lessons that day, but it was a remarkable fact that no one but Phebe was subjected to so dire a punishment therefor. Venturing to look up, she found herself alone with the master, and burst into a flood of terrified tears.

"Phebe," he said, in a tender tone, approaching her desk, "don't be mad with me for keeping you here; 'twasn't on account of that miserable lesson, but because you wouldn't give me any chance to speak to you; you wouldn't let me tell you how much I set by you. I want you to be my wife."

Phebe's weeping progressed with renewed vigor.

"Tell me, Phebe, are you so mad that you will never forgive me? Won't you lift your head and give me just one look?"

There seemed to be no hope that this request would be granted.

"Tell me, Phebe, is it because I've got red hair that you won't have me? I know it's pretty red, but then I've seen a city preacher with redder," in a tone which implied that he expected doubt at such an astonishing statement.

Phebe shook her prostrate head emphatically. Her own hair approached this despised tint.

"Then what is it you have against me? Am I too poor? I haven't anything but my farm and its stock, and they ain't quite paid for, I know, but I mean to have more before long—that is, if you'll have me; if you won't, I don't care what becomes of me."

Phebe again shook her head very decidedly.

"Then I ain't genteel enough, or p'raps you like that curly-headed chap that works in the woods better," in a faint tone, ghastly with foreboding.

Another still more decided negative.

"Well, then, what's to hinder you from having me, I should like to know? Phebe, I'd rather have you be my wife than to own all the big farms, all the big lumber in Roostick county? Will you marry me?"

A renewed flood of tears was heard from the depths of the well-soaked grammar at this point, but there was a different kind of motion to the head, a slow, upward movement of the chin.

"Hurrah!" shouted the master, lifting the girl to her feet, and coming in contact with a great deal of briny moisture as he touched his lips to her cheek. "It's all right now. I ain't going to the insane asylum, I shan't commit suicide after all; and as for you, Phebe, I know I can make you happy. When I first came to the Forks, I thought there was nothing in the world but property 'n learning, but now I see my mistake."

And he shouted again, until the whole neighborhood resounded with his jovial voice.

Winter Sports.

"Ah, that's what I like! that's what I like!" chirped old Mr. Whistleblossom, as he came carefully down the hill where the boys were exercising their sleds. "If there's anything I really love, it's to see the boys, full of animal spirits, enjoying these wintry sports." And just at that instant 150 pounds of animal spirits came dashing down the hill on a double-runner, and caught the unsuspecting Mr. Whistleblossom between the heels. There was a sound of revelry by night, and when they picked up the unfortunate gentleman, and had pinned together the ruptured back of his coat, he remarked, in a tone so gentle that it made him quite black in the face, that the City Government who would refuse to pass a law making it a reform-school crime to slide on the streets were a set of pusillanimous yahoos.—Rockland Courier.

THE average of heat and cold varies but little from year to year. The average of the highest daily record in 1878 was 61¼, and in 1879 was 58¼, which shows an extreme of the change within five years. The average of the lowest daily record for the year 1879 was 41¼, and for 1878 46¼, representing the extremes on that side.

WHEN we study the construction of our most important instruments we discover to our astonishment that the latter are copies of some parts of our body, and simply a further completion of them. In the first stone hammer man has unknowingly imitated his forearm with closed fist; in the shovel and spoon we see the forearm and hollowed hand; in the saw we find a reproduction of a row of teeth; tongs represent the closing together of thumb and fingers; in the hook is a bent finger reproduced; the pencil is simply a prolongation of the forefinger; so we see in all instruments, from the simplest to the most complicated, only an improvement and completion of the human organs; and thus we find that all the intentional thoughts of man are directed toward the same aim as that toward which organic development tends.

PROF. TAIT, of Edinburgh, thus illustrates the gigantic scale upon which nature performs some of her most ordinary operations: Suppose a mere tenth of an inch of rain to fall from the lowest mile of the atmosphere. An inch of rain is five pounds of water to the square foot, and gives out on being condensed from vapor, approximately, 8,000 units of heat, on the centigrade scale. The mass of the mile-high column of air, a square foot in section, is about 360 pounds, and its specific heat about a quarter that of water. Thus its temperature throughout would be raised by about 33 degrees centigrade, or 60 degrees Fahrenheit. For one-tenth of an inch of rain, therefore, we should have a rise of temperature of the lowest mile of the atmosphere amounting to 33 degrees centigrade—quite enough to produce a very powerful ascending current. As the air ascends and expands it cools, and more vapor is precipitated, so that the ascending current is further accelerated. The heat developed over one square foot of the earth's surface under these conditions is equivalent to work at the rate of a horse-power for twelve minutes. Over a square mile this would be 10,000,000 horse-power for half an hour. A fall of one-tenth of an inch of rain over the whole of Great Britain gives heat equivalent to the work of 1,000,000 of horses for half an hour. Numbers like these are beyond our comprehension. They enable us, however, to see the full explanation of the energy of the most violent hurricanes in the simplest physical concomitants of the mere condensation of aqueous vapor.

A Matrimonial Shylock.

A clerk in a leading business house of this city became so involved that he needed $500 to extricate himself from the difficulty. By some means he discovered that a table girl at one of the hotels had by hard work saved up a considerable sum of money and to her he applied for a loan. This was readily granted, and a note with interest and a day of payment, only some months in the future, was executed in acknowledgement of the same. The time came and with it the same chronic inability on the part of the maker to pay it. He pleaded for an extension of time, but this the waiter maiden refused utterly to grant, and informed him that he must either pay the sum at once or marry her. The woman was about forty years old, and much more than correspondingly ugly, so that the debtor demurred against the imposition of such hard terms. The woman, however, was non-relenting. With her it was either the money or a husband, and, on the whole, she seemed quite anxious to choose the latter. When the hero saw the gravity of the situation he perceived no way to escape it, and finally capitulated, and the marriage was performed. The man belongs to a good family, and is said to be greatly humiliated by the condition in which he so unwillingly finds himself, in being allied by force to a woman so inferior to himself in social position and intellect. The woman, however, was so well pleased that she rented and furnished a house and was ready for business before the wedding day.—Indianapolis News.

Nature's Big Gas Tanks.

Bradford, Pa., and neighboring places are lighted and heated by natural gas. In 1875 an oil company was sinking a well in a high hill west of Bradford. At the depth of several hundred feet they struck a vein of gas. No oil was found. The force of the gas was such that when it was ignited a pillar of fire more than fifty feet high was formed. The roar of the gas could be heard for a mile and more. This burned for months. The heat was such that grass and foliage grew in the depth of winter as luxuriantly for hundreds of feet around as it did in the summer. Strawberries ripened near this well in February. The well had been burning for a long time before the feasibility of utilizing it was thought of. A belt of big territory, but yielding vast volumes of gas, was subsequently found to exist in the vicinity of the original gas well. A company was formed to carry the gas into the city. It is now distributed all over the place by pipes. A gas-pipe, with jets attached, is run into the parlor and kitchen stoves. The supply of gas is controlled by a stopcock on the pipe. When a fire is wanted a lighted match is thrown into the stove and the gas turned on. The fire is started at once. The gas possesses great heating qualities, and apartments are warmed as quickly and as well by it as by coal. Gas for illuminating purposes is conducted into the house the same as artificial gas is taken in. At first the light was not brilliant and steady, owing to impurities. Processes for refining it were invented, and now the natural illuminator is unsurpassed by the finest manufactured gas. It is so cheap that people seldom turn out their lights. It burns day and night in stores, hotels, private houses and streets. Consumers pay by the month instead of by the thousand. Gas-wells have come to be more valuable than oil wells, and the sudden phenomenal appearance of oil in some of the principal wells in the gas belt has created consternation among owners and consumers. For years the gas has flowed from wells in unremitting volume. That oil was not to be found there it was thought had been conclusively settled.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Dueling of the Last Century.

A man of the present age, not thoroughly conversant with the state of society in Europe during the eighteenth century, would hardly be willing to believe the truth of the matter. We speak particularly of the duel. Really, much of the adventure on the so-called field of honor, of that time, is entirely unfit for publication, and, if published, would be believed by but few. When reading of the duel in Ireland, the impression rests in our mind that the Emerald Isle must take the palm in the way of horrors and abominations of personal combat. But anon we visit England; then France; then Germany; Italy, Austria, Spain—in short, wherever fashion had introduced the sword and pistol as social arbiters; go where you please, and read of the doings there, and you will feel that each in turn was the most bloody of the lot. In those times men fought just for the fun of the thing.

These thoughts have been suggested by the following curious passage, which comes to me from a source not to be questioned: During the reign of George I. two military officers of London—Maj. Walsh and Capt. Hudon—having heard repeated accounts of the success of two Irish gentlemen in affairs of honor, determined to go over and test the much-boasted skill. To Dublin they came, where Mr. Fitz Allan and Col. Callahan were pointed out to them as the heroes whom they sought. Walsh embraced the first opportunity, at a public ball, and brushed rudely against Mr. Fitz Allan. The latter turned, and saw a stranger; and, thinking the affair must have been only an accident, he went his way without further notice.

On the following day, Maj. Walsh, in a tap-room where many gentlemen were assembled, told of the circumstance—declared that he had purposely insulted Fitz Allan, who had not dared to respond.

Col. Callahan chanced to be present. He advanced to the Englishman, and politely informed him that he was Fitz Allan's friend; that he would take it upon himself to declare that his friend had slighted the insult, believing it to have been an unavoidable accident; and, further, in behalf of his friend, he would extend a challenge, the fight to take place at once.

The Major accepted, and the other went in search of his friend, who was quickly found, and brought upon the scene.

Fitz Allan came in smiling. No words were wasted. The company repaired to an adjacent riding-yard, where the preliminaries were arranged, and the combatants placed in position, sword in hand.

"Upon my soul," said Callahan, addressing Capt. Hudon—the two acting seconds to their friends, respectively—"I think we may as well take a hand in the pastime. It is a pity to lose such an opportunity."

Nothing, at that moment, could have pleased the English Captain better. He consented immediately, and the twain drew their swords.

And then commenced the double duel—a duel brought about on the merest whim—to test the truth of flying rumor, Callahan and Hudon being seconds, and feeling that they ought to be ready to attend to their principals, went at it with the quickest and most energetic movements. Very soon the Englishman was surprised. He had fancied himself an expert at sword-play, but here was a man who bewildered him. The Irishman's blade flashed through the air like a line of light, leaving behind it a network of flame that seemed to create a dazzling veil of blinding rays. So for a little time, till the Englishman had been wounded in three places, and then Callahan gave the coup de grace, passing his point through between the ribs and out at the back. As he recovered his sword he turned to his principal and said:

"I'll attend to you now, Fitz. My man is laid away!"

"Oho! Then, egad! I'll finish mine!" And gathering himself for a feint—a twirl—and a pass, that had never yet failed him, he spitted his opponent through, from side to side.

The two Englishmen were taken in hand by the best surgeons and faithfully nursed. For a time their lives were despaired of, both; but they finally recovered, and lived to become warm and ardent friends of the men who had given them so severe a lesson in dueling.

When to Pay Your Debts.

The Presbyterian Banner says: "The beginning of the year is a good time for paying all small bills."

That is sound doctrine, so far as it goes; but why limit the paying of bills to "small" ones? Or, for that matter, why not pay all bills, both large and small, as they become due, without waiting for the "beginning of the year?" St. Paul's doctrine is, "Owe no man anything;" and John Randolph's was like unto it, "Pay as you go."—New York Ledger.

Cold-Weather Yarns.

"Nobody knew until the next spring how low the mercury did get that year," said Sheriff Ridgway. "We had a thermometer big enough to keep account of the weather for the whole State. It was three feet long, and had a bulb at the bottom as big as a turnip. We didn't bother with degrees on that thermometer. We always said it was so many inches below or so many inches above zero. The thermometer hung on an apple tree in the garden at our old place on the Lackawack. In the spring of '59 I was spading up the garden. Under this apple tree I struck a vein of quicksilver. I thought I had discovered a mine of the stuff, and says to myself, 'This ends the lumber business.' I calls the old gentleman out and told him I'd struck a quicksilver mine, and that when the company was formed to work it I would take nothing less than treasurer of it. He didn't say anything, but he looked at the quicksilver I had in my hand, then at me, and then at the thermometer that hung on the tree. I looked at that, too. The bulb was bursted. Then I understood the situation. The mercury had settled a foot and a half below zero on the thermometer. That wasn't as low as the weather called for, so it pushed the bottom out of the bulb, went down three feet to the ground, and dropped six inches under the surface before it reached the level of the temperature. Don't go up along the Lackawack and talk about the thermometer being 20 deg. below zero, for there are people up there yet who remember our big thermometer and the winter the mercury went five feet below zero, and they'll laugh at you."

"I've always said that these little thermometers we have nowadays ain't no account," said Billy Wasson. "What chance has weather on a thermometer six or eight inches long, anyhow?"

"It don't have no chance at all," said Peacock Brink. "Down t'my house, where there air no th'mometer to bother with the weather, I bets it's fifteen degree colder'n 'tis up here."

"Do you remember the winter that Red Drake was chased by a deer in the valley woods, and had a narrow escape from death, all owing to the weather," asked Pete Quick. "Cold as it was, Red was hunting. He shot at the deer, and the deer got mad and took after him. Red dropped his gun, and made for a tree. It was so cold that the breath from the deer's nostrils froze as it shot out in streams of fog, and before the deer reached Red two pieces of ice, fifteen inches long and two inches and a quarter thick, stuck from the animal's snout like the tines of a pitchfork. Just as Red reached the foot of the tree the deer caught him. One of the pieces of ice went on one side of Drake, and one on the other. The tree was just big enough to fit in between the ends of the two prongs of ice and hold the deer fast. There they were. Red couldn't move, nor the deer couldn't move. The deer's breath kept on freezing, and Red looked back over his shoulder and saw ice forming all around him. He expected to be frozen to death. By-and-by when the circle of ice had grown so tight around him that it was hard for him to breathe, he saw that the deer's nose was being rapidly closed by the forming ice. Here was his only hope. If he could hold out until the breathing of the deer was shut off he might escape, for then the deer would die, and in falling break the icy bonds. When the ice had closed around Red so tight that he could only get a breath about a sixteenth of an inch in length, kerplunk dropped the deer to the ground, dead from suffocation, and Red was free. On any other day the wound that Red gave the deer would have killed it at once. The ball went clean through the animal; but the holes froze up instantly on each side, and the deer was as sound as ever."

Wellington and Waterloo.

Wellington and Waterloo appeared in a fresh aspect in the following hitherto unpublished letter unearthed by the Academy. The writer, who was an officer at Wellington's headquarters during the battle, writes, under date of Brussels, June 19, 1815:

"I cannot help writing two lines to congratulate and condole with you on the victory which England has purchased for Europe—at the expense of more than half her army. I must not attempt to give you any account of the battle, of which the Gazette will, I dare say, give us the first distinct information. I understand, however, that it throws everything which the Duke has before done into the shade. His personal exertions were, it seems, incredible, and certainly secured the success of the day, of which at one time everybody except himself despaired. One of his aides-de-camp told me this morning that he took his position on a ridge, from which he declared that he never would move—and never did move but in triumph. When Bonaparte headed an overwhelming charge, the Duke threw himself into the opposing square, by which it was successfully resisted. I mention these particulars because they are precisely what his dispatches will not mention, and because I have them from an eye-witness. Everybody was killed or wounded about him, but he is happily unhurt. One is afraid to inquire after an acquaintance, the carnage has been so inexpressibly horrible. No words can do anything like justice to the valor of our people, who were literally almost smothered by the superior numbers of the French, who were themselves acharne beyond all former examples. Of this you will judge when I tell you that one of the prisoners has just now, opposite to this house, provoked a soldier to bayonet him by his cries of 'Vive l'Empereur!' As well as can be judged, the French are supposed to have lost 180 pieces of cannon. The day was at one time supposed to be so completely lost, and the French so thoroughly expected to make their appearance, I thought it prudent to dispatch a part of the department, with papers and some of our baggage, toward Antwerp, and have this morning sent after them to return."

Big Trees.

Referring to big trees, the American Register tells us that a grove of trees in California, consisting of 1,680, contains not one which measures less than six feet in diameter. A rare and magnificent white oak is to be seen in the Quaker burying ground in Salem, N. Y. It is more than 200 years old, and is remarkable for its enormous branches, which have a spread of 112 feet. A remarkable chestnut tree is growing on a farm in Berks, Pa. It is nearly forty feet in circumference at the base, and the top of the tree can be reached by steps fastened between the limbs. Most remarkable of trees with a history is a russet apple tree in Skowhegan, Me., which was planted in 1762. In its branches a playroom for children has been built for half a century. The tree is seven feet from the ground to the branches, five in number, all of which are very large and average thirty feet in length, covering a space of ground sixty-three feet in diameter. It is more than four and a half feet in diameter, and has yielded an average of thirty bushels of apples each year. A sprout from this apple tree stands thirty-two feet from the parent stem, but is forty-eight years younger.

O'Connell at the Hustings.

In the court, or in the camp—at the bar, or on the rostrum—it made no odds to O'Connell; he was at home anywhere where wit and intelligence were required; and, if keen repartee could come in play, be sure he would not be found wanting. In short, never was there a more dangerous man to attack. The following shows the man's ready wit, and is certainly worth telling:

It was when O'Connell was contesting the city of Dublin with Mr. West for a seat in Parliament, and the two candidates were before their constituents in the great hall, or rotunda, of the Court House. As might be supposed, the announcement of two such speakers on such an occasion filled the house well-nigh to suffocation. Both were in the best of humor, suffering nothing to drag.

In the course of his remarks, O'Connell, in a humorous manner, alluded to his opponent's personal appearance, declaring that Hogarth's line of beauty didn't touch his face anywhere, if it touched his head at all. It was not so much what was said as the manner in which he said it that convulsed the people.

When Mr. West got the floor he attempted to pay his friend off for this; and, after a funny prelude, he exclaimed:

"It is all very well for Mr. O'Connell to attack me upon my personal appearance; but let me tell you if you could see Daniel O'Connell without his wig on, he wouldn't show a face nor head much to boast of!"

Before the people could find time to laugh, and to the utter surprise of everybody, Mr. O'Connell stepped quickly upon the rostrum, close by Mr. West's side, and, with a flourish, pulled off his wig, at the same time exclaiming:

"There! Now my wig is off, which of us two is the better looking?"

The effect was electric. The giant form, with the grandest head in Ireland, by the side of the diminutive person of the other, showed to wonderful advantage, and who shall say how much the quaint passage, coming so unexpectedly, may have had to do with returning the great agitator to Parliament?

The Lime Kiln Club.

A communication from the Cooper Institute, New York, contained this query for Brother Gardner to answer: "In case a bank made a mistake and gave a customer $1,000 in place of $100 what would be the duty of that customer?"

"Dar' kin be but one answer to all sich queshuns," replied the President. "In dis speshul case I should count de money over about fo' times, to be sure I had too much. Den I'd go home an' wait fur de bank officers to come an' see me. If dey didn't come arter a week or so I'd drap aroun' to de bank and kinder menshun de matter an' git de load off my conscience. Honesty am de true policy. You may gain a few dollars by tradin' off a blind mule in de night, but in less'n fo' weeks yer dog will die, or de cook stove will gin out, or suthin' or odder will occur to swaller all de profit dishonestly made."

Jericho Smith, Chairman of the Committee on Popular Science and Natural Philosophy, announced that his monthly report was ready. His committee had been asked to investigate the origin of the polar waves which sweep across the country during the winter at stated intervals. They had consulted all convenient authorities, and would report as follows:

"We am satisfied dat de cold begins somewhar', but de exact pint no man kin find out. De spot on which it starts grows colder an' colder, an' bime-by, when it gits so all-fired cold dat whisky would freeze in ten ticks ob de clock, streaks of weather scoot off dis way an' dat, an' keep growin' an' goin' till dey reach Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo an' all odder big places. Dis am de theory of dis committee. De minority, composed of Brudder Hemlock Jones, wishes me to report dat it am his candid opinyun dat polar waves am de result of wind blowin' ober stone sidewalks an' aroun' de co'ners of brick buildin's."—Detroit Free Press.

Old Hickory's Force of Character.

Says a correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial: There is an old story that when the fact of his death was communicated to Mr. Clay, his great rival in politics, the question jocosely arose as to the probabilities of his final salvation. Mr. Clay listened for a moment and remarked: "Oh, yes; all h— couldn't prevent it!" Hon. Thos. L. Jones relates an anecdote of a similar nature. In a letter of the late Gov. Call, of Florida, who was once on the military staff of Gen. Jackson, and was present at his obsequies, I find this: "Shortly after the funeral, one of the old negro women at the Hermitage was visiting Nashville, and met with an acquaintance, a negro woman also—who probably belonged to a Whig family, and had imbibed its political prejudices. 'Do you think your old master's gone to heaven?' was asked of her, doubtingly. 'Gone to heaven!' answered the other, with an air of sanctified disdain; 'why, of course he has;' and added; 'If he wanted to go dar, I'd like to know who's gwine to stop him!'"

She evidently believed that even so doughty a saint as Peter could not resist the imperious will of her dead master.

Although it is thought that the pawnbroker is an imposition on the public, still he will thrive so long as people continue to "put up" with him.

He Had Reasons.

One day last fall a queer sort of an old man hired a boat and rowed out on the river a little below Yonkers to fish. So far as could be observed from the banks he had no luck. He went out about 10 in the morning and at 4 in the afternoon he sat in the same position, held his fishpole the same way, and had evidently settled down to stay there all night.

Pretty soon a steamboat came rushing along down the river. She was headed directly for the fisherman, who was in midchannel. She blew her whistle to warn him, but after a glance over his shoulder he resumed the old attitude. The steamer came nearer and nearer; and the old man was observed to give a sudden start and pay more attention to his line. When too late, the pilot tried to stop and avoid the accident. The skiff was struck broadside and splintered to pieces, and for two or three minutes it was believed that the old man was drowned. Then some one espied him in the wake of the boat, and he was fished out.

"Didn't you hear us whistle?" asked the Captain, as the dripping man stood before him.

"Yes; and I whistled back!" was the reply.

"We whistled for you to get out of the way."

"And I whistled to let you know that I'd be darned if I would."

"Had you any reasons for hanging to the channel?"

"Reasons! I guess I had! I had fished there for six hours without a nibble, and just as you came along I'd hooked a perch, which I honestly believe weighed mighty nigh a pound! Drat your old steamboat, but I'll make you pay for that fish as well as the damages! I was six hours catching him, and I won't settle for a farthing less than 50 cents."—Wall Street Daily News.

Wise Words of a Willing Witness.

[From the Walla Walla Watchman.]

At the close of a mass meeting, according to the report of the same published in a La Grange paper, reference was made to the phenomenal efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil in the many painful diseases to which mankind is subject. We refer to the above as showing how strong a hold the Old German Remedy for Rheumatism has on the experience and good wishes of the great public.

Not Impromptu.

The day after Senator Hayne of South Carolina delivered his celebrated philippic against New England, and Massachusetts in particular, Daniel Webster answered it by the greatest speech of his life. All over the country surprise was expressed that such a masterly reply should have been composed within twelve hours.

But the fact was that Mr. Webster had been for years preparing that speech. One of its strongest constitutional arguments had been written a long time before, as a professional opinion. No occasion had called for its public utterance until Mr. Hayne made one. Then the great orator had but to marshal forces already equipped, and hurl them at the assailant of his state.

A lady visiting the studio of Mr. Hunt, the artist, and seeing an elaborate charcoal picture, asked how long it took him to draw it.

"Well," answered Mr. Hunt, "I think it took me an hour or two; that is, I was about that time putting it on the paper there. But I suppose I ought to say that it took me forty years, as I've been drawing about that length of time."

An unenlightened public may believe in extemporaneous efforts; but the enlightened know that the labor of years is required to make one superior effort. The lesson is a plain one—improve every moment by work, for the hour is not foreseen when you may be called to do the great duty of your life.—Youth's Companion.

[From the Danville (Ill.) News.]

John Stein, Esq., City Brewer, referring to its valuable qualities, said to a News representative: I have used St. Jacobs Oil in my family and recommend it to my acquaintances. It has always given the best satisfaction, and is truly a wonderful remedy.

Killed by the Knout.

John Howard entered St. Petersburg alone and on foot. The police discovered him, and he was invited to visit the Empress Catharine at court. He respectfully informed her Majesty that he had come to Russia to visit the dungeons of the captives and the abodes of the wretched, not the palaces and courts of Kings and Queens.

Armed with power, he went to see the infliction of the knout. A man and woman were brought out. The man received sixty strokes and the woman twenty-five. "I saw the woman," says Howard, "in a very weak condition some days after, but could not find the man any more." Determined to ascertain what had become of him, Howard visited the executioner. "Can you," he said, "inflict the knout so as to occasion death in a very short time?" "Yes! the last man who was punished by my hand with the knout died of the punishment." "In what manner do you thus render it mortal?" "By one or two strokes on the sides, which carry off large pieces of flesh." "Do you receive orders thus to inflict punishment?" "I do!" Thus the boast of Russia, that capital punishments had been abolished throughout the empire, was effectually exposed.

Mrs. Partington Says

Don't take any of the quack rostrums, as they are regimental to the human cistern; but put your trust in Hop Bitters, which will cure general dilapidation, costive habits and all comic diseases. They saved Isaac from a severe extract of tripod fever. They are the ne plus unum of medicines.—Boston Globe.

A Boston correspondent of a New Hampshire paper writes: "Do you in the Granite State love to sneer at 'Boston culture?' Then your heart will glow when I tell you about an irreverent New Yorker condemned by business obligations to spend a week here. Thinking to amuse himself by seeing the city, he stepped on a Beacon street car and said to the conductor: 'Does not this car pass the new Art Mu-se-um?' 'No,' was the reply, 'but it passes the new Art Mu-se-um.'"

Sound repose is so essential to good health that we feel surprised to know any one would risk loss of rest from a Cough or Cold when a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup would give refreshing slumber.

The Wolf and the Hare—A Fable.

One day as a Hare was pursuing her way through the forest she was overtaken by a Wolf, who had no sooner come in sight than he called out:

"By what right do you walk in this path?"

"I thought it was a public highway," humbly replied the Hare.

"Suppose it is? You are nothing but a Hare, while I am a Wolf. It is your business to follow on behind me if you want to go my way. How it looks to see a big, strong Wolf following a weak and cowardly Hare like you."

"Very well," answered the Hare, who dared not dispute for fear of being still worse used.

The Wolf was in no hurry. Indeed, he did not care to travel that way at all, except to humiliate his weaker neighbor. As he passed along at a slow gait he looked over his shoulder and observed:

"Don't keep so near me. If we meet anybody I don't care to have them think we are traveling in company. It is only an act of condescension that I allow you to travel this path at all."

The Hare fell back a few feet further, feeling that any dispute would result to to the advantage of the Wolf. They had not proceeded far when the Wolf suddenly uttered a howl of surprise and pain, and as the Hare came up he was rolling over the ground with his fore feet fast in a trap.

"Help! help!" shouted the Wolf.

"But I am nothing but a Hare," replied the other. How it would look to see a weak and cowardly Hare rushing to the assistance of a big, strong Wolf!"

"I shall be held here until the hunter comes to knock me on the head!" moaned the Wolf.

"If you had permitted me to go on my way in peace I should have been first at the trap," answered the Hare.

"Yes, but please do something for me!"

"I'd be glad to, small and weak as I am; but if anybody should come along I don't care to have them think we are traveling in company! Tra-la, Mr. Wolf!"

Moral: There is never a safe time to put on airs. The man you kick to-day may drive a grocer's delivery wagon to-morrow.—M. Quad.

Two Organs.

Regulate first the stomach, second the liver; especially the first, so as to perform their functions perfectly, and you will remove at least nineteen-twentieths of all the ills that mankind is heir to in this or any other climate. Hop Bitters is the only thing that will give perfectly healthy natural action to these two organs.—Maine Farmer.

A Very Brief Plea.

Sir Alexander Cockburn thought more of the spirit than of the letter of the law. When an unknown barrister, he was intrusted with the defence of a man who, having been forced into an encounter by a noted duelist, killed him. "Gentlemen," he said to the jury, "my learned friend has told you that this is murder. I know that it is no murder, and you know that it is no murder." After these words he sat down, and the jury at once returned a verdict of not guilty.

Public opinion on the subject of faithless husbands is very strong in Somerset, Ky. Mr. Love was that kind of an offender. His wife led a mob against him. He fled hastily, without coat, trousers, or boots, with the crowd in close pursuit. At the end of a mile he was overtaken, and left suspended, head downward, from a tree. He was almost frozen to death when, two hours afterward, a humane preacher cut him down.

THE DEATH OF JEFFERSON.

An Interesting Incident Related by the Hon. Alexander H. H. Stuart

The Hon. Alexander H. H. Stuart, of Virginia, has written an interesting letter, giving an account of the celebration in Staunton, Va., of the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. He says:

"Among the guests who assembled at the celebration, held at the Eagle Tavern, on the fourth of July, 1826, were most of the prominent men of the town and county. I well remember that Daniel Sheffey, Chapman Johnson, Briscoe G. Baldwin, James J. Michie, William Kinney, N. C. Kinney and other citizens of the town were of the number, and, I think, General Robert Porterfield, James Bell, Charles A. Stuart and others of the same class from the country were present. The occasion was marked with hilarity. The speeches were brief, spirited and appropriate. Anecdotes were told. There were brilliant flashes of wit and fancy, and all were in good humor and seemed to enjoy themselves. In this way the day was passed until nearly sundown, and the company was preparing to separate, with mutual felicitations on the pleasure which they had enjoyed, and the expression of hope that they might meet to commemorate many returns of the auspicious day. At this stage of the proceedings someone came into the porch, and in a low tone, communicated to Mr. Chapman Johnson something which seemed to make a deep impression on him. I, who was then a youth preparing myself to enter the university, sat, with a few other young companions, near the foot of the table, and, being on the opposite of Mr. Johnson, had a full view of his face, and, although I did not know the nature of the communication, could not fail to observe the grave expression of his countenance.

The mystery was soon solved. Mr. Johnson rose anding fitting terms announced to the company that news had just reached him of the death near noon on that day of Thomas Jefferson. After a few remarks on the life, character and public services of Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Johnson requested all present to fill their glasses, as he desired to offer a sentiment; this was done. He then desired that the company would rise and remain standing. While we thus stood, deeply impressed with the solmnity of the event which had been thus unexpectedly announced, Mr. Johnson offered the following sentiment: 'The memory of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence. Though the mortal man may never witness another celebration of the day which his pen has so much illustrated, his immortal spirit will be present and inspire the last anthem which hallows its memory.' The sentiment was was purely impromptu. He did not take time to commit it to paper. He gave it to us as it came gushing up like living waters from the fountain of his great heart, and it found a response in the heart of every one who was present. As for myself, every word that he uttered became, as it were, engrossed on the tablets of my memory, and, after the lapse of more than fifty-four years, I feel that I am able to report Mr. Johnson's toast, not only with substantial, but with literal accuracy.

An Even Thing.

The other day two strangers were toasting their shins on opposite sides of a big stove in a ferry waiting room, and it was noticed that they often looked at each other, af if almost certain they had met before. Finally one of them got up and said:

"Stranger, I've seen a face almost like yours. Did you ever have a brother Bill?"

"Yes."

"Was he a sailor?"

"He was."

"Did you hear from him last about ten years ago?"

"Yes, just about ten years ago."

"Stranger," continued the first, seemingly greatly affected, "I've sailed with your brother Bill. We were wrecked together on the Pacific, and before help came, I had to kill and eat him! I knew you must be related. I am awful sorry it was your brother, and though I was driven to it, and the law cannot touch me, I am willing to pay you damages. Be kinder fair with me, for Bill was old and tough. About how much do you think is fair?"

The other wiped a tear from his eye spat across the stove and replied:

"Stranger, where is your dad?"

"Been dead these twelve years."

"Died in Nevada, didn't he?"

"Yes, out there somewhere."

"Well, I killed him! I knew you were his son the minute I saw you. He and I were in a mine one day, and as we were going up in a bucket, I saw that the old rope was going to break under the strain. When we were up about 200 feet, I picked up your old dad and dropped him over. It was bad on him, but it saved me. Now you ate my brother Bill, and I murdered your dad, and I guess we had better call it even, and shake to see who pays for the drinks."

They shook, drank, and the old lake captains, who could not tell a lie, had to sit back and realize how sad it was that they were born with such tender consciences.

Dueling of the Last Century.

A man of the present age, not thoroughly conversant with the state of society in Europe during the eighteenth century, would hardly be willing to believe the truth of the matter. We speak particularly of the duel. Really, much of the adventure on the so-called field of honor, of that time, is entirely unfit for publication, and, if published, would be believed by but few. When reading of the duel in Ireland, the impression rests in our mind that the Emerald Isle must take the palm in the way of horrors and abominations of personal combat. But anon we visit England, then France, then Germany, Italy, Austria, Spain, in short, wherever fashion had introduced the sword and pistol as social arbiters; go where you please, and read of the doings there, and you will feel that each in turn was the most bloody of the lot. In those times men fought just for the fun of the thing.

These thoughts have been suggested by the following curious passage, which comes to me from a source not to be questioned:

During the reign of George I, two military officers of London—Major Walsh and Captain Hudon—having heard repeated accounts of the success of two Irish gentlemen in affairs of honor, determined to go over and test the much-boasted skill. To Dublin they came, where Mr. Fitz Allan and Col. Callahan were pointed out to them as the heroes whom they sought. Walsh embraced the first opportunity, at a public ball, and brushed rudely against Fitz Allan. The latter turned, and saw a stranger, and, thinking the affair must have been only an accident, he went his way without further notice.

On the following day, Maj. Walsh, in a tap-room, where many gentlemen were assembled, told of the circumstance—declared that he purposely insulted Fitz Allan, who had not dared to respond.

Col. Callahan chanced to be present. He advanced to the Englishman, and politely informed him that he was Fitz Allan's friend; that he would take it upon himself to declare that his friend had slighted the insult, believing it to have been an unavoidable accident, and further, in behalf of his friend, he would extend a challenge, the fight to take place at once.

The major accepted, and the other went in search of his friend, who was quickly found, and brought upon the scene.

Fitz Allan came in smiling. No words were wasted. The company repaired to an adjacent riding-yard, where the preliminaries were arranged, and the combatants placed in position, sword in hand.

"Upon my soul," said Callahan, addressing Captain Hudon—the two acting seconds to their friends, respectively—"I think we may as well take a hand in the pastime. It is a pity to lose such an opportunity."

Nothing, at that moment, could have pleased the English captain better. He consented immediately, and the twain drew their swords.

And then commenced the double duel—a duel brought about on the merest whim—to test the truth of flying rumor. Callahan and Hudon being seconds, and feeling that they ought to be ready to attend to their principals, went at it with the quickest and most energetic movements. Very soon the Englishman was surprised. He had fancied himself an expert at sword-play, but here was a man who bewildered him. The Irishman's blade flashed through the air like a line of light, leaving behind it a net-work of flame that seemed to create a dazzling veil of blinding rays. So for a little time, until the Englishman had been wounded in three places, and then Callahan gave the coup de grace, passing his point through between the ribs and out at the back. As he recovered his sword, he turned to his principal and said:

"I'll attend to you now, Fitz. My man is laid away."

"Oho! Then, egad! I'll finish mine." And gathering himself for a feint—a twirl—and a pass, that had never yet failed him, he spitted his opponent through, from side to side.

The two Englishmen were taken in hand by the best surgeons and faithfully nursed. For a time their lives were despaired of, both; but they finally recovered, and lived to become warm and ardent friends of the men who had given them so severe a lesson in dueling.

"What," asked the teacher, "was the great obstacle Washington encountered in crossing the Delaware?" And the smart, bad boy thought for a minute, and then made answer, "The toll man."

How a Bet Was Won.

An English officer exchanged into another regiment, brought with him the reputation of being marvelously successful at a bet. "Ah," said his new colonel, "he won't get any success out of me, I'll warrant;" and he wrote to the fellow's former colonel, an old friend, "We like him very much." "Glad you do old boy; keep him; we found him too expensive a luxury," was the reply. One day at mess the colonel good humoredly said; "I hear that you profess always to win a bet." "Well, sir, I'm pretty successful that way." "I don't think you would succeed with me." "May I try?" asked the subaltern. "By all means." "Well then, I bet you sir, that that old wound in your back has broken out afresh." "What in the world do you mean? Old wound in my back? Do you think I ever turned my back on an enemy, then?" And the gallant colonel grew warm, "I never had a wound in my back in my life. Jones," to a cornet "lock the door. I will prove it to your own eyes." The other protested that the colonel's simple word was more than enough; but no, the latter was excited, and stripped, "I've lost, sir," and Brown handed over the $10 note. A few days later came a note from the colonel of the other regiment. "Brown has again won a pot of money out of our fellows. He bet heavily that before he had been with you a month, he would make you take your shirt off in the mess room after dinner, and now writes that he succeeded. That colonel cussed.

A Parrot's Opinion of Constables.

The St. Louis Republican says that on Wednesday night of this week Tom Hard, a constable, desiring to seize $20 worth of goods on an execution against Mrs. Robert Morton, of St. Louis, could find nothing but Mrs. Morton's pet poll-parrot, which was perched away up on a window-sill. Tom was about to leave with empty hands, when the parrot sang out: "Hilloa! Hilloa! Hilloa!" Tom looked up and saw the bird. "Here's something," said he to himself, "that's worth $20; I'll hitch on to it." He reached up to grasp Poll, but Poll would not be seized, and pecked at him and sang out: "Hands off! Hands off! I'll call the peelers."

"I'm a constable," said Tom; I've got the papers here, and you can call who you please."

"Durn the papers," said Poll. "Police! police!

Tom made another grab, and this time he caught Poll by the throat and carried her over to court. When he got there he put her in a basket. As soon as Poll's throat was free again she opened another tirade on Tom. She called him all manner of names, and ended each sentence with: "You can go to Chicago; you're no gentleman."

Poll had begun to give the court, as well as the constable a piece of her mind when Mrs. Morton came in and paid the $20 sued for. She said she would sooner pay $40 than lose her Poll. Then she picked Poll up and kissed her and carried her away, and as they went out of court, Poll cried with a loud voice: "Oh, the loafers; oh, the dirty loafers!" Constable Carroll, his deputy and all the other officers of the court say that Mrs. Morton's parrot can "cuss" louder and more to the point "than any man they ever saw."

Abolition of Mill-Stones.

I found all the Minneapolis millers taking out their mill-stones and substituting steel rollers in their places. Wheat, by the new Hungarian process, is not ground, but cracked. These rollers are about thirty inches long and eight inches in diameter. It takes five sets of steel rollers to finish the flour. Each set of rollers run closer than the preceding. After the wheat passes each set of rollers it is bolted or sifted through coarse cloth. This cloth lets the disintegrated particles of wheat through, and passes off the bulky and large pieces, which are run through another and closer set of rollers, and cracked again. The last rollers have little else but wheat hulls and the waxy germs of the wheat, which do not crack up, but smash down like a piece of wax. The germ of a kernel of wheat is not good food. It makes flour black. By the new system of cracking the kernel instead of grinding it, this germ is not ground, but flattened out, and sifted or bolted out, while the starchy portions of the wheat are crushed into powdered wheat or flour.—[Chicago Tribune.

How the Banana is Developed.

The Cuba correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin writes: The manner in which the fruit is developed is quite interesting. From the midst of the leaves, and at the top, appears a large, smooth, purple cone, hanging down gracefully at the end of a stock. The flowers are all wrapped up in this cone, which consists of a large number of closely packed spathes. By-and-by, the uppermost part of these sheathes disengages itself from the rest, curls up, and discloses a row of three or four long blossoms, with the young fruit of each beginning to form.

While this row of fruit is tender, the spathe remains hanging over it like a roof, but when the fruit has acquired some size and strength, the protecting shields drop off, and the next in order rises up, with a similar row of young fruit, over which it stands in the same watchful attitude, until it also drops off to be succeeded by another.

When one circle of fruit is completed, another is commenced below, and in due time another, while the common stem around which the fruit is disposed, grows constantly longer, and the cone of spathes diminishes in size, until it is all unfolded, and a monstrous bunch of bananas is finished, which seldom weighes less than twenty or thirty and sometimes as much as seventy or eighty pounds. Of all kinds of vegetable nutriment, the banana is perhaps the most productive, and most easily raised.

After a plant has produced its bunch of fruit, the stem is either cut, or is suffered to wither and fall on the spot. In the former case, it is good fodder for cattle; in the latter, it forms good manure for the young shoots, which have been springing from the root, and which are soon ready to bear fruit in their turn. From these shoots or sprouts, the plant is propagated.

Its Action Sure and Safe.

The celebrated remedy Kidney-Wort can now be obtained in the usual dry vegetable form, or in liquid form. It is put in the latter way for the especial convenience of those who cannot readily prepare it. It will be found very concentrated and will act with equal efficiency in either case. Be sure and read the new advertisement for particulars.—[South and West.

Grapes can be kept well into the winter, if care is exercised. Choose the late ripening sorts, such as Clinton, Catawba, Diana, Isabella, etc. Select the finest and most matured bunches, carefully cutting out the decayed grapes, if any, being careful not to disturb the bloom. After sweating for a few days on the shelf in a cool place, pack in sawdust or cotton batting, one layer of sawdust and one of grapes, and so on; keep at an even temperature, and as cool as possible, at about freezing point.

Miguel Solis is a half-breed farmer, living in the foot hills of the Serra Mesilla, and the oldest man in the world. His age is mythical. Gray-haired men told Dr. Luiz Hernandez that they remembered Miguel as a centenarian when they were boys. The doctor found the old fellow at work in his orchard, parchment-skinned, robust, active, his now white hair twisted turban fashion around his head, and his eyes so bright that the doctor felt uncomfortable when they were thrust upon him. Questioned as to his habits, Miguel told the doctor that the secret of living a century or two, was very simple—merely never getting drunk and never overfeeding.

A funny Fact.

Sol Smith Russell tells the following story of his experience as an entertainer:

"In a small Ohio town, where he had given his performance the previous night, he met at the depot the following morning, an elderly granger, who, while he peacefully munched a huge quid of tobacco, intently eyed the humorist and finally said: "Say mister, hen't you the fellow wot giv the show up to Smoot's hall, last night?"

"Yes," replied Russell, "I did give an entertainment at Smoot's hall, last night."

"Well, I thought you was the chap. I want to tell you 'bout a boy of mine. You ought to have him; he's just the fellow for your show; he's the darndest fool I ever see."

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The spinners and weavers of Fall River, Mass., have decided to inaugurate a strike at from five to ten mills. The militiamen have decided, if the persons employed at some mills strike, to close out all the operatives.... Small-pox has broken out in the Massachusetts State prison. One of the prison officials has been taken down with the disease.

At a meeting of stockholders of the Western Union telegraph held in New York, it was voted to water the stock to $80,000,000. William H. Williams, who recently brought suit against the corporation, voted 100 shares in opposition to the scheme.

The mortality among horses in New York averages twenty-five daily. The chief cause of death is cerebro-spinal meningitis.... The linseed-oil works of Kellogg & McDougall, on the island across the Buffalo river, were destroyed by fire. The loss was $78,000.... Ellen Dunn, who fell dead in the street, in New York, was the last of a family of seven children to die of heart disease. Her mother saw a crowd collected near a school house, and went thither to see the corpse of her daughter.

A large meeting under the auspices of the Anti-Monopoly League was held at the Cooper Institute, New York. Peter Cooper and other distinguished citizens were present. Organization to carry out the purposes of the league to crush monopoly and to protect the taxpaying and wage-earning portion of the community was urged. Judge Jere Black was the principal speaker of the evening. He held that persons connected with railroads should be excluded from office, called attention to the increased power of these corporations in politics and the power which they have gained over the State and other courts. Senator Windom sent a letter sympathizing with the objects of the meeting, but warning the promoters against the spirit of Communism. He denounced the railroad and telegraph monopolies, and pointed out the danger that threatened the people from the fact that the telegraph lines of the country were practically controlled by one man. Congressman Reagan spoke and explained his bill, which he claimed was only a step in the direction of curbing the power of monopolies. Resolutions embodying the spirit of the meeting were then adopted.

The New York Assembly has adopted a resolution directing the Attorney General to institute quo warranto proceedings to prevent the watering of stock by the telegraph companies.... One man was fatally injured and seven others badly burned by an explosion in Detmiller's fireworks factory, near Jersey City.... By a collision on the Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Western road, near President, Pa., five persons were seriously injured.

Up to the 25th ult. the Sub-Treasurer at New York had received on deposit from national banks, to retire circulation, nearly $18,000,000. This action on the part of the national banks caused a serious stringency in the money market, the rate rising to 1 per cent. per day and 6 per cent. per annum. Secretary Sherman produced an electric effect upon the stock market by announcing that he was prepared to redeem the bonds lately called, paying interest to the date of presentation. He also announced that the treasury would also purchase bonds with the millions of greenbacks deposited by banks to withdraw their circulation.... Four lottery-dealers in New York have been fined and sent to the penitentiary.... A mail train on the New Jersey Midland railroad was wrecked by a broken rail near Ogdensburg, N. J. The combined mail and smoking car and passenger coach went down an embankment, and instantly took fire. The mail was burned, but the passengers all escaped alive, though most of them were injured.... In the Whittaker court martial, before a large party of wives and daughters of officers, Lieut. George B. Barnett laid down upon an iron bedstead, and with hands tied himself precisely as he found the colored cadet, afterward releasing himself easily.

THE WEST.

Logan V. Kennedy, Postmaster at Fairview, Neb., has been lodged in jail at Omaha on the charge of robbing registered letters. He has confessed his guilt.... The charge of $1 per car on grain loaded from the Milwaukee elevators has been abolished.... Belle Nichols, a keeper of a bagnio, at Muncie, Ind., defending her door against Bill Wert and Lon Sutton, both drunk, discharged seven chambers of a 22-caliber pistol at the assailants. Sutton was mortally wounded.

A San Francisco dispatch says that after the examination of 675 citizens, extending over a period of twenty days, a jury was secured to try Isaac Kalloch, the murderer of Charles De Young. Trial was proceeded with at once. The murder was committed on the 23d day of April last.

By the burning of a livery stable at Nebraska City two employes were roasted.... T. P. Earnest, a heavy live-stock dealer of Colorado, says nearly 20 per cent. of the cattle of that State perished during the severe weather of the present winter.

The Chicago Times dispatched a correspondent to the cattle ranches of the West to investigate the losses from the unprecedented storms of the winter. He reports that thousands of horses line the northern banks of the Arkansas, having drifted in from the north, and that they are dying in great numbers. A gentleman who has just reached Denver declares that he saw fully 5,000 dead cattle lying beside the Union Pacific track in Nebraska.

Mrs. Sloan and six of her children were burned to death by an incendiary fire at East Liverpool, Ohio. Mr. Sloan awakened, discovered the flames at an early hour of the morning, and, telling the members of the family to follow, grabbed up a 3-year-old daughter and started for the stairs. The flames had cut off their retreat by this time, however, and, turning to a window, he leaped out, at the same time telling his wife and children to do the same. Before they had time to follow, they were stifled by the smoke and perished in the flames. When recovered, the bodies were charred beyond recognition, and it was only by the size of the remains that the grown persons were distinguished from the children. All that is left of a family of ten are the father and one daughter, whom he carried with him when he made the leap. Following is a list of those who perished: Mrs. William Sloan, aged 31 years; Lord Sloan, aged 13; Clyde Sloan, aged 12; Laura Sloan, aged 11; Alex. Sloan, 9; Paul Sloan, aged 5; another aged 18 months, and Wilbur Skeels, a brother-in-law of the unfortunate woman.... Four men entered a saloon near Fort Wingate, New Mexico, and called for drink. The proprietor said he sold no whisky, but if the men wanted to gamble they could, and be supplied with whisky. The four men then sat down with the proprietor. After playing some time, a row began, resulting in the death of all the card players, each being shot several times.... A train on the Santa Fe road was derailed near Larkin, Kan., and badly wrecked. A boy was killed, and one passenger had his skull fractured. Seven of the injured were cared for at the scene of the accident.... The enameling works of Baker & McMillan, at Akron, Ohio, have been burned.

John C. Moore, a real-estate broker of Indianapolis, killed himself in his office with a revolver. His brother destroyed himself at Lafayette, four years ago, by means of a guillotine so constructed that a burning candle severed a string and let fall the ax.... There is much suffering in Dakota for lack of fuel. Corn is freely used in the stoves; a telegraph-pole was stolen at Sioux Falls, and railway ties abstracted at Parker.

THE SOUTH.

Mr. John Howard Parnell, brother to the Irish agitator, addressed a Land-League meeting at Atlanta, Ga., last week.... George Hackett, his daughter Martha, and Peter Allen, a colored man, were drowned in a creek near Weatherford, Tex., by the falling of a bridge over which they were passing.... Twenty-five houses were destroyed by fire at Scottsboro, Ala., last week.... At the close of the Lagrade murder trial at Springfield, Tenn., the mob rushed into the court-room, took the five murderers to the veranda of the second story of the Court House, and hung them.

Near Milton, N. C., while a boy named Daniels was eating his breakfast alone in his father's house, a large eagle swooped down upon him through an open window, and seized a fish he had in his hand, which he was about to put in his mouth. Quickly dropping that, the bird attacked Daniels, tearing his flesh from his back and face in a fearful manner. He made an attempt to defend himself, but was no match for the eagle. The boy was finally dragged out of the door into the yard, where the attack was renewed with beak and talons. Daniels called loudly for help. His father, who was in another part of the house, answered his calls, but, not knowing what to make of the singular fight, and, as he says, thinking it was the devil, scampered away as fast as his heels could carry him. After a desperate battle of nearly half an hour, the eagle finally struck a sharp stick in the ground with its neck, and was fatally wounded. The boy's injuries were of a very painful nature.... Exodus agents are distributing railway tickets gratuitously among negroes in Southern Tennessee.

The Society of the Army and Navy of the Confederate States held its annual banquet in Baltimore last week. Among the speakers were Wade Hampton and Bradley T. Johnson.

The spreading of rails threw a train from the track near Longview, Tex., causing serious injuries to twenty persons.

POLITICAL.

A Civil-Service Association has been organized at Boston. Among the Vice Presidents are Charles Francis Adams, Jr., John M. Forbes, George William Bond, Senator Hoar, President Seelye of Amherst College, the Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Henry P. Kidder and Martin Brimmer. The association will advocate that the work of the Government be conducted on business principles; that competent employes shall be retained in office during good behavior; that office shall not be used to reward political "workers," and the non-interference of Congressmen and Senators in the matter of patronage.

The Republicans of the Pennsylvania Legislature, after balloting thirty-four days for a United States Senator to succeed Mr. Wallace, finally compromised on Mr. John I. Mitchell, who is understood to be opposed to the Cameron dynasty. The new Senator is at present a member of the lower house of Congress. He is described as a man of medium height, broad-shouldered, with blonde hair and beard, and is lame, the result of an accident incurred in his campaign two years ago. He is a native of Tioga county, Pa., is 43 years old, and was raised on a farm, taught school, served in the late war as a Lieutenant, was admitted to the bar in 1864, and has since been a practicing lawyer.... Representative Hurd, of Ohio, gave a dinner in Washington to a number of Democratic members of Congress of well-known free-trade proclivities, and the preliminary steps were taken in the formation of an anti-protective Congressional society. S. S. Cox, of New York, was made President.

Eckley B. Coxe, a millionaire coal-dealer, was last fall elected to the Pennsylvania Senate from Luzerne county, but refused to take an oath that he had not violated the election laws. A new election has just been held, at which he was returned by 4,000 majority. It is now proposed to bar him out of the Senate for his expenditure of money in the fall campaign.... The Republican State Convention of Michigan assembled in Lansing and nominated Isaac Marston for Justice of the Supreme Court, and James F. Joy and ex-Gov. Blair for Regents of the University.

WASHINGTON.

Elliot F. Shepard has been nominated for United States Attorney of the Southern District in New York, in the place of Gen. Stewart L. Woodford.

Secretary Sherman has called in $25,000,000 of the 5-per-cent. bonds of 1881.... Hayes declares that he will leave the nomination of Stanley Matthews to take its chances, and that Garfield will send in the name anew in case he is not confirmed by the present Senate.

Henry D. Cooke, one of the old firm of Jay Cooke & Co., died at Washington of Bright's disease of the kidneys. He was born in Ohio, was prominently connected with the shipping interests of the Pacific coast, and is credited with having devised the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. He was Governor of the District of Columbia while it was under Territorial government.

GENERAL.

Detroit seems to be going into the ship-building business. One hundred and fourteen Glasgow ship-carpenters have arrived at Montreal on their way to Detroit, where they will work in the Wyniock shipyard.... Seven American prisoners confined in jail at Paso del Norte attempted to escape across the American line. They shot one of the guards dead, and were on the run when they were overtaken. A fierce fight ensued, during which three of the prisoners were killed and two of the guards seriously wounded. The four surviving prisoners surrendered.... C. D. Gunter, brother of Congressman Gunter, of Arkansas, shot and it is believed mortally wounded L. B. Gamble, recently, in Benton county, Ark., during a dispute about the removal of the postoffice.

Cattle-raisers are unanimous in the belief that the severity of the winter has had a marked effect from the Rio Grande to the British boundary. Some Nebraska herdsmen predict a loss of 20 to 30 per cent., with still greater damage unless there shall soon be a marked rise in temperature. About 150,000 Texas cattle are wintering in Indian Territory.

A new steamship line between Amsterdam and New York has been established, for the purpose of stimulating Dutch emigration to this country.

Parnell has written to the Secretary of the Land League at Clara retracting his advice to tenant farmers to plow up the land in case of evictions. He has learned that such acts are punishable by seven years' penal servitude.... A massacre is reported at Lona, in the Samoan islands, where the opponents of King Malietoa killed five men, a woman and four children. The King sent a body of troops to the scene, who slew several of the murderers.... Many farmers of Sligo who have heretofore refused to pay higher rents than those authorized by the Land League are now complying with the landlords' terms.... One of the Azores islands has suffered thirty-six successive earthquake shocks. Several were killed and 200 houses were wrecked.... A private powder magazine in Cork was forcibly entered by unknown parties and a quantity of powder stolen.... Nineteen natives of India have been convicted of conspiracy to murder the European residents of Kolapore.... A land dispute near Buttevant, County of Cork, terminated in the fatal shooting of a farmer.

FOREIGN.

Two heavy failures have been reported in Great Britain—viz.: Kerr Bros., ironmasters, of Glasgow, and Morrison Bros., of Workington and Maryport, England.... Further correspondence from Lima confirms the account of the capture of that city by the Chilians. The latest accounts exonerate Gen. Pierola from all blame in the matter. It appears that he had retired exhausted, after being nearly four days in the saddle, when the order for retreat was given.... Women and children will not be exempt from the operation of the Irish Coercion act, a motion exempting them having been rejected in the House of Commons. Opposition to the obstruction rules does not seem to be confined to the Tories and Parnellites. The advanced Liberals are also dissatisfied with them, and it is probable that the most objectionable rules will be withdrawn.

The Czar has sent Aides-de-Camp to distribute money in the famine-stricken villages of Russia.... The costumes of some art students at a masquerade in Munich, Germany, caught fire, and eight young men were burned to death.... The French Government has put an embargo upon the importation of American salted pork, bacon and ham.... Marseilles maintains its reputation as the most radical city of France. Its corporation, by an all but unanimous vote—33 to 1—has refused to permit the erection of a statue of Thiers within the corporate limits, on the ground that he was opposed to republican principles and ideas. And yet to Thiers as much as to Gambetta it is owing that France has a republican government to-day.

In his speech at Clara, King's county, Ireland, Parnell advised tenants in case of threatened eviction to plow up the land, and thus prevent the landlord from using it as pasturage. Notice was given in the House of Commons of a question whether this speech was not an incitement to punishable offenses.... The Porte is said to have informed Germany and Austria that it will cede Thessaly and a portion of Epirus to Greece, but will insist upon retaining possession of Janina, Metzovo, and Prevesa.... Gladstone announced in the British House of Commons that steps had been taken to promote a satisfactory settlement with the Boers.... Greece has called out her reserve forces, and the largest college in Athens has been converted into a military hospital.

The French Agricultural Society adopted a resolution demanding that negotiations be opened with the United States for a revocation of an alleged decision forbidding the landing of French wines at American ports, on the ground that they are injurious to health. The society believes the decision to be simply a reprisal for the interdiction of American pork by France.

Provision dealers in New York say there is a scarcity of pork at present, and its interdiction by a few foreign countries will have very little effect upon prices. They are inclined to regard the report of the prevalence of trichinosis as a humbug.

Gen. Ney, of the French army, a grandson of the famous Marshal, was found dead at Chatellon, having killed himself with a revolver.... While alighting from his carriage, in London, Mr. Gladstone fell, cutting his head severely by striking on the step of the vehicle.... The Rev. Benjamin Speke, brother of the African explorer, drowned himself in Somersetshire, England.... Turkey has ordered 30,000,000 cartridges from the United States.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The Senate resumed consideration of the Funding bill on Friday, the 18th inst., and agreed to all the amendments adopted in committee of the whole. Mr. Bayard asked action on the Finance Committee amendments, and a vote on that striking out the Carlisle section resulted in its retention. The amendment increasing the rate from 3 to 3½ per cent. was also voted down. The bill was then read a third time and passed by a vote of 43 to 20. The River and Harbor bill was read a second time and referred to the Committee on Commerce, after a vain effort by Mr. Edmunds to have the committee instructed to reduce the aggregate appropriations to $7,000,000. The District bill appropriating $3,500,000 was passed. The Cattle Disease bill was taken up and the committee's amendments adopted, with no action. A bill passed for the construction of a fire-proof building at Columbus, Ohio, to cost $400,000. An attempt was made in the House of Representatives to take up the Fitz John Porter bill, but it was defeated by a vote of 117 to 114, which disposes of it for this session. A resolution granting to the family of the late Congressman Parr the balance of salary which he would have received as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress, and requesting the Forty-seventh Congress to appropriate $4,000 on the same plan, was adopted. The House then went into committee of the whole on the Agricultural bill, and Mr. Hurd made a speech in opposition to protection and in favor of a revision of the tariff. Judge Kelley replied, and was followed by Mr. Fulton. The bill was then read and some debate ensued, but the House adjourned without acting upon it. A bill was passed constituting Atlanta, Ga., a port of delivery.

In the United States Senate, on Saturday, Feb. 19, Mr. Saunders presented a resolution for the insertion in the River and Harbor bill of $1,136,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi river. The Cattle Diseases bill was taken up, and Mr. Ingalls denounced it as the worst he had ever read on any subject, while Mr. Maxey pronounced it the longest stride toward centralization he had ever seen. In the House, Mr. Carlisle reported a bill repealing all laws imposing taxes on bank deposits, checks and drafts, as well as on matches and medicinal preparations. In committee of the whole on the Agricultural Appropriation bill it was voted that $80,000 be set aside for the purchase and distribution of seeds. An early adjournment was effected in order that members might attend the funeral of Fernando Wood.

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported adversely on the bill to confirm the title of settlers on Des Moines river lands, on Monday, Feb. 21. It was placed on the calendar. The House Post Route bill was reported favorably and passed. The Legislative Appropriation bill was taken up and considered in committee of the whole. It provides for the appropriation of $17,873,290, the Senate committee having added $710,000 to the amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House. Mr. Harris presented a memorial from the National Tobacco Board of Trade, asking for relief. The credentials of Mr. Harrison, Senator-elect from Indiana, were presented and filed. Senator David Davis presented the resolutions passed by the Illinois Legislature with regard to the retirement of Gen. Grant. In the House of Representatives, Mr. McMahon offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for full information of his dealings with syndicates in the work of refunding. Mr. Warner presented a bill for the appointment of three fiscal inspectors to watch the collections and disbursements of the treasury. Mr. Urner offered a measure for a commission to propose a remedy for unjust charges upon inter-State commerce. The bill to incorporate the Cherokee and Arkansas River Railroad Company was passed. On motion of Mr. Wells, the House refused to concur in the Senate amendment to the Indian bill, continuing the Indian Commission in existence, and a new conference committee was appointed. The bill to ascertain the amount due the Choctaw nation of Indians by the Government was passed. The House Committee on Elections dismissed the petition of Mackey for the seat from South Carolina now occupied by Representative O'Connor. Mr. Chalmers, of Mississippi, introduced an anti-protective-tariff resolution, the purport of which is, that after an article is manufactured in this country for ten years the tariff imposed on similar articles imported from another country should be such only as would protect the mechanic, and not the capitalist.

The Senate Finance Committee, on the morning of Tuesday, Feb. 22, reported the bill to repeal the taxes on bank capital, deposits and checks, with a substitute abolishing only the tax on deposits. The substitute passed. A joint resolution appropriating $50,000 for a monument to mark the birthplace of Washington was adopted. Mr. Logan tried to call up the Grant Retirement bill, or have it made the special order for next day, but the motion was defeated. The Legislative Appropriation bill was considered in committee of the whole, amended in some few particulars, and, on being reported to the Senate, was read a third time and passed. The joint resolution providing for an investigation of the alleged fraudulent statistics used before the Halifax Fisheries Commission was reported to the House of Representatives and referred to the committee of the whole. The Agricultural Appropriation bill was taken up and passed. Mr. Cox gave notice that he would call up the Apportionment bill on Wednesday. The Sundry Civil bill was considered, but no action was taken. The Senate amendments to the Post Route bill were concurred in. The Pension bill, with Senate amendments, was passed.

The bill for the relief of the Poncas, prepared by the minority of the special committee on the subject, was reported to the Senate, on Wednesday, Feb. 23, and tabled temporarily. A bill to extend two years the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and soldiers of the United States was passed. The Fortifications bill was taken up, read a third time, and passed. The bill for a new building for the Congressional Library was also passed. While the measure was under consideration Vice President Arthur entered the chamber, and was introduced to many of the Senators. Mr. Blaine, who has been ill, made his appearance shortly afterward, and was congratulated on his recovery. Senators Windom, Beck and Bailey were constituted a Senate conference committee on the Pension Appropriation bill, and Senators Wallace, Harris and Windom a conference committee on the District Appropriation bill. The House of Representatives went into committee of the whole on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, but the committee rose without taking any action. Mr. Cox called up the Apportionment bill, and Mr. Conger moved the consideration of the Sundry Civil bill. The Republicans, with one or two exceptions, refrained from voting on this question, and the point of no quorum was raised. Mr. Frye stated that the Republicans were not ready to act on the Apportionment bill, and requested Mr. Cox to allow other business to intervene. Mr. Cox consented, and gave notice that he would call it up to-day. The Sundry Civil bill was then taken up and several unimportant amendments were agreed to. An item appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of the private papers of the late Gens. Bragg and Polk, relating to the war, was the subject of a somewhat spirited debate. The paragraph was amended so as to authorize the purchase of the private papers of about a dozen other Generals, and finally was stricken from the bill. The evening session was devoted to the consideration of District business. The Republican members of the House held a caucus and almost unanimously adopted a resolution by which they agree to vote for no apportionment bill which fixes the number of Representatives at less than 319.

The death of Senator Carpenter was announced to the Senate on meeting Feb. 24, and appropriate resolutions were adopted, and the Senate adjourned as a mark of respect to his memory. In the House, the Fortifications Appropriation bill was reported back with the Senate amendments, recommending concurrence in some and non-concurrence in others. The report was agreed to. The House of Representatives devoted the entire day and night to filibustering. Mr. Cox demanded the previous question on the Apportionment bill, closing the debate. It was the intention to resort to Conger's tactics to defeat the motion, but four Republicans voted with the Democrats, and the Speaker also cast his vote, making just a quorum. The Republicans then resorted to dilatory motions, and finally on one vote the House was found to be without a quorum, and the Sergeant-at-Arms was sent in quest of absentees. In the course of seven hours he secured one member, but meanwhile several others had escaped and gone to the President's reception. They were brought back, or returned of their own accord, and their offense was condoned. There was a great deal of confusion during the session, and even while a Wisconsin member was referring to the death of Senator Carpenter, the interruptions were so frequent and noisy that he could scarcely make himself heard, and he was obliged to defer the resolutions of respect which he had intended to offer. The time was occupied in submitting and defeating various propositions.

DEATH OF SENATOR CARPENTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.

Senator Matt H. Carpenter breathed his last in this city this morning at 9:30, surrounded by his family, who have tenderly nursed him through his long illness, by his home physician, Dr. Fox of Milwaukee, his local physician, and by Representative Williams, of Wisconsin. Dr. Parot, of the Episcopal Church of this city, read the service for the dying as the life of the late Senator slowly ebbed away. From the hour that Dr. Fox arrived here, yesterday morning, on his rapid trip from Milwaukee, all hope was abandoned. Dr. Fox, who knew Mr. Carpenter's condition so well, and who, one year ago, had told him that his disease was incurable, instantly decided that the hours of the sick man were numbered, and informed his family that his death might be expected in a few hours. Mr. Carpenter was not himself made acquainted with his condition, although it was evident, from numerous indications during the day, that he knew that the hour of his fate had come. During the early part of the evening he was fully conscious, and recognized his family. After 9 o'clock he sank into a semi-unconscious condition, from which, however, he would arouse whenever remarks were addressed to him. Occasionally a member of his family would seek to obtain from him some sign of recognition, and the sufferer, by word, or look, or pressure of the hand, was able to respond to the last appeals of love. About 1 o'clock this morning Mr. Carpenter seemed to be sinking. His pulse almost ceased, and it was thought that the supreme moment had arrived. He rallied soon after that, however, and was less unconscious until 4 o'clock. At that hour his wife, his son —a lad of 14—and his daughter, a young woman of 20, were gathered about his bedside. The physicians had indicated that the remaining hours of the husband and father were few. The death-pall was settling down upon the chamber, yet there was no outward demonstration of grief. Anxious to secure another recognition, the stricken wife asked: "Matt, do you know me?" The dying man aroused himself for a moment, and feebly answered: "Of course, I do." These were his last words on earth. From that time until the hour of his decease, he remained in painless unconsciousness. A little before 9:30 the physician announced that the final moment was soon to come. The clergyman, Dr. Paret, then solemnly read the dying service, and as it was concluding the spirit of Matthew H. Carpenter passed from earth. It was characteristic of the wonderful intellect of the man that his head died last.

His physicians say that, contrary to the usual course with such a disease, his mind was clear to the last moment. It had been evident to Mr. Carpenter's friends for many months, if he would not realize it himself, that he was stricken with that terrible malady called Bright's disease. The stalwart form had become so wasted that his clothes hung loosely about him. There was an ashy pallor on his face. The voice had grown so weak that its silvery notes rose very feebly to the galleries.

About one year ago he consulted with his physician in Wisconsin, Dr. Fox, who announced to him the sad fact that his malady was Bright's disease, and that it had advanced so far that his case was incurable.

"From that hour," said his physician yesterday, "he was a man under sentence. Mr. Carpenter could not or would not believe it. He purchased many medical books relating to that subject, and studied the disease with the thoroughness which characterized all his investigations. He caused analysis to be made, and, when certain symptoms on some days were wanting, would decide that his physicians were mistaken, and that he had a new hold on life. He remained in torrid Washington all the last summer. The physicians that he had consulted in New York advised him not to remove from a warm climate, through fear that the change to a cooler temperature might result in a reaction. That would prove injurious. Accordingly, through the heat and malaria and summer torture here, he remained housed during the daytime, devoting himself assiduously to his extensive law practice, and at night, when the temperature was more moderate, riding about the streets in an open carriage to get a breath of good air. Winter came and he was in his seat in Congress at the beginning, but he was seldom there afterward. He seemed to be conscious of his changed appearance. He was especially sensitive at remarks about his health. He did not wish the report to go out that he was not a strong man. He was reluctant to admit that he was losing his hold upon life, and possibly his absence from the Senate during this session was due in part to the fact that he did not care to enter into a debate which would show his increasing feebleness. Three weeks ago he took a severe cold, and had an attack of pneumonia. It was then feared that he would not recover, but he was able to go to his office for some days, when again he was stricken down, and in that last illness he died.

Mr. Carpenter was born at Moretown, Vt., in 1824, and adopted by Gov. Dillingham. For two years he was a cadet at West Point, whence he went into the law office of Rufus Choate, in Boston. He married the daughter of his foster-father and removed to Wisconsin, settling at Beloit in 1848, removing to Milwaukee ten years later. At the outbreak of the war he left the Democratic party and became an active Republican. In 1869 he was elected to the United States Senate, and became President pro tem. of that body. In 1879 he was chosen to succeed Senator Howe. He had an insurance on his life of $65,000.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

Chamber's Journal describes a factory where the hammering of fifty coppersmiths was scarcely audible in the room below, their benches having under each leg a rubber cushion.

A magnetic sand, imported from the Isle of Bourbon, and since found near Morbihan, is said by M. Edard to have the property of rapidly reviving plants which had shown pronounced symptoms of decay through disease.

A new air thermometer, by M. Miller, consists of an iron support, fitted at its upper end with two tubulures, in which are fixed the two tubes of the manometer. The closed branch bears a thread of opaque glass, soldered in its side at the point where the large tube joins the connecting tube.

The microscope is a wonderful instrument. It tells the murderer that the blood which stains him is that of his brother, and not of the other life which he pretends to have taken; and, as a witness against the criminal, it, on one occasion, appealed to the very sand on which he had tread at midnight.

The Scientific American feels constrained emphatically, though regretfully, to condemn Pharaoh's serpents as dangerous toys. Perhaps, it says, they may be permitted among the brilliant experiments of the chemical lecture, but for children to play with—not at all. Mercurial fumes are hardly conducive to health.

A considerate silkworm is announced from Nevada that will eat oak leaves, as it can't get mulberry, and instead of chewing its way out of the cocoon contrives to slip out between the fibers, so as to leave all snug behind her. The name of the specimen is the Bombyx Quercicus, and it is to be hoped there isn't any bombast in his pretensions.

The Scientific American reports that there is no really good method of removing superfluous hair from the face except by destroying the hair follicles by means of a needle introduced into them beside each hair, the needle being made the negative pole of an electrical battery. This process is tedious and requires an expert. Unfortunately there is no easier or better way.

Mr. Edison has nearly finished a dynamo-electric machine having three field magnets six and a half feet long, and an armature one and a half tons in weight. The armature is connected directly to a Porter-Allen engine of 100-horse power. Both the engine and the dynamo-electric are mounted upon a large iron bed. This new electric generator is intended to do what is usually done by sixteen similar machines with greater steadiness and economy.

A committee has been formed in St. Petersburg under private auspices, it would seem, for the purpose of devising and collecting apparatus and drawings that may assist in teaching natural science in the primary schools. The objects and apparatus will be sent from school to school, and lectures delivered at each institution on the subject they illustrate. There is a strange, modern sort of quickening influence at work in Russia, of which the world may hear more in many ways some of these days.

It will be remembered that the artificial production of the diamond made last year by a Scotch chemist looked very much as though small diamonds had been fractured. None of these specimens was perfect. All of them were fragments. A step in advance has been made, however. Dr. Marsden has lately been able to affect the crystalization of carbon in the cubical form. Possessors of the most valuable natural gems need not be alarmed as yet. Dr. Marsden says his crystals are so small that they are of no commercial value whatever. The fact that a perfect diamond can be produced, no matter how small, is a notable event, and when the paper describing the process by which the end was attained is published it will command general attention.

In a paper recently read before the French Academy of Sciences, Professor Fort gave some startling instances of the efficacy of artificial respiration. A three-year-old child had apparently died, and was considered as to have passed over to the majority of three and a half hours. At the end of that time Professor Fort set up artificial respiration and kept up the process for four hours, when the child returned to life. A person had been under water for ten minutes, and was evidently drowned. Dr. Fournel, of Billancourt, however, after four hours of labor, managed to make natural succeed artificial breathing, and so reanimated his patient. In some instances artificial respiration will be found of great efficacy in removing poison from the lungs and glands. In any case of asphyxia hope should not be abandoned until hours of trial of artificial respiration gives no encouraging result.

Husband and Wife in Law.

The wife has been much advanced by the general tenor of the legislation of late years in respect to her own property. She has acquired a pretty independent position as to title, control and disposition, but this relates to her property, not to his. The law has not yet raised her to the station of superintendent of her husband's contracts, and probably never will. He is bound to support her and the children which she bears to him, and in order to fulfill this obligation he ought to have as much freedom in the management of his business affairs of the world as unmarried men are allowed to exercise. In taking a wife a man does not put himself under an overseer. He is not a subordinate in his own family, but the head of it. The law assigns him this position, not for his own advantage alone, but as much for the real good of his wife and children, and somewhat for the general interest of society. A husband left free to lead and govern in his own family is the most useful husband to all who may be concerned in the results of his conduct. That exceptions to this rule may be pointed out is no objection to or disproof of the rule itself. Humane institutions are all more or less imperfect, and their complete efficiency in practical working cannot be expected in every instance. It is enough that they produce beneficence to the great mean and in the great majority of cases. A subjugated husband is a less pleasing and less energetic member o society than one who keeps his true place, yet knows how to temper authority with affection. The law does not discourage conjugal consultations or free and voluntary co-operation in all transactions which affect or may affect the welfare of the family. * * * But the law does not undertake to secure this delightful harmony by coercion, but leaves it to issue spontaneously from the holy relation of matrimony.—Georgia Supreme Court.

Origin of the "Baker's Dozen."

Close by Market street—now Broadway—lived and prospered a baker, the first man that ever baked New-Year cakes—in fact, the inventor of them. The name of our friend was Volckert Jan Pietersen Van Amsterdam, commonly known as Baas. He was Dutch from his large feet to his round bald head, and had no respect for any one or anything that was not Dutch. He was a regular attendant at the old Dutch church, and lived constantly in mortal fear of being bewitched. His wife, Maritje, was economical even to saving the parings of her nails, and his gingerbread babies were always made in imitation of his children. It was New-Year eve, 1655, and Baas was in his shop dealing out cakes for small pieces of money, called wampum. He had taken an extra glass of rum in honor of St. Nicholaus, when he heard a sharp rap, and in walked as ugly an old woman as ever he had set his eyes on.

"I want a dozen New-Year cookies," she screamed.

"Vell, den, you needn' sbeak so loud," replied Baas. "Duyvel! I ain't teaf, den."

"I want a dozen," screamed the old woman, "and here is only twelve."

"Vell, den, und vhat de duyvel is dwalf but a dozen?" said the baker.

"I tell you I want one more!" she shrieked.

"Vell, den," said he, "you may go to de duyvel und get anodder; you von't get it here."

From this time on our baker's wife and himself were made miserable. Their money and cookies were taken away by invisible hands; their bread either rose out of their sight or sank into the earth; their famous brick oven was torn down, and poor Baas pelted with his own bricks; Maritje became deaf; Baas was black and blue from head to toe; and such a life as he led was purgatory. Thrice the old woman appeared, and thrice was she sent to "de duyvel." And at last, in his agony, Baas bethought himself of St. Nicholaus, who advised him, on hearing of his troubles, when he counted a dozen to count thirteen.

"Py St. Johannes de Dooper, put St. Nicholaus is a great blockhead!" thought Baas; and while he was thus thinking, St. Nick had vanished, and in his stead was the old woman. She repeated her demand for "one more" and Baas, remembering St. Nicholaus, acceded to her demand, when she exclaimed, "The spell is broken, and henceforward a dozen is thirteen, and thirteen is a dozen." And, taking a cooky with an effigy of the good saint on it, she made Baas swear that ever afterward twelve should be thirteen, as a type of the thirteen mighty States that should arise out of the ruins of the Government of Vaderlandt.

It is well known how terribly St. Nicholaus revenged himself upon those who set themselves up against the venerable customs of their ancestors, and refused the homage to him to whose good offices it was owing that this, his favorite city, has surpassed all others in beautiful damsels, valorous young men, mince-pies, oliekoeks, and New-Year cookies. —Harper's Magazine.

Why the Landlord Raised the Rent.

Old Bob Keyworth is one of the hardest landlords in Galveston. Jim Groce lives in one of Keyworth's houses, and is a very good tenant, while the landlord has never yet had a dollar's worth of repairs done to the house. Not long since Jim went to Keyworth and told him: "I want you to have that house painted. I am paying $20 a month, and you ought to have it done." Keyworth refused, so Groce had it done at his own expense. As soon as the painting was over, old Keyworth raised the rent to $25 a month. "Why do you raise the rent?" asked Jim. "On account of the improvement," replied the old man; "you know the house has just been painted, and a newly painted house is always worth $5 more than a shabby looking one."—Galveston News.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1881.

A sleeping-car costs, on an average, about $12,000, and earns about $1,000 a month. Pretty good profit.

The late-lamented Carlyle once called us "18,000,000 of bores," gauging the whole country by the few cheeky American tourists who used to invade his work-room.

There are indications of a large emigration from Canada to the United States this summer. The Montreal Post declares that nothing can stop the exodus until the Dominion ceases to be a crown colony, and has the sole management of its own affairs.

Joaquin Miller's first wife is now Mrs. Thomas Logan. She is described as 35, with a thin, wasted form, and a wealth of black hair. Her health is said to have been affected by her separation from her daughter, removed by Mr. Miller to a Canadian convent.

Mr. Aaron Burr Hays, of New York, who died the other day, was remarkable for two things. He was the oldest bank cashier in the world, and the only man in America named after Aaron Burr. His name was a thorn in his side, and he never signed his name other than "A. B. Hays."

There is a movement in St. Louis to strictly enforce the Sunday law. By a provision of the act, Jews may work on Sunday if they religiously observe Saturday. The Globe-Democrat declares that, if interfered with, it will employ Jews exclusively to get out the Monday morning edition.

Six counties in Texas—Andrews, Dawson, Gaines, Martin, Terry and Yoakum—have a population of forty-four souls, of whom thirty-seven are male and seven are females. Each county has an area of about 1,000 square miles. Six other counties—Bailey, Cochran, Hale, Hockley, Lamb and Lubbock—have a total population of twenty-five souls, all males.

"To me," writes the Rev. Phillips Brooks, in reply to an impeachment of his orthodoxy, "the incarnation and the miracles which Christ Jesus is said to have wrought seem to be sublimely reasonable, and contradicted by no knowledge of man or of the world which God has given us. I believe that they are true historically, and most natural philosophically."

A Chicago man committed suicide, the other day, because he found his business increasing so rapidly that he feared he wouldn't be able to manage it. So he cut the arteries of his wrist with a tin tag, took a dose of poison, and then hung himself by a rope. He meant to make sure that his business shouldn't trouble him any more, and was more successful than the Frenchman who suspended himself over a tidal river, cocked a loaded pistol, swallowed some poison, and kicked away the chair he stood on. Then he fired; but the pistol cut the rope instead of hitting his head, and he fell into the water. The salt water made him sick, relieved him of his dose, and he crawled to land baffled in his efforts.

Mrs. Elliott Nichols, a young married lady of Carthage, Mo., formerly Miss Ella Hogg, of Bloomington, committed suicide, the other day. She was the daughter of William Hogg, once a merchant in Bloomington, who, owing to business reverses, shot two of his children, afterward killing himself. A few weeks ago Mamie Hogg, sister of Mrs. Nichols, while on a visit to Carthage, committed suicide by throwing herself into a well, a short distance from Mrs. Nichols' home. This makes the fourth suicide that has occurred in that family within the past year. It is said that Mrs. Nichols and her sister Mamie were unfortunately carried away by the doctrine of Spiritualism, which aided largely in unsettling their reason.

The Carson (Nev.) Appeal is responsible for the following story: A gentleman who took a trip into the country, when on the plains, a mile from any house, noticed a cat, a huge one, almost as large as a fair-sized dog. It was lying upon the ground, its feet uppermost, in such a way that he had no doubt that it had fallen a victim to some vicious dog. Around it, feeding unsuspectingly, was a flock of small birds. The apparently lifeless cat was within range of the vision of the observer for some time, and just as he was thinking how much easier it would be for the animal to feign death and catch a bird by deceiving it than by slipping up to it, he was astonished to see the cat suddenly roll over and grab one of the feathered tribe that was very near. The other birds flew away 100 yards or so and alighted. The cat only made one or two mouthfuls of the game, and then crept around to the windward of the birds, laid itself out again, and once more successfully played the dead dodge. The gentleman drove away without seeing how many birds it took to satisfy the feline.

These returns are subject to revision as the result of correspondence, which may increase the figures in the case of any State to the extent of one-half of 1 per cent. Virginia, Missouri and the Indian Territory are not included in the statement. About 50,000 or 60,000 bales will probably be added on this account.

A correspondent of the Milwaukee Sentinel, writing from Miles City, M. T., relates the following singular story: When the Sentinel correspondent was in the merchandising house of Mr. J. J. Graham, at Fort Keogh, three Indian chiefs, Rain-in-the-Face, Two Roads and Spotted Eagle, who surrendered to Gen. Miles last spring, came in, as is their custom, being encamped only two miles away on Tongue river, for the purpose of conversing with Mr. William M. Courtenay, the chief clerk and interpreter of the establishment, in whom the Indians religiously believe. Mr. Courtenay was reading Whittaker's "Life of Custer," and in turning the leaves of the book one of the Indians caught sight of his own picture, which he immediately recognized. They then took the volume from Mr. Courtenay, and found all their portraits, but exhibited very little emotion of pleasure or otherwise, until one of them turned a page and the picture of Gen. Custer was revealed. At this Rain-in-the-Face became greatly excited, going through with all the gyrations of the war-dance, and giving the Sioux war-whoop at the top of his voice. After he was through with his wild demonstration, but still exhibiting the greatest anger, he struck the picture with his hand, and, with a demoniac sneer on his face, exclaimed, in the Sioux tongue, "I killed him. I made many holes in him. He once took my liberty. I took his life. I am glad I did." On being told by a bystander that Tom Custer was still living, Rain-in-the-Face again became very violent, and hissed between his teeth, "Your tongue is forked," which is the Sioux figure for "You lie." Continuing, he said: "I visited his body after the battle. I cut him open. I ate a part of his liver. I am glad I killed him. He was bad to my people. He kill many warriors." It is a superstition among the Sioux that, by eating the liver of a valorous victim, the warrior so eating obtains all their cunning and prowess, making him doubly brave and revengeful—the two great attributes of an Indian warrior.

Be That Your Crest?

In a conversation about his Western and Southern trip Lord Lymington, a member of the English nobility, told a reporter of the New York World that he stumbled at a railway station on a gentleman who exhibited a most ingenuous thirst for information concerning the British peerage.

"Pray how did he manifest this?"

Lord Lymington—Oh, very civilly. He introduced himself to me very kindly on learning that I was a traveler and an Englishman, and offered me the hospitalities of the town. It was very obliging of him, but unfortunately I could not stay, so we had a chat while I was waiting for the train. During this chat his eye fell on a portmanteau of mine which I had caused to be marked for convenience sake and easy identification with the cabalistic figures 120. This he scanned for some time with ill-concealed curiosity, and finally turning to me said rather abruptly: "If I am not mistaken, you are a nobleman, are you not?" I admitted that such was my unhappy lot. "Then," said he, "I presume that number there on your valise is what they call in the nobility armorial bearings, is it not? In fact, your crest?" "Hardly that," I modestly replied. "A number is only borne as a crest, I believe, by much more illustrious persons; for example, the Beast in the Apocalypse." "Oh," he replied, and then after meditating a moment or two, asked: "Have your family been long in England?" "Yes," I said, "they have been there for some time, but why do you ask?" "Perhaps the number refers," he replied, "to the number of generations, just as they recite them in the Old Testament, you know?" "Yes," I unhesitatingly and with prompt mendacity replied, "that is exactly it, and I don't see how you hit it so cleverly." He smiled all over with delight as the train rushed up, and waved kind farewells to me as long as we were in sight.

Pope.

That was a queer confusion of ideas which led an orator to say: "In the words of an old Roman poet, 'Man never is but always to be blest.'" He was reminded that the "old Roman poet" was Pope. "Oh, yes," he replied, "but he was a Roman Catholic, you know." It was the turn of the critic to be surprised. "Pope a Roman Catholic!" he exclaimed; "are you sure?" "Certainly," replied the orator; "and I never knew of a Pope that wasn't a Catholic, did you?"

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

Friday, Feb. 18.—Senate.—The Senate frittered away several hours with the introduction of resolutions intended to expedite business, but which had a contrary effect, in that the Senators made them an occasion for filibustering. The amendment of the House, fixing March 14 for a vote of the whole people on the constitutional amendments, was accepted by a vote of 24 to 20. The bill passed establishing a State Board of Health, and, after a short consideration of the proposition to reform and reconstruct the present system of State Road laws, an adjournment was had until Monday afternoon.

House.—The House engrossed the bill creating a State Department of Geology and Natural History, and also the measure proscribing consanguinity as a bar to marriage. Bills were introduced: Providing for the annual distribution of the surplus dog tax; authorizing Indianapolis to levy a special tax for the construction of a city hall and market house; making keepers of houses of ill-fame guilty of felony with from one to three years' imprisonment, and the inmates from six to eighteen months, and legalizing the acts of the Blackford County Commissioners in draining wet lands. A resolution passed calling for reports concerning the scholastic and financial condition of each benevolent institution. Consideration of the Tax bill consumed the remainder of the day session. An amendment was adopted in effect that County Auditors shall compel all companies, organizations, partnerships and persons loaning money in the State to report to him on April 1 of each year, under oath, the amount of money loaned and held by persons in his county, that the same may be listed for taxation. A night session was held to clear away the sections of this bill.

Saturday, Feb. 19.—House.—The House passed a bill repealing section 12 of the game law, prohibiting railways from transporting game outside the State at any time. The section had always been practically inoperative. Mr. Schweitzer's bill also passed, compelling hotels to provide all possible arrangements for escape from fire, but the bill abolishing attorney fees in the taking of contracts failed for want of a constitutional majority. Bills were introduced: Encouraging the improvement of live stock; enabling married women, when abandoned by their husbands, to convey their separate real estate; making the keepers and inmates of houses of prostitution guilty of felony, and providing that the former shall be liable to a punishment of one to three years' imprisonment, and the inmates of six to eighteen months. Further consideration of the Tax bill went over until Monday, and the Educational bill was made the special order for Wednesday.

Monday, Feb. 21.—Senate.—The Senate was largely occupied to-day in the consideration of Bell's bill practically remodeling the road system of the State by abolishing Supervisors and making township Trustees superintendents of roads. The measure eventually passed to a final reading. The bill regulating and improving the practice of medicine was under way at the time of adjournment, and was meeting with strong opposition. A resolution was adopted setting off the afternoon session for consideration of the report from the Codification Committee.

House—Floyd's bill for the purchase and conversion of toll roads into free roads was the cause of a wrangle for several hours, after which it was referred to a committee. The Judiciary Committee submitted a number of reports, among them recommending that Carter's bill fixing the liability of employers for injuries to employes be amended so as to provide that the carelessness of company servants is no bar to recovery of damages, and declaring that all contracts between corporations and employes, where the latter shall not bring suit for damages, be null and void. This amendment was accepted and the bill engrossed.

Tuesday, Feb. 22.—Senate.—The Senate worked on the Medical bill establishing a board of examiners and prescribing who shall practice medicine, during the morning session, and numerous amendments were suggested by the opposition to weigh it down with objectionable features, so as to eventually insure its defeat. The proposed amendments to the civil code consumed the afternoon, and a section was incorporated admitting women to practice law, but afterward voted down on reconsideration. The Senate confirmed the nomination of Dr. William Freeman, of Switzerland county, as Commissioner of the House of Refuge.

House.—The House wrangled during the forenoon over the 6-per-cent. interest bill, and all attempts to amend by allowing higher rates either on short loans or on contracts were defeated. Eventually the bill was engrossed, 46 to 44, with ten absent members. The Women's Suffrage bill came up on special order and was defeated, 46 to 43. The afternoon was passed in consideration of the Tax bill as reported by the Codification Committee, and the measure finally passed with but slight amendments.

Wednesday, Feb. 23.—Senate.—The Senate temporarily disposed of the Medical bill by ordering its engrossment, after accepting an amendment in effect that the fact of a physician advertising as such shall not detract from his professional standing as far as the provisions of this measure may bear thereon. Consideration of the civil code consumed the afternoon, but it was ordered that the House Tax bill be taken up as soon as printed copies thereof are distributed. The Governor sent in a notification of the appointment of Samuel Green, of Rush county, Trustee of the State Institution for Feeble-Minded Children. A telegram was received from Booneville, Warrick county, announcing the dangerous illness of Senator Hart.

House.—The General Revenue bill was introduced into the House this morning. It provides for a State levy of 10 cents on $100, and a poll tax of 50 cents. A reconsideration of the resolution was had favoring the taxation of United States treasury notes, and, by a vote of 32 to 36, the matter was indefinitely postponed. Bills were passed: Repealing the section requiring separate polling places in incorporated towns; relating to legal practices; prohibiting pool-selling; relative to decedents' estates; enabling County Commissioners to establish schools and asylums for indigent children; providing for the payment of arrearages to the Indiana Legion; authorizing and legalizing the recording of patents issued by the United States on the State of Indiana. The bill was rejected authorizing three-fourths of a jury in civil cases to render a verdict. Mr. Cauthorne introduced a bill amending the new State-House Tax law, and providing for a tax of 2 cents on each $100 for 1881 and for each successive year to and including 1888, all the money so raised to be kept separate, and constitute a part of the new State-House fund. In case the tax should not prove sufficient the Governor, State Auditor and Treasurer are permitted to borrow money, provided they do not borrow more than $50,000 during the present year, $200,000 in 1882, $100,000 in 1883, $100,000 in 1884, and $150,000 in 1885, in all $770,000. In order to do this, ten-year bonds will be issued.

Thursday, Feb. 24.—Senate.—The Senate took up the majority report of the temperance committee recommending the passage of what is known as the Temperance Council Local Option bill, and a free discussion lasting several hours resulted in a recommittal with instructions to strike out the emergency clause and report to-morrow. Consideration of the Civil Code was resumed in the afternoon, ending with the engrossment of the bill as mainly proposed by the Codification Committee.

House.—A bill was introduced by the Ways and Means Committee, providing for the usual 1-per-cent. tax for interest on the temporary loan, and authorizing a 4-per-cent. loan of $200,000 to replace the bonds now falling due. Bills were presented: Providing that none but physicians shall hold the office of Coroner, and giving them jurisdiction over insanity cases; to define, suppress and punish tramps, and to prohibit the taking or receiving of life-insurance policies upon the tontine plan. The bill authorizing County Commissioners to say what animals, milch cows excepted, shall run at large was voted down, as was also the bill abolishing the Grand Jury system, the latter failing by a vote of 39 to 52. By a vote of 39 to 53 the House refused to instruct the Temperance Committee to report favorably upon a local-option bill, a resolution to that effect being referred to the committee named without action. The Prison Committee recommended that unless a special appropriation of $35,000 be made for necessary repairs to the prison south, that the prison be discontinued and the convicts be transferred to Michigan City. The committee investigating the Female Reformatory reported, exonerating the management, but noting that the bath as a punishment had been abolished, recommended that whipping on the naked person of girls also be omitted in the future. The afternoon was taken up with consideration of the Criminal Code, the House progressing as far as section 148.

A FAREWELL ADDRESS.

[From the New York Sun.]

Fellow-Citizens: About to lay down the great trust which your suffrages conferred four years ago upon another person, it seems proper that I should address to you a few words of affectionate warning. It has been customary heretofore only for the great Presidents, who were conscious of the love and veneration of the people, to take leave of their country in this solemn form. But, inasmuch as I can hardly be ranked among the Presidents at all, and history will probably take note of me only as an intruder in that illustrious line, I do not feel myself bound by those precedents.

My situation in the administration of this office, to which I was not elected, has been one of singular embarrassment. I had borne arms for my country, if not with distinction, at least with moderate credit. My fellow-citizens of Ohio, deeming me an inoffensive sort of person, without sufficient force of character to engender enemies, repeatedly raised me, like a wooden image, to the place of Governor—an office in that State of no power and influence. But I was gratified with these apparent testimonials of public favor, and, believing that no man of real abilities could receive the nomination at Cincinnati, I was not surprised when the battle of the Titans ended in the choice of the pigmy. And it was well so. A standard bearer of larger stature would have been struck, perhaps fatally, by many missiles which passed harmless over my head.

My defeat was a cruel disappointment, and the very large majority of my opponent added greatly to the weight of the blow. But I owe myself the justice to state, in this, doubtless, the last communication the public will ever receive from me, that I had no thought then of resisting or reversing the popular will. Had I consulted only the promptings of my own heart I would have refused to be a party to the memorable conspiracy which was immediately formed to substitute the candidate rejected by the people for the candidate whom they had elected. So innocent was I of the design subsequently executed that I publicly acknowledged my defeat in a candid address from my own doorstep, and I confess that I was profoundly shocked when I saw Mr. Chandler's celebrated dispatch boldly announcing my election hours after my defeat had been universally known and conceded. But, as the plot developed, and only the most agreeable features were communicated to me, while the dark details of crime and corruption were carefully hidden, the scruples which I soon came to regard as mere personal weaknesses gradually melted away, and I finally accepted the fruits of conspiracy and forgery with complacency and even pleasure.

I will not recall the history of my induction into office. I wish, indeed, it might be erased from the memory of man, and I would cheerfully return to the conscience fund of the treasury, or make over to my defrauded competitor, all that had been saved of his four years' salary, if that act could restore me to the state of innocence I enjoyed while yet the harmless Governor of Ohio.

My position after the assumption of the Presidency, as before said, was one of peculiar delicacy and difficulty. I had read attentively the powerful letter of acceptance by the great statesman nominated at St. Louis, and inasmuch as the people had, by a large majority, expressed their approval of its contents, and I was in the occupation of the office to which its author had been elected, I conceived it to be my duty to effect some of the reforms therein recommended. But I found myself powerless; I was not a free agent. The Government was administered in my name, but I was little more than a passive instrument in the unscrupulous hands which had forged the various links in that so-called chain of title to the office I held. Those men were not reformers; they had not brought me into power to forward the measures enunciated by my late opponent. It was some time before I fully realized my abject dependence upon the secrecy and fidelity of the numerous agents employed in the great fraud, and meanwhile I was permitted to amuse the country with certain promises of reform, which were, however, confined to the civil service. At length even this pretense grew ridiculous. What I had intended for reform Mr. Sherman calmly converted into the simple process of turning out his political enemies and putting in his friends, and Mr. Sherman, as I was early made to understand, was one of my masters.

I loathed in my heart the leprous criminals who had conceived and executed the daring frauds in Louisiana and Florida. But no sooner had I taken the oath of office than I ascertained that my nearest friends and sponsors had promised them not merely protection, but high promotion and other rewards, and I was compelled to execute those promises under penalty of complete discovery in every shocking detail of the stupendous crime of which I seem to be enjoying the fruits. It is needless to pursue the narrative. It is enough to say that, except one Cazenave, who was paid in cash, they were all—visiting statesmen, Returning-Board knaves, forgers, thieves, secret negotiators and counsel before the Electoral Commission—pensioned upon your treasury. The last of these nominations, that of the notorious Stanley Matthews, for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, is even now pending in the Senate.

But there was a still more grievous humiliation to be endured. When I realized my defeat on the day after the election, I declared truly that the sharpest pang I then felt arose from apprehension concerning the fate of the colored Republicans in the contested Southern States. I now learned that in order to secure the completion of the fraudulent count, my friends had pledged me to abandon those colored Republicans, and to hand over those States to the Democrats, who claimed them, on precisely the same grounds as Mr. Tilden might have claimed the Presidency. I had no resource but to comply. This step, however, was only less fatal to me than would have been a refusal. It lost me—I will not say the respect, for to that I had no claim—but the support of the earnest Republicans, who declared that if I was elected, so were Packard and Chamberlain. It was soon plain that they, too, regarded me as a fraud in a new sense.

This defection left me practically without a party, and I sought to supply the deficiency by an alliance with the Southern Democracy. I outlined a magnificent and dazzling scheme of internal improvements to be carried out in the South at the general expense, and I blew, with all the breath that was in me, the trump of resurrection over the tomb of the old Whig party. But nobody would trust a Fraud, and but one solitary Whig emerged at my blast, in the person of the late Alexander H. Stephens. Having lost my own party it was evident to them that my ability to execute was less than my inclination to promise, and they prudently declined a coalition which on my side was based on nothing more substantial than the few offices which had not already been distributed.

Under these circumstances it will be seen that the total failure of my fraudulent administration was a foregone conclusion, and I long since discovered that I must content myself with drawing the salary of the Presidency in advance and hoarding what could be saved from it by rigid economy and a sordid affectation of temperance. This, with a scrupulous provision for a few personal friends, such as my family physician and my son Webb, at the public expense, has been my only solace under the sad humiliations of these later months of my residence in the White House. Conscious that all parties, and even men of no party, looked forward with a grateful sense of relief to the period of my final departure for Ohio, I have felt that some explanation was due to myself and to the public of the difficulties which inevitably environ a fraudulent President. Had I been honestly elected, I could, no doubt, have done much for the reformation of the public abuses pointed out with such emphasis by Mr. Tilden, and mildly alluded to by Mr. Carl Schurz in my own letter of acceptance. But I was the slave of my political creators; the paralysis of the original fraud pervaded my entire administration.

If, in what is here written, my countrymen shall find anything to extenuate my failings, or anything to soften the judgment which must follow me into history, the object of this, my farewell address to the swindled people of the United States, will have been accomplished.

No Fascinations in Snakes.

I have seen, says Nature, a guinea-pig, after finding no place of exit from the cage, quietly settle itself down in the midst of the coils of an Australian constrictor, shut its eyes and go to sleep. Ten minutes afterward the snake had moved and the guinea-pig was washing its face with its paws. Not once, but a dozen times, a rabbit has nibbled the nose of a River Jack viper (Vipera rhinoceros) in a pretty, inquiring way, heedless of the strong blows the reptile would administer with its snout to the impertinent investigator of that queer-looking object. For fully ten minutes one day a rabbit sat gazing at the poised and threatening head of a puff adder, now and then reaching forward to smell the reptile's nose, and anon sitting on its hind legs to wash its ears, and again returning to the "fascinating" object of its inquiries. If, during that time, the rabbit had fallen into the state of trance, it was so soon released from that condition as to be able to attend to its own comfort and busy itself about its toilet. The birds show no more recognition than the other animals of the dangerous position in which they are placed. We see them hopping about on the snakes, and picking lustily at their scales; sitting on the branches preening their feathers and behaving themselves just as though no such dreadful (or pleasing?) sensation as "fascination" was possible. I saw once a sparrow perched upon the body of a snake twisted round a branch and preening itself. By and by a constrictor crept up slowly, touched the bird with its nose, and then threw the crushing folds around it. The deliberate approach of the snake and the unconscious attitude of the sparrow, concerned about its private affairs, would have staggered an ordinary believer in "fascination." I have closely watched the behavior of snakes intent on feeding. It may be a sudden rush, when the victim has no time to see its enemy, or the gradual, lazy advance of the reptile; in either case the doomed victims betrays no suspicion of danger, at least so far as I have been able so ascertain after passing some hundreds of hours contemplating the snakes in the unequaled representative collection of the zoological society.

Cracking Wheat into Flour.

Minnesota millers no longer "grind" wheat into flour. They "crack" it, and the people of the Northwest claim that the new process makes their hitherto inferior wheat the most valuable in the world. Burr stones are things of the past and Hungarian steel rollers have taken their place. These rollers are about thirty inches long and eight inches in diameter. It takes five sets of steel rollers to finish the flour. Each set of rollers run closer than the preceding. After the wheat passes each set of rollers it is bolted or sifted through course cloth. This cloth lets the disintergrated particles of wheat through and passes off the bulky and larger pieces, which are run through another and a closer set of rollers and cracked again. The last rollers have little else but wheat hulls and waxy germs of wheat, which do not crack up, but smash down like a piece of wax. The germ of a kernel of wheat is not good food. It makes flour black. By the old millstone process this waxy germ was ground up with the starchy portion and bolted through with the flour. By the new system of cracking the kernel instead of grinding it this germ is not ground, but flattened out and sifted or bolted out, while the starchy portions of the wheat are crushed into powdered wheat or flour. All the big mills of Minneapolis now manufacture by the new process.

Cash Versus Credit.

Any retail dealer can buy closer with cash than with credit. The closer he buys the greater are his profits. Money put down on his counter gives him a chance to discount his paper, meet his notes and pay current expenses. Charges on the book mean cash next month, or the month after, or next year. Cash asks no favors except to be waited upon. Credit must have a bookkeeper, a collector and a lawyer. If a retail dealer in groceries asks the price of starch, he is told that he can have it at so much credit, or so much for spot cash. If a consumer asks the price of the retailer, it is one price to Cash Down or Dead Beat.

The more one thinks this matter over the more he realizes the force of the remark of a prominent Western financier, who lately observed: "The man who pays cash when he can get credit is a fool." And so say we all. If Dead Beat is to have the same price as Cash Down, with an additional advantage of sixty-six days' time—which means ninety in nineteen cases out of twenty—why do any of us pay cash? Why not all take credit?—Detroit Free Press.

Every one should know that a prompt shock of electricity will restore a person to consciousness, who is dying from the effects of chloroform.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

JAMES A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN
EDITORS.

JOHN I. MITCHELL has been elected United States senator in Pennsylvania.

IF No 5, of the proposed amendments to the constitution is adopted, we will virtually have ninety-two fee bills in the state.

AND now come bevies of republican editors who can't decide whether Dorsey, New, Conkling, Mrs. Sprague, Beecher or Bob Ingersoll carried Indiana.

A CIRCULAR containing the lecture of Prof. G. W. Michael against the Valparaiso normal school is being sent to publishers all over the state. As we do not know the merits of the quarrel we omit further notice.

VALPARAISO has a firm named Haste & Hollet. That name just suits us. We have been for some time trying to organize such a firm with a number of our wood subscribers. Yes, gentlemen, don't forget. Haste and haul it.

WE have received the first number of a new weekly called the Dillon Tribune, published at Dillon, in Montana, a town which the publishers believe will some day be one of the best in the territory. We hope the Tribune may be as successful as are its hopes in the future of that wide awake country.

A LADY in Cincinnati parted from her husband about twenty-five years ago, and employed a lawyer to get a divorce. This, he assured her, had been done. The husband married again, but the first wife has just learned that the divorce was never granted. The records show no trace of any such case. She now applies for another, and will doubtless succeed.

THE Ligonier Leader is threatening the editor of the Banner with a new infernal machine called an "affidavy." It is to make "J. B. Stoll's flesh quiver like an aspen leaf." Yes, "aspen leaf" is the terrible word used. But stop. Isn't "aspen leaf" an ingredient of spring poetry, and the poetry season just opening? Couldn't you make it dogwood or slippery elm, or something not likely to be needed soon?

Text-Books for Schools.

The matter of text-books for our public schools is attracting a great deal of attention all over the country. There seems to be a feeling that we are paying publishing houses too much. Whether this be so or not, certain it is that the remedy usually proposed is worse than the trouble itself. In most cases, it is proposed to put the whole matter of publishing school books for the use of the state, into the hands of certain officers, or of a commission on text-books. These persons must prepare the books at the expense of the state, sell them at a specified price, and pay the money so received, back into the state treasury. Suppose this were to be done, and suppose the present legislature or the present governor should appoint such a commission. It must be apparent to all that the persons so appointed would, in many cases, be totally unfit for the work; personal friends, politicians and hangers-on, with now and then a man who may be supposed to know a little about the business. Just what sort of excellence a commission composed of such materials would inject into a series of text-books on eight or ten different subjects, is difficult to foresee. Those who remember the Indiana Readers, published under the auspices of the state board of education twenty or thirty years ago, can readily comprehend the style of work we might expect of them. These readers were nothing more than a re-arrangement of the matter in McGuffey's Readers, with a new name. The only merit they possessed was the matter they contained, and which was all in the old books. But the children were obliged to give up their old readers and buy the same matter in the new ones. Now give to the commission the making of all the text-books, say orthography, geography, grammar, physiology, history, book-keeping, algebra, etc., and what would be the result? "Trash fit for the gods." It would, moreover, be as expensive at last as the wheat raised on an experimental state farm—about ten dollars a bushel. The wheat might be fit for some purpose, but most of the books would be fit for nothing. Another plan is to have a commission of three or more persons to select the books to be used all over the state. This would give the entire control of one, perhaps all, of the text-books to one publishing house, cutting off competition and opening the door for corrupt practices of all kinds. A better way would be to live up to the present law, changing text-books not oftener than once in six years, and using judgment in the selection of such as are adopted.

The Hicksville people are agitated over the report that a sponge factory is to be established in that brisk little manufacturing town. A case of beer changed hands,—or perhaps we should say, changed jugs, in consequence of the joke.

Thomas J. Cuppy has rented room No. 1 in Central building and will at once put in a full line of agricultural implements, buggies, carriages, etc. Mr. Cuppy is a wide-awake business man, and we are glad that he has located in this place. The best wishes of the Commercial attend him.—Columbia City Commercial.

The Kendallville News of last week contains a notice of the marriage of Rudolph H Garrigue, of New York, to Miss Lida, youngest daughter of Capt. M. F. Collier, so long and favorably known in this state as special agent of the Underwriters Insurance company. Mr. Garrigue has recently been acting as assistant to Capt. Collier.

Fort Wayne News: One of the forty-ton mogul engines on the Pennsylvania road a few days ago jumped the track at the Horseshoe bend and rolled down the mountain 100 feet. Last week the engine was taken to pieces and hauled on sleds down the valley to Altoona, to be rebuilt. The engineer and fireman jumped from the footboards, when the engine left the track, and escaped with slight bruises.

In regard to the cases of small-pox that have appeared near Webster, about ten miles south of this place, Dr. W. H. Coyle relates the following: A young lady from the last-named place went to Chicago and returned home with a well-developed case of small-pox. The lady died and three children have also died since of the same disease. The small-pox is spreading and has become an epidemic of the most malignant type. Several of the business men are lying very low, and a young lady is not expected to recover.—Ligonier Banner.

A QUEER CASE.—Rev. Marcus Ormond, a Presbyterian divine of Pennsylvania, but who is now residing with friends at Rushville, this state, some months ago lost residence, library and all his worldly possessions by fire, which affected his mind to such an extent that brain fever resulted. When he had physically recovered it was discovered that his memory had been completely destroyed, and whereas before his sickness he had been a thorough English, Greek and Latin scholar, he was then an absolute illiterate. With his wife as an instructor he started anew up education's ladder, and has progressed sufficiently to be able to read a little.

The Ligonier Banner has the following: "As heretofore stated in these columns, the Indianapolis Journal vigorously opposes the enactment of the temperance bill now before the legislature. In a "fiery" article a short time since the Journal said among other things: 'The existing laws against illegal liquor-selling are not enforced. Why not expend the power now exerted in making them yet more unenforcible in getting up a crusade to vitalize them? It is one thing to rave in general terms of denunciation against the evils of intemperance, and quite another to quietly, yet persistently, prosecute a saloon-keeper for selling whisky to a boy or a poor inebriate who has long lost control of himself. The saloon-keeper will fight back, but an audience of temperance men and women will applaud the pathetic passages in the speech of the orator who never spends a cent to enforce the law, but passes round the hat after his lecture. Thus the blatant orator becomes a hero on easy terms. His pocket and his person have never been in danger, and he is on the high road to a good office. There is something too much of this stale humbuggery abroad in the land. Why do not temperance organizations appoint committees to enforce the present law, and call on all good people to assist in defraying the expense? That would not cost more than paying officers to lobby the legislature for impracticable laws.'

This may be all true, but that doesn't dispose of the promises made by republican politicians to the temperance people during the late campaign. The question is, are such pledges worth anything, and were they given with the intention of basely violating them? That point the Journal conveniently ignores.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Indiana.

The following are the proposed amendments to the constitution of the state of Indiana, as they were submitted to the people at the spring election of 1880, and which are to be submitted to them the 14th of March, one week from next Monday. They are here given so voters can refresh their memories at least, before voting on them:

NO. 1.

Amend section 2 of article 2 so as to read as follows:

Section 2. In all elections, not otherwise provided for by this constitution, every male citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upwards, who shall have resided in the state during the six months, and in the township sixty days, and in the ward or precinct thirty days immediately preceding such election, and every male of foreign birth of the age of 21 years and upwards, who shall have resided in the United States one year, and shall have resided in this state during the six months and in the township sixty days, and in the ward or precinct thirty days immediately preceding such election, and shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, conformably to the laws of the United states on the subject of naturalization, shall be entitled to vote in the township or precinct where he may reside, if he shall have been duly registered according to law.

By striking out the words, "no negro or mulatto shall have the right of suffrage," contained in section 5 of the second article of the constitution.

NO. 3.

Amend section 14 of the second article to read: "Section 14. All general elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November; but township elections may be held at such time as may be provided by law: Provided, That the general assembly may provide by law for the election of all judges of courts of general or appellate jurisdiction, by an election to be held for such officers only, at which time no other officer shall be voted for; and shall also provide for the registration of all persons entitled to vote.

NO. 4.

Strike the word "white" from section 4 and 5 of article 4.

NO. 5.

Amend the 14th clause of section 22 of article 4 to read as follows: In relation to fees or salaries, except that the laws may be so made as to grade the compensation of officers in proportion to the population and the necessary services required.

NO. 6.

Amend section 1 of the 7th article to read: Section 1. The judicial power of the state shall be vested in a supreme court, circuit court, and such other courts as the general assembly may establish.

NO. 9.

Strike out all the sections of the 13th article, and in lieu thereof insert the following: Section 1. No political or municipal corporation, in this state, shall ever become indebted, in any manner or for any purpose, to any amount, in the aggregate, exceeding two per centum on the value of taxable property within such corporation, to be ascertained by the last assessment, for state and county taxes, previous to the incurring of such indebtedness, and all bonds or obligations, in excess of such amount, given by such corporations, shall be void: Provided, That in time of war, foreign invasion, or other great public calamity, on petition of a majority of the property owners, in number and value, within the limits of such corportion, the public authorities, in their discretion, may incur obligations necessary for the public protection and defense, to such an amount as may be requested in such petition.

Newville High School.

The school at this place will open in the spring with the following programme:

We will have three departments in our school, viz: primary, teachers' and advanced. The primary department explains itself. The teachers' department will complete the eight common school branches. Thorough instruction and drill will be given in them, so that any one going through this department will be prepared to teach in the common schools. This will be one of the chief features.

The advanced department will contain a three-years course. The first two years will entitle to a certificate and enable the student to enter the freshman class of any college. The special year will go beyond that and be for any who desire to take it. The following will be the three-years course:

Court.

Monday—No court.

Tuesday—Grand jury appeared and were empaneled by Judge Tousley, and are now at work. The docket was then called by Judge Tousley, and some defaults and rules to answer were taken.

Wednesday—Judge Tousley being in very poor health and therefore unable to hold court, appointed Judge Carpenter, of Garrett, to hold court. Judge Tousley went home on the afternoon train, leaving Judge Carpenter on the bench. From the way he makes things move and dispatches business, convinces us that there is some mighty good judge timber in DeKalb county, that has heretofore been undiscovered. The day was mainly taken up in hearing motions and doing exparte business.

The Concert.

Ensley's hall was well filled with the elite of the city Tuesday evening to hear the Corunna Cornet band display their talent in the concert line. The overture "Fairies' Moonlight Revels" by the band was simply immense and each piece following was amusing and pleasing with the exception of "Lafe Miller's Favorite." Billy Wallace, the funny man, in the garb of an Englishman and a Dutchman, was appreciated by all. Misses Minnie Britton and Metz did splendidly in entertaining the audience with songs, etc. The whole performance was entirely satisfactory and our citizens will be glad to have them return at any time in the future. The proceeds amounted to $40 50, plainly showing that our citizens do well to encourage home entertainments.

Surprise Party.

EDITORS COURIER.—A very merry party assembled at the residence of J. Swisher, two miles south of Auburn, giving Mr. S. and his lady a pleasant surprise. It was indeed a surprise as Mr. S. was at work in the woods and Mrs. S. was busily engaged at the weekly washing, although we were met with a hearty welcome, and entertained with songs, accompanied with the organ, by Mrs. Jones, Miss Laura Swisher, Mr. B. Grube and others. Mr. Nicholas Ensley, of Auburn, delivered the presentation speech in a very appropriate manner. There was a great many presents, some very useful and valuable. We then sat down to a most bountiful dinner, gotten up by the neighbors and friends with the assistance of the hostess, which was partaken of with a relish by all present. Those comprising the assembled guests were Nicholas Ensley and lady, James Potter and lady, John Moor and lady, George Hamilton and lady, John Hamilton and lady James Provines and lady, Frank Hoff and lady, John Sugars and lady, Chas. Cool and lady, Philip Grube and lady, Byron Grube and lady, Sidney Jones and lady, Samuel George and lady, Jno Neff and lady, Miss D. Waters, George Nirider, George Gootschius, Philip Noel Isaac Ditmar, M. Swisher and Wm. Jackson. We are happy to say that Mr and Mrs. Swisher are good citizens, highly esteemed by their neighbors and have many friends, and we hope they may live long to enjoy many such good associations.

—Cal. Houser informs our "devil" that he can learn the printers trade in two months. Fellows of this turn of mind generally work two years before they can set up a line of quads correctly.

—The ground was frozen to the depth of about three feet, last week. The funeral of Mrs. J. Pearce had to be postponed one day longer on account of not getting the grave dug in time.

—To-morrow Mr. Garfield will be inaugerated as president of the United States, and Mr. Hayes will make away with himself—not suicide—and the country will, once more, have a legal president.

—W. H. Kiblinger & Co's. is headquarters for buggy-wheels, springs, and axles. 9tf

—Rev. Thomas Doggett will preach in the Presbyterian church next sabbath morning and evening. Mr. Doggett was formerly president of one of the prominent colleges of Ohio, but is now pastor of the Presbyterian church at Bryan.

—J. M. Brumback, administrator of the estate of the late Geo. Slayman, will, on Saturday, March 26, offer for sale at public auction, a large amount of valuable personal property. See advertisement in another column of this paper.

—The Corunna band will give a concert next Saturday evening at Garrett, and the citizens there can depend upon a first-class musical concert. Their programme is arranged to please all and we hope the citizens will give them a hearty welcome.

—Charles Baudy, living three miles west of Butler, assisted by E. A. Griffin, hauled a burr oak log off of the land owned by the former, to the mill of Grinder & Heffelfinger, a distance of 22 miles, the log being 12 feet long and scaling 1,620 feet.

—The Press says: "Let us leave politics out of the question in voting on the constitutional amendments," and then asks everybody to vote for them. That reminds us of the boy who wanted his little brother's skates. "Johnny let me have the skates all the time and you can take them afterwards."

—The dance at the Stamets House, Auburn Junction, was a success; one hundred and two persons sat down to supper. Ladies and gentlemen from all the surrounding towns were present, including a few from Mansfield, Ohio, Columbia City, Angola and Hudson. The proprietor expresses himself as being well pleased at the order and good breeding shown by all present.

—Here is a small dose for the boys, to be taken every morning after breakfast: "Don't quit hitching your sleds to wagons and sleighs. Go it while you can. Have fun in youth. You may die after a time, and then you will be cut off. Hitch on. There is fun in it, and possibly an item for the printer, and a job for the doctors. But that's nothing. Your father can stand it if he has to."

—We have information, that to us, seems reliable, that Judge Best, A. J. Sinclair, Ed. Campbell, Wm. Kennedy and C. M. Phillips each with a dog and gun chased, wounded, maimed, beat, bruised and finally killed a blind fox last week, and got home the same day. The same informant says, that on the way home, some member of the party committed an assault and battery on the dog of one, Daniel Krum.

—It will soon be the time of year for the practice of swinging on the gate to begin. Then Augustus will tell his sweetheart what a soft blue eye she has, what a symetrical form she is possessed of, and give her "taffy" enough in one hour to supply a chopping bee. Love, what a wonderful disease it is; it must run its wayward and inconstant course like any other kind of fever, and the old man would make money to let them have the parlor, and save the wear and tear of those gate hinges.

—Marshal Hoover, of Waterloo, feels justly aggrieved at the impertinent article which the Press of last week copied from the Butler Record. He pronounces the statement of the Record false in every particular, and we believe him, the Record to the contrary notwithstanding. What good reason the Press had for giving such a thing publicity, is hard to imagine. Brother Baxter has for some time past been dealing out scraps of pity over our unfortunate lack of "experience." Now the COURIER wishes to make the statement that our "experience" has always been averse to publishing scurrilous articles of any kind, about any one, much less would we allow an remarks alluding, even lightly, to a lady so zealous in the cause of religion and so pure in her character as the one so flippantly alluded to in the two "senior" papers of the county. When editors learn how ungentlemanly, and how disagreeable to the better portion of the community such articles are, perhaps their "experience" will be sufficiently valuable to peddle out to their fellow-publishers, and not till then.

Obituary.

Thomas Baldock was born August 11, 1819, at Hurst Green, in the county of Sussex, England, and died of typhoid pneumonia, after a short illness, at his residence in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, on Wednesday, February 23, 1881, aged 62 years, 6 months and 12 days. Brother Baldock joined the Baptist church in the winter of 1876, and from the time of his baptism, to the time of his death, was faithful in the performance of every known duty. He was an honest and exemplary member of the church, and his loss is deeply regretted by all who knew him. His funeral was largely attended, the sermon being preached by Rev. P. J. Ward, whose subject was "The Dying Hour." Mr. Baldock leaves three sons and four daughters to mourn their loss.

—Billy Sherlock and Hi. Hasley "pulled coats" Tuesday night to settle an old grudge, but they did'nt toe the crack. The sand was there but the by standers chipped in and the bloody affray was stopped.

Special Examination.

There will be a special examination of teachers at Waterloo, on Saturday, March 19th, and at Butler, Saturday April 2nd.

W. H. McINTOSH, Co. Supt.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to return our thanks to our many friends at Cedar Creek chapel, for the very large donation given us by them, amounting to about seventy dollars, thirty of which were in cash.

Concert Notes.

—The curtain puller needs practice.

Lafe Miller's Favorite was welcomed by all.

Calkin Bros. gave a cornet duett that took well.

The drum solo by Harvey Knour tickled the boys.

J. Wallace Dawson appeared several times too often.

The "Skidmore Guards" pleased the juvenile part of the audience.

Marshal Scott, Frank Griswold and Lafe Miller were the happiest men in the hall.

Lots of the boys were there, but the girls were scarce. The admission fee was too high.

The Auburn band played a piece of music to their credit just before the opening of the show.

—The Corunna boys see our girls safely home to and from public entertainments. Why is it thus?

—The song entitled, "Oh! Let Me Dream" ought not to have been molested. Dreams are delightful.

Our devil found a ticket for the concert, Wednesday morning, which the loser can have by paying for this notice. The notice is worth a quarter.

St. Joe.

—Waters are again high.

—O. H. paid his rent last week.

—J. W. Dills and lady were away on a visit during last week.

—Mark Barney is waiting for some delinquents to put in an appearance.

—Frank Hart and family returned from Ohio last week, after an extended visit.

—Elliott Fales has been on the sick list for several days, but is now able to attend to his store.

—Morris Headly has been confined to the house for several days with an affection of the lungs.

—Mr. Boyle, who has been in the jewelry business here for some time, will remove to Butler in a short time.

—Will some one tell who appropriated J. W. D's. old broom. One he had to sweep off the piles of wood. J. W. thinks it must have been some Orthodox stump speaker.

—It is estimated that at least thirty buildings will be erected this summer in St. Joe, several fine buildings are already under construction. The Baker Bros., of Concord, will build the residence of Mr. Grill.

—Frank Draggoo, of Concord, will take up his abode with the good people of St. Joe. Frank has come to the conclusion that the railroad will never do anything for Concord, and will leave that suburb for the city proper.

Waterloo.

—New firm—Day & Brother.

—Dr. Winslow is worse again.

—J. G. Johnson was home last week.

—S. J. Locke has been quite sick for the past week.

—Several pieces of property are about to change.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Rorabaugh died Sunday morning. See notice elsewhere.

—Joseph Boyer is still lying quite low, at his home in Franklin township.

—Services at the Presbyterian church next Sunday, at 8 o'clock p. m.

—Meetings at the U. B. church are still in progress. Thirty-six have united with the church up to date.

—H. E Trout has purchased Mr. Brand's share of the livery business and will conduct the business alone.

—Even the boys who work on the COURIER, are getting popular. Ask some of the Waterloo girls about it.

—H. T. Smith fell on the ice one day last week, and, as a result, is under the care of Drs. Chamberlain and Stough.

—The boys in Kahn's store sometimes find it necessary to talk a little loud, when they have a "fur" customer.

—E. R. Blattner, formerly of this place, but now located at Toledo, was here last week with his family, attending the funeral of Mrs. Rorabaugh.

—H. T. Smith is now sole proprietor of the store heretofore carried on under the firm name of Smith & Patterson, Wm. Patterson having retired.

—The young ladies of the Presbyterian church, will give an oyster supper at the church on Friday evening, March 4th. Price 25 cents. We hope they will be properly encouraged in this, their first effort, as it is proposed to arrange for similiar entertainments in the future.

NOTICE TO Contractors and Builders!

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at the Recorder's office, in the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Ind., until 12 o'clock m.

MONDAY, MARCH 21, 1881,

for furnishing all the materials and labor (excepting as hereinafter named) required for the rebuilding of the Auburn highschool building, in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, which was consumed by fire on the 30th day of November, 1880; said high school building to be completed according to the plans and specifications for the same, furnished by L. D. Grovesnor, architect, of Jackson, Michigan, and which will be on file Tuesday, March 8, 1881, in the Recorder's office in the said town of Auburn, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, and open to the inspection of bidders.

Bids will be received for the work as a whole, with and without a hall in the roof of said building according to plans and specifications on file aforesaid; also separate bids will be entertained for the stone work, for the brick work for the carpenter work, for galvanized iron work, for tin work, for the slating of roof, plastering and painting.

All the work that is to be done cannot be definitely enumerated in this notice. But the bids must be for all work and material required to complete said house according to the plans and specifications aforesaid, consisting of stone work, brick work, carpenter work, galvanized iron work, tin work slating of roof, plastering and painting, except about 300,000 brick and the stone foundation of the building burned as aforesaid, window-sills, water-tables, stone for door steps, eight large outside swinging door hinges, sash weights, etc. of burned building now on hand and on the grounds. Said work to be completed on or before the first day of September, 1881.

All bids to be accompanied by a satisfactory bond in a penal sum to be fixed by the board of school trustees of said town of Auburn, state of Indiana, and at least one of the sureties on said bond to be a resident of DeKalb county; and a certificate from the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which the other sureties reside, that the same are good and sufficient beyond a doubt, as provided for in section 1 and 2 of "an act entitled an act to indemnify counties against loss in certain cases and to protect laborers, material men and others from loss by others' contracting for public buildings and work," approved March 14, 1877, chapter 9, page 29. Laws of the state of Indiana, passed at the special session of the general assembly, begun on the 8th day of March, 1877.

Estimates will be made monthly on finished work, and payments made for same less 10 per cent., and said estimates will be paid according to contract.

The board of school trustees reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the board of school trustees.

WHERE IS YESTERDAY.

Mother! some things I want to know,
Which puzzle and confuse me so.
To-day is present, so you say;
But tell me, where is yesterday?

I did not see it as it went;
I only know how it was spent—
In play, and pleasure, through the rain;
Then why won't it come back again?

To-day the sun shines bright and clear;
But then, to-morrow's drawing near.
To-day—oh, do not go away!
And vanish like dear yesterday.

'Tis when the sun and all the light
Have gone, and darkness brings the night,
It seems to me, you steal away,
And change your name to yesterday.

And will all time be just the same?
To-day—the only name remains?
And shall I always have to say,
To-morrow you'll be yesterday?

I wonder, when we go to heaven,
If there a record will be given
Of all our thoughts and all our ways
Writ on the face of yesterdays!

If so, I pray God grant to me
That mine a noble life may be;
For then, I'll greet with joyous gaze
The dear, lost face of—yesterdays.

CAPTURED BY NAGAS.

In 1845 there were no steamers plying up the Brahmaputra river, so, after reaching Calcutta, we had the prospect of a three-months' voyage in boats. I was assured I should find it a monotonous journey; and, notwithstanding the many and varied scenes which we daily witnessed, I must own I was heartily glad when we arrived at Nazareh, the headquarters of the Assam Tea Company. Here we were hospitably entertained by the manager and officers of the company, and after a few days' rest left for our home, a five-days' journey, on elephants. We arrived safely at our destination not much the worse for our trip, but much shaken by the jolting of the elephants, and much bitten by the mosquitoes on the way.

I soon learned Bengalee and Assamese, but, although the Nagas often paid us visits, and were apparently the best of friends, I had not succeeded in learning any of their language, nor did I acquire any confidence in them; but we lived, as we thought, in perfect security, and, although we heard of occasional raids by the hill tribes, they were not in our direction. The Nagas are a sturdy, ugly, treacherous, but withal brave race, much given to head-hunting, like most of the tribes on our northeastern frontier; but they had been severely handled by our troops not long before, and it was thought they had settled down into peaceable folks.

Things went on quietly enough till November, 1847. My husband had just left for a few days on one of his half-yearly journeys. I had been very busy all day; the season was an unusually sickly one, and our hospital was full of sick women and children, on whom I had been attending all day; and I was thoroughly tired before I retired to rest. I had noticed many Nagas, unaccompanied by any of their women, go past our lines that day; and, though I had been told it was a bad sign when these savages came down into the plains alone, I never gave it a thought; and, after seeing everything made fast, I went to bed. I had not been asleep for more than an hour or two when I was awakened by the most fearful yells and screams of men, women and children, together with the glare of our tea-houses and coolie-lines on fire! I had just time to spring out of bed and put on a few clothes, when our own bungalow was surrounded by a band of savages, armed with spears and clubs, and carrying torches, which they threw on our roof. The place was instantaneously in flames; and, to escape suffocation, I rushed out as I was, and was immediately felled to the ground and lay insensible for some time. When I recovered, I found myself pinioned, while all around me was desolation. Our late home was a mass of charred and smoking ruins; and oh! horror of horrors, a pile of heads of men, women and children were lying close by me! The savages were hunting about for more victims. Many of them were drunk and covered with blood; and every now and then an agonizing scream and an exultant laugh would proclaim that some wretch had been but too successful in his search, and that another poor coolie had been discovered and sacrificed.

This dreadful scene lasted fully two hours, when the Nagas seemed satisfied that there were no more victims alive, and gathered together round where I lay, and apparently discussed what my fate was to be. Some were evidently clamorous for my head; others—and among them I fancied were some who had been in the habit of visiting us—were more humanely inclined, and at one time I thought it would end in a fight between the two factions. But another and stronger party, headed by a chief whom I recognized as one to whom my husband had shown much kindness, and whose child had been nursed by me through a dangerous illness, at once decided my fate by ordering a stretcher to be prepared, on which I was placed and carried by two men along the jungle path leading to the mountains. My head was fearfully swollen from the blow I had received; I suffered tortures from racking pains in the head, and also from cold, for I was but partially dressed, and the weather in Assam, especially in the hilly districts, is bitterly cold from November until the middle of February. As if my other miseries were not enough, I was almost eaten alive by mosquitoes, and every now and then horrid tree leeches would fall down upon me as we brushed through the jungle, immediately fasten on me and suck away till from repletion they fell off. We moved at a rapid rate all the remainder of that night and till noon next day, when we halted for an hour by a stream, and where I must have again become insensible, for I remember nothing further till the starry sky above proclaimed night once more; but still our party hurried on, nor did we halt till close of daybreak.

As we wound around the hill, up a steep path, leading to a fortified village, the savages began to yell forth a chant; many of them danced and capered, while the women coo-cooed and clapped their hands, bowing their heads to the ground as we passed by; and amidst the yelling of men, women and children, the beating of tom-toms, gongs and instruments resembling those called cholera horns in India, we entered the stockade by a narrow doorway. The stockade itself was nearly a square, each face about 175 yards long. On three sides there were houses, built in long lines, and well raised off the ground, and the fourth side, the only one apparently approachable by an enemy, was strongly fortified, and the space in front pangied. Pangies are bamboo spikes, hardened, sharpened and jagged, driven into the ground for some distance round every stockade, and covered over with fallen leaves. Often they are poisoned. They will go through the toughest sole, and once in the foot cannot be extracted; and if poisoned death follows in an hour or two. Hence they are greatly dreaded. Several gingalls were placed, and rude towers flanked the position, on which were collected huge stones, or rather rocks, ready to hurl down upon an invading foe. In the center of the stockade was a long pole, and arranged round it were human heads, beside those of gayals, buffaloes and deer; while tied tightly down to five pegs were as many gayals, which were forthwith slain.

Copious draughts of an intoxicating drink made of fermented rice were drunk. The women then formed in a ring, and danced round the pole to a slow measure, twice or thrice; then leaned down, with their heads bowed to the ground, while amidst a perfect fury of tom-toms and gongs the ceremony of flaying the slain cattle commenced. And after another march round the pole and a general chorus, a chief stepped to the front and made an oration, which was greatly applauded. The women danced round hand in hand, and, opening out into two parties, allowed the men with the gayals' heads to enter, and closed up the space behind them. The five heads were placed equidistant from one another and from the pole; both men and women stepped over them with a mincing gait, clapping their hands and keeping time to the rude music; salaaming at the same time to the human heads. They did this twice; then joining hands, men in the inner ring and women in the outer, danced round furiously, and suddenly broke off into small parties; and while the warriors, weary from their long and hurried journey, retired to rest, the women and those who had not joined in the foray cut up the gayals and prepared the evening feast.

The foregoing, which is but a faint description of the frightful and disgusting scene, was not over till past noon. I had been apparently forgotten while it lasted. I lay tied to the stretcher, without the least shelter from the sun, a silent and horrified spectator of this shocking spectacle. The sun had raised blisters over my face, neck and shoulders. I was taken to the chief's house and liberated; but, being unable to move, I was carried into a corner and there deposited, where I soon became unconscious; raging fever set in, and all I remembered for some time was incessant drumming, and night made hideous with debauchery and diabolical rites and noises; but whether it was really so I cannot state positively, for I was light-headed many days; and when I recovered sufficiently to notice occurrences I had lost all reckoning, and knew neither the date of the month, nor the day of the week, nor the duration of my illness.

All this time I had never heard a word of my husband. I knew his indomitable character, and was sure he would not be satisfied with mere rumors or surmises, but would search for me till he ascertained beyond doubt whether I was dead or alive, and would rescue me or die in the attempt. I had now learned some of the Naga language, but did not let any of them know of my knowledge; and now and then I was cheered by hearing them say a force was advancing into the hills; but, alas! my exultation was short-lived, for the commandant, who was a very inefficient officer, allowed himself to be surprised and beaten back with severe loss; and, sad to say, among the heads brought in by the savages I recognized one as that of poor young S——, who had but lately joined the regiment, and who had been our guest but nine months before. On another occasion I recognized two brothers, tea-planters, who had lived about twenty miles from us, and who, it appears, had made a desperate resistance before being overpowered by numbers, and slain. Whenever the raiders returned, how my heart sank with dread, for I feared to find among their ghastly trophies the head of my dear husband.

I think the Nagas looked upon me as a harmless idiot, for they allowed me to wander about the stockade without hindrance; and I learned that, though apparently impregnable on three faces, yet a secret passage existed in the north face, by which they could retreat in case of need. My heart was aching to reach my husband, especially when I learned he was so near; so I determined to escape. I did not now refuse the food set apart for me, but for a week or ten days husbanded my strength, and ate and drank all they offered me. Buoyed up on hope, my health greatly improved and my strength came back rapidly. My own scanty clothes had worn off my back long ago, and I was now dressed like a Naga woman, with only a shirt and petticoat; I had neither shoes nor stockings, yet I made up my mind to try to escape directly the nights were sufficiently dark for that purpose; and I was further assisted by another orgie of the savages, who had again surprised a post and brought home more heads, and had another heavy drink and debauch.

While the deviltry was at its height, commending myself to an all-powerful Ruler, I stepped into the secret passage and fled, not only for my life, but for dear liberty, home and husband. I knew enough of Capt. B——'s character to be sure that, if I succeeded in reaching his camp, and he learned the secret of the passage by which I had escaped, he would be anxious to surprise the enemy's stronghold. I was doubtful whether my strength would enable me to reach his outposts, but I was sure I never could guide the troops back, even if I had the courage to return to such a detestable spot. So I took a bundle of cotton with me, and left a little here and there from the end of the secret passage to the main pathway, which led down the ghaut. Although the night was pitchy dark, I had no difficulty, once I was out of the secret passage, in finding the path down to the plains, and the distance between it and the stockade was barely a quarter of a mile. Where the path diverged I stuck a forked stick with a good handful of cotton in it, and pointing toward the direction to be taken. I knew wild beasts abounded in these jungles, but so joyous was I at the idea of escape I gave them no heed, but hurried down as fast as my unprotected feet would carry me. I had anticipated a good five hours' march; but imagine my delight when I was challenged by a Goorkha of the Third Light Infantry (now the Forty-fourth Light Infantry) before I had been two hours on the journey. I could have hugged the ugly but brave little soldier; but as I was, to all intents and purposes, a Naga in dress and dirt, he would not allow me to pass his post, and I was at a loss what to do, and all but crying, when I heard my own husband's voice asking what the row was about! Regardless of the sentry, I rushed forward, and, crying "Oh, Willie, don't you know me?" fell into my husband's arms, and barely escaped a thrust made at me by the honest little Goorkha, who thought I was some witch of a Naga intent on mischief.

It would be useless trying to describe the next few moments. Half laughing, half crying, I clung to my dear one, thankful to feel his protecting arm once more round me, and told him in a few words what I had suffered and how I had escaped. He thought the news so important that he urged me to see Capt. B—— at once, utterly unfit though I was to see any civilized being. He told me the information I could give might be the making of him and Capt. B——; that our garden was destroyed, and we all but penniless; and if he could render Government some important service he might get employment. So, for his dear sake, I instantly consented; and in a marvelously short time B—— was in our hut. I told him of the revelry in the enemy's camp, of the secret passage, and the means I had adopted of pointing out the route to it, and also of all the horrors I had witnessed. My transient strength had already been overtaxed. I was dead-beat, and my husband persuaded me to lie down, and in a few moments I was fast asleep, the first really refreshing and happy sleep I had had during the past six months.

No sooner was I asleep than my husband offered to lead the stormers—they were short of officers owing to sickness and casualties—and Capt. B—— decided to capture the enemy's post by a coup de main, and within half an hour 150 Goorkhas under Willie, with a reserve of another 150 under Capt. B—— himself, were en route. They found the fork stick as I had described; and the cotton scattered about led them direct to the secret passage, and they were inside the stockade before a single Naga suspected the presence of an enemy. The troops entered just before daybreak, when the savages were in their most profound sleep, and but few escaped the vengeance they so well merited. It appeared that Capt. B——, finding the Nagas slipping through his lines, owing to their extent, had drawn the cordon closer on the enemy, and I had thus fortunately found his outposts so much nearer than I had anticipated. Our loss was not severe—only a few men, but my poor husband was severely wounded; and when I awoke from nearly fifteen hours' sleep, and found him lying in the hut, a mass of bandages, and with scarcely strength to speak to me, I was nearly beside myself, and was very nearly upbraiding him for having left me and risked his life; but Capt. B—— came in and told me my husband had behaved in the most gallant manner and that he had recommended him for a commission.

Careful nursing soon brought Willie round; and when he was able to move we went to Seebsaugor, where, what with being with my husband, and seeing kindly European faces round me, and happiness instead of despair staring me in the face, I improved so much that in three months people declared I was as bonnie as before my misfortune.—Chambers' Journal.

Awful Mistakes.

An English gentleman of my acquaintance was invited to a (gentleman's) dinner-party in New York, at 3 o'clock, that early hour having been adopted to suit his convenience. He went, of course, as he would have done in London, in frock coat and black cravat, but was embarrassed by finding all others present in evening dress. Such dress would not be allowable in England at any company not expected to extend through the evening. It is not allowable here at afternoon receptions, though I observed that it was so used in some parts of America. Complaints are made that certain eminent Englishmen have appeared at companies in America without evening dress, and in some cases, no doubt, the complaints are just; but it is possible that in other cases the Englishmen were perplexed about the American hours. Even 6 o'clock might be a very dubious hour for dinner to an Englishman, who is in the habit of dining at 8. This may seem a trifling matter, but the respect due from the gentlemen of one nation to those of another is no trifling matter. And, by the way, now that the social sanctity of the evening dress is admitted, is it quite the right thing for Americans to wear white cravats in the morning, and along the streets? One newly arrived from Europe might wonder at the number of clergymen in America. Grant that the little white tie is cheap, light and cool, might it not be colored, if only not to mislead the foreigner? Even in America the secularity of the white cravat appears not to be universally appreciated. I heard in Philadelphia that a gentleman with a white tie having appeared at the gate of Girard College, was refused admission, in pursuance of the fundamental law of that institution forbidding the entrance of clergymen. The irate applicant, however, having exclaimed "Go to hell with your old college," the gates were at once thrown open and he was politely invited to enter.—M. D. Conway's London Letter.

The Lily.

With the Chinese, the lily is the national flower, and many superstitions attach to it. Should it blossom upon New Year's day it is regarded as a most happy omen, presaging the best of luck to the fortunate owner of the plant. For this reason a good deal of care is bestowed upon the lily by the Chinamen, in the hope that it may put forth its flower upon the morning of the anniversary. The Chinese lily is different from any other variety. It is grown by placing the bulb on bits of window glass, stone and China, and giving it a liberal supply of water. The flower is white, with a gold-colored center, something between a daisy and a narcissus. Its fragrance is delightful.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

ONE-THIRD of all the gold mined goes to wear and tear, one-third into circulation, and one-third into the arts and manufactures.

AT a Russian hotel you are obliged to stipulate for bed-linen, pillows, blankets and towels, or pay extra for them, as the landlord assumes that you carry these articles with you.

TO MAKE shoe-pegs enough for American use there are consumed annually 100,000 cords of timber, and to make lucifer matches, 300,000 cubic feet of the best pine timber are required every year. Lasts and boot-trees take 500,000 cords of birch, beech and maple, and the handles of tools 500,000 more.

IT has been observed that during severe thunder-storms the lightning has never done damage in large cities. It is believed that the iron which enters so largely into the construction of cities—in buildings, railroads, telegraph lines, etc.—so completely dissipates the electric fluid, as it approaches the earth, that it is rendered harmless.

IN 1769, M. Cugnot, a Frenchman, constructed a locomotive steam engine designed for use on common roads. It ran on three wheels, and was moved by the impulsion of two single-acting cylinders, the pistons of which acted alternately on the single front wheel. This machine would travel at the rate of two or three miles an hour, and would carry four persons, but the boiler was so small that it was necessary to stop about once in twelve or fifteen minutes to get up steam.

A COUNTERPART of Dickens' Miss Havisham, in "Great Expectations," lived a few years ago at Louisville, Ky. She was a rich woman of 70 years, living all alone in a darkened house, which she never left, except a few times to attend church, and then was closely veiled and muffled. She never allowed an article of furniture to be moved, and lived in constant dread of fire, fearing the publicity that would result from it.

THE mica mines of North Carolina have been worked only ten years, but shafts, cuts and debris of supposed prehistoric mining have been discovered, and there is some debate as to whether these early workmen were the mound-builders or Europeans. The Cherokee Indians have a tradition that white men worked these mines long ago, carrying away the white metal mined during the summer on mules. An ax, wedge and other wrought-iron tools lately found are also thought to confirm the notion that Europeans opened the mines.

BYRON, throughout his life, had a profound repugnance to being bled. When he was on his death-bed his physicians proposed phlebotomy, but Byron refused to allow it, combating the quackeries of his medical advisers with the logic of common sense and experience. But at last, worn out by the persistent importunities of the doctors, he extended his arm and angrily exclaimed: "There, you —— butchers, since you will have it, take as much blood as you like, and have done with it." Repeated bleeding hastened his death.

THE real name of Voltaire, the French philosopher and poet, was Francois Marie Arouet. The assuming of the name Voltaire was long a puzzle to his biographers, but within a few years it has been discovered to be simply an anagram, or transposition of Arouet, l. j.; the letters l. j. standing for le jeune, or junior. The letters u and v were formerly regarded as the same character, and were freely interchanged in writing and printing. So also i and j were used indiscriminately, the one for the other. Deaf and Dumb Barbers.

A man dressed in a thin summer woolen suit and a dilapidated straw hat entered our sanctum.

"Sir," he said, "you see before you a reminder of the summer's sun, so to speak. I am not from the tropics, neither am I dressed for enjoying all the comforts of a trip in search of the North pole. Excuse me, no North pole for me," and his teeth chattered, while a quiver of icy chilliness seemed to run across his whole frame.

"Are you cold?" we asked. "If so, walk up by the stove and get warm."

"No, sir, no! warm as the sportive African who swings his juvenile upon the equatorial line. I am needy, busted, broke, sir. You see before you a speculator whose cart is keeled over and broken, with the horses on a run so far ahead a greased streak of lightning cannot overtake 'em. Four months since I started a barber shop. Now, thinks I, I'll strike a new beat. So I just goes and hires four deaf and dumb tonsorial artists and then put up notices that customers coming to my shop would have a quiet shave by deaf and dumb barbers and no questions asked. The thing took on the start, but, when the confounded barbers pulled their slates and began writing out the usual questions, blow me if I didn't discover that I was a ruined man. Yes, sir, barbers is barbers; and, when I closed my shop, busted up and started on a tramp, I just says to myself it's no use. If dead men could be learned to handle the razor over a man's face, the blamed things would have spiritual mejiums asking their victims the same old line of questions—Ah, thank yer, sir; ta-ta. With this dime I'll send a counter-irritant down my throat that'll knock the thinness out of this summer suit and give my stomach a cleaner shave than any barber can." And, as the shattered vase retired, the perfume of the roses remained in the sanctum until an open window restored the natural tone of the atmosphere.—Whitehall Times.

Taking Advantage of Nature.

An ingenious application of expansion and contraction in metals was made use of, in France, and has frequently been taken advantage of since. The walls of a large building in Paris were observed to be giving way by bulging outward, and the problem was to bring them back to their vertical position. For this purpose a number of bars of iron having screws and nuts on each end were let through the opposite walls and across the intervening space between them. The nuts and screwed portion of the bars were outside. The bars were now heated by a number of lamps suspended below them until they had expanded as much as possible, and the nuts screwed up against the outsides of the two opposite walls. The lamps were next removed, when the heated bars, in cooling, gradually contracted in length, bringing the walls very gently, but with irresistible force, into their normal position.—Scientific American.

A Remarkable Calculation.

A curious illustration has been afforded by the New York Journal of Commerce. It takes up an utterance of the Rev. Adriondack Murray, who said in a recent lecture:

"Now the population of the earth is 1,000,000,000, and a generation dies every thirty years. In every thirty years, then, 1,000,000,000 human beings go out of the world and 1,000,000,000 come in. Forty years ago the church taught that the world was 6,000 years old. She doesn't to-day pretend to guess within 100,000 years how old the world is. Very well. What has been the population of the world since the race began? Who can estimate the number? By what arithmetic shall you compute the swarming millions? Take the globe and flatten it into a vast plain, 24,000 by twenty-four, and would it accommodate but a fraction of the human beings that have lived upon its surface? Where is the locality of the judgment to be, then? Can it have a locality?"

To this the Journal replies: "Now make the widest conceivable estimates. Suppose that the human race has existed on this earth 100,000 years, that the population has never from the first day been smaller than this estimate for the present time—namely, 1,000,000,000. For the sake of easy calculation, instead of the estimate of thirty years to a generation, call it three generations to a century. There will appear to have been 3,000 generations of 1,000,000,000 each, who, being assembled, require standing room. For a crowded meeting of men, women, and children, it would be ample estimate to give each two square feet of room. A square mile contains, in round numbers, 25,000,000 square feet, and 12,500,000 persons could stand on it. Therefore, eighty square miles would hold a generation, and 3,000 times that space would hold the population of 100,000 years. That is to say, 240,000 square miles would contain them, and, gathered in a parallelogram, they would stand in a space 600 miles long by 400 broad. They could easily be accommodated in one or two of our States.

"Dead and buried, side by side, they would require five times their standing space, or (say) 1,200,000 square miles, and the United States has ample wild lands, as yet unwanted and unoccupied, to give them a cemetery. If any one wishes he may estimate how many thousand years of generations could find graves in this country without crowding each other. Whoever will may imagine the population assembled in a circle, or in a vast theater, with floor above floor, each floor diminishing the surface area of the building. It will do people of vivid imaginations good to reduce such imaginations to the facts of figures, and any school girl can do it."

Ancient Anatomists.

The ancient anatomist must have felt a zeal for the science which makes the imagination shudder. It reached to nothing less than dissecting men alive; for this purpose the bodies of criminals were devoted. Herophilus, a Greek physician of Chalcedon, who flourished 570 years before the Christian era, is said to have been one of the first who dissected human bodies. Tertullian says he dissected them alive; but Cocchi, who published a dissertation in 1736, denies that he was guilty of this barbarity. Herophilus, by an unprecedented spirit of investigation, discovered, as some report, the lacteals, the nerves, with their various uses, the pulse, etc., and gave to the different parts of the human frame the names which they still bear.

The dissection of dead bodies was, at no very late period, looked upon as sacrilege; and the Emperor Charles V. ordered a consultation of the theologians of Salamanca to determine whether, in point of conscience, a body might be dissected in order to obtain a knowledge of its structure.

In the month of January, 1474, the physicians and surgeons of Paris represented to Louis XI. that several persons of condition were afflicted with the stone, colic, pains and stitches in the side; that it would be proper to inspect the parts where these disorders were engendered; that the greatest light they could receive would be from performing an operation on a living man, and therefore they begged that a francarcher, condemned to be hanged for a robbery, who was afflicted with these complaints, should be delivered up to them. Their petition was granted, and the operation, the first in lithotomy ever made, was publicly performed in St. Severin's churchyard. After the operators had examined and made their experiment, the bowels were replaced in the body, which was sewed up, and so well dressed that in a fortnight's time the man was cured and pardoned of his crimes.

Riding Healthful.

A correspondent in the Household says: I have a friend who, among other luxuries, possesses a carriage, and many an invalid has been gladened and benefited by a ride. Last spring my friend discovered a lady who from long illness and sorrow was so reduced in strength that it was with the greatest exertion she could walk across her room. She invited her to ride, but the invalid declined, fearing she was not strong enough to endure the fatigue; but on consulting her physician he decided that it was just what she needed and would do her more good than medicine. The first ride was but a very short one, and on the street railway, to avoid jolting. When left at her door she grasped my friend's hand, while the tears filled her eyes, and said: "If this does not kill me how I shall bless you." Well, it did not even hurt her, and the rides were continued every four days for three months, when the invalid was entirely recovered and could and did walk three miles.

GEORGE ELIOT did not care a great deal for jokes, but she relished one that referred to one of her own volumes. It is the well-known story about an ignorant English bookseller who put up the notice: "Mill on the Floss; ditto on Political Economy."

A LOOK AHEAD,

When the United States Will Be in Half a Century More;

(From the Detroit Free Press.)

The center of population in the United States has, during the last ten years, shifted from Columbus, Ohio, to the Indiana boundary line; in a few decades more it will reach the Mississippi river. At the rate of increase prevailing during the present century, the country will, in 1920, contain between 150,000,000 and 160,000,000. This is only forty years hence, a space easily grasped by those who can remember "the Harrison Presidential campaign." Ten or twelve years more, equal to a look backward as far as the days of Jackson, nullification and the United States Bank, the country will be found to contain 200,000,000—equal to the present population of Europe exclusive of Russia, Austria and Turkey.

It is hard to imagine the changes in the social and commercial phases of the country which this population implies; the immense domestic trade, the large interior cities—Chicago larger than New York or Philadelphia, Cincinnati and St. Louis than Brooklyn, Boston and Baltimore; Cleveland, Detroit and cities of that grade containing 500,000 of people. Already the New England and Middle States are falling behind the average rate of growth, and they will tend more and more to the stationary point, when their annual increase will be insignificant.

Under these circumstances, there is every reason to suppose that there will grow up in this central portion an immense city, perhaps more than one, which will be the great metropolis and distributing point of the continent. It may be Chicago. It may be, also, Kansas City, or some other point farther West. For, when this country contains 200,000,000 of people, certainly when east of the Mississippi it begins to approach the density of European population, its domestic commerce will be more important than its foreign commerce, and its interior cities more important than its seaports. The metropolis will not be New York, but the central point of distribution and exchange. This is true of nearly every country and its metropolis the world over, and there is no good reason for doubting that it will prove true of the United States. London, Paris, Rome, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid, Pekin, in modern days, Athens, Babylon, Bagdad, Palmyra, in ancient times, are, or were, all interior cities. It will attract, as they have attracted, the swarming multitude, the intelligent, the energetic, the pleasure loving, the adventurers from the immense reservoir of populations around it. It may be less cosmopolitan, but it will be more American than the seaport cities, just as Paris is the most distinctively national, Marseilles one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world. New York socially, Boston intellectually, are already dominated to some extent by foreign influences, and are not likely to become less so in the future. They are already settling down into hard, fixed modes of thought and life.

The newspaper press of the different kinds of cities in the United States begins to faintly prophesy their respective tendencies. The press of Boston and New York is comparatively provincial. Almost wholly in its news, and mainly in its comments, it scarcely recognizes the existence of any interest west of the Alleghenies. If there is any striking characteristic in the New York press at all, its management and tone partake of the English type. On the other hand, the Chicago papers show on their very face that they are published at a central point. Every point of the compass is fully represented. Their drag-net of enterprise is thrown over the whole continent. This will be the law of their future growth, and the law of the future growth of Chicago or whatever the great central metropolis may be. It is to be a vitalized, energetic, distinctively continental center of commerce, art, literature and amusement, and will suck into its whirling current of business and pleasure the teeming millions which will then swarm in the great central States of the Union.

A Remarkable Monument.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post says Baltimore has what no other city in the world, save Genoa, possesses—a monument to Christopher Columbus; and although the monument was built almost a century ago, very few Baltimoreans know of its existence. It is on the property known as "Belmont," the old country residence of the elder Barnum, of hotel fame, and within a stone's throw of the fortifications built by General Butler for the defense of Baltimore in 1861. There seems to be nothing accurate as yet known about it, except that the property from 1789 until 1796 was owned and occupied by the first French Consul to this country—Charles Francis Adrian de Paulmier, Chevalier d'amour. The monument, which is a substantial and well-proportioned shaft fifty feet in height, is built of brick, covered with a rough coat of plaster, and is in an excellent state of preservation, except where the cement has been chipped off by visitors. On one side of the base is a marble tablet with this inscription:

COLUMBUS,
Oct XII
MDCCVIIIC.

Which means 1792, three hundred years after Columbus sighted America. On two other sides of the base are places left for tablets, which have never been inserted. The legend is that the French Consul built this monument at an expense of £800, the bricks for it having been imported. It has long been current among the poor people of the neighborhood that the monument was erected to the memory of a favorite horse, but it is not very likely that a man would be quite so eccentric as to expend $4,000 for such a purpose.

Big Words.

Big words are great favorites with people of small ideas and weak conceptions. They are sometimes employed by men of mind, when they wish to use language that may the best conceal their thoughts. With few exceptions, however, illiterate and half-educated persons use more "big words" than people of thorough education. It is a very common, but egregious mistake, to suppose that the long words are more genteel than the short ones—just as the same sort of people imagine that high colors and flashy figures improve the style of dress. They are the kind of folks who don't begin, but "commence." They don't live, but "reside." They don't go to bed, but mysteriously "retire." They don't eat and drink, but "partake" of "refreshments." They are never sick, but "extremely indisposed;" and instead of dying, at last they "decease." The strength of the English language is in the short words—chiefly monosyllables of Saxon derivation; and people who are in earnest seldom use any other. Love, hate, anger, grief and joy express themselves in short words and direct sentences; while cunning, falsehood and affectation delight in what Horace calls verba sesquipedalia—words "a foot and a half" long.

NO MORE GOSSIP.

[From the Indianapolis Daily Sentinel.]

If we are correctly informed, St. Jacobs Oil is now the usual tea-party topic in place of the former staple—free gossip. How wise and how much more beneficial!

Superstition.

Superstition has not only prevented mankind from attaining a superior eminence of happiness, but, what is more deplorable, it has added in a great degree to an already extensive catalogue of earthly miseries. It is not by the ignorant alone that superstitious beliefs are entertained, but by my eminent men of the past and present. Dr. Samuel Johnson was a firm believer in ghosts and second sight. Josephus, the great Jewish historian, relates that he witnessed the extraordinary sight of an evil spirit being induced to leave the body of an afflicted patient's nostril. James VI., who was noted for his intellectual attainments and theological learning, was a firm believer in witchcraft. So deep a hold did this absurd notion have on him that he published a work upholding this doctrine, and actually persecuted all who opposed the belief. Even Martin Luther, the sturdy old reformer, informs us that the devil appeared to him and so enraged him that he threw a heavy inkstand at him whereupon the father of all evil vanished. Socrates, the sublimest character in profane history, firmly believed that he was actuated and directed by a demon! Blackstone, the author of the incomparable commentaries on the laws of England, was an undoubted believer in witchcraft. This list of superstitious votaries could be indefinitely extended, but enough has been said upon the subject.

Some of the ancient superstitions are very pleasing, and in the highest degree poetic. There is a superstitious belief prevalent in the East that eclipses of the moon are caused by a demon who, out of the malice of his nature, afflicts the queen of the stars. And on these occasions the inhabitants leave their dwellings, and, by pounding upon pans and pots, and shouting and discharging firearms, endeavoring to frighten the monster away from his work of destruction.

A popular belief is that the sound produced by a little insect known as a "death watch" protends the death of some relative or friend. That the noise made by this little creature resembles the ticking of a watch is undisputed, but that it in any wise foretells the dissolution of a human being is absurd. Observation has established the fact that these little insects infest decaying timber and posts, and that the peculiar noise is caused by them in gnawing and boring through the rotten wood fibers in quest of food.

The howling of a homeless cur in the stillness of the night has caused more dread than would the roaring of a wild beast. And many who have braved the cannon's mouth will tremble at the breaking of a looking-glass.

The number thirteen is supposed by many to be unlucky, and if they find themselves one of a party of that number they will depart with haste. Our Saviour and his disciples were thirteen; the original States of the American Union were thirteen. Other instances could be cited to establish this principle, were it necessary.

Superstitious doctrines, countless in number, are founded on and magnified by an ignorance of the plainest truths of natural sience. If we remove the cause the effect will cease. Let more attention be given in the instruction of youth to the inculcation of the fundamental principles of the sciences, and less to mere ornamental studies, and the result will be advantageous to mankind.

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel.]

THAT wonderful remedy for rheumatism, St. Jacobs Oil, has been used by a large number of the people in this city, and with effect truly marvelous. Frequent reports are made where sufferers have been afforded relief, and the sale is growing largely. The fact that it is an external remedy commends it to many who would not otherwise think of going out of the beaten track to find a remedy.

A Disorderly Time.

"I want to make complaint against a disorderly house," exclaimed an excited individual, as he rushed up to a Detroit policeman.

"Where is it?"

"It's a saloon on the next block."

"What can you prove?"

"Prove? Why, I went there and asked for a drink."

"Well?"

"And I got it."

"Yes."

"But when I went to pay for it I found that I had lost my wallet. I told him I'd go out and borrow the money, but he got mad and went for me."

"Well, is that all your proof?"

"All? Not by a long shot! I've had my left eye disordered. I've had my front teeth disordered. My nose is disordered half an inch out of line, and this $24 suit of clothes wouldn't bring $3 at an auction. We disordered the stove and two chairs, and if you can't make a disorderly house out of all this you'd better get out of that uniform.

A Cross Baby.

Nothing is so conducive to a man's remaining a bachelor as stopping for one night at the house of a married friend and being kept awake for five or six hours by the crying of a cross baby. Jamie's Good-Night.

At a late hour the other night a poor old man, weak with hunger and stiff with cold, entered the Central Station to ask for lodgings. While he sat by the stove to get warm they heard him groan like one in distress, and the captain asked:

"Are you sick, or have you been hurt?"

"It is here," answered the old man as he touched his breast. "It all came back to me an hour ago as I passed a window and saw a bit of a boy in his night-gown. I would to God that I was dead!"

"What is it?" asked the captain as he sat down beside the man.

"It is the heart-ache—it is remorse," the old man answered. "I have had them gnawing away at my life for years. I have wanted to die—I have prayed for death—but life still clings to this poor old frame. I am old and friendless and worn out, and were some wheels to crush me it would be an act of mercy."

He wiped his eyes on his ragged sleeve, made a great effort to control his feelings, and went on:

"Forty years ago I had plenty. A wife sang in my home, and a young boy rode on my knee and filled the house with his shouts and laughter. I sought to be a good man and a kind father, and people called me such. One night I came home vexed, I found my boy ailing and that vexed me still more. I don't know what ailed me to act so that night, but it seemed as if everything went wrong. The child had a bed beside us, and every night since he had been able to speak, he had called to me before closing his eyes in sleep, 'good night, my pa!' Oh, sir, and I hear those words sounding in my ears every day and every hour, and they wring my old heart until I am faint."

For a moment he sobbed like a child, then he found voice to continue:

"God forgive me, but I was cross to the boy that night. When he called to me good night, I would not reply 'Good night, my pa!' he kept calling, and fiend that I was, I would make no answer. He must have thought me asleep, for he finally cuddled down with a sob in his throat. I wanted to get up and kiss him but I kept waiting, and waiting, and finally I fell asleep.

"Well?" queried the captain, as the silence grew long.

"When I awoke it was day. It was a shriek in my ears which broke my slumbers, and as I started up my poor wife called: 'Oh! Richard! Richard! our Jamie is dead in his bed!' It was so. He was dead and cold. There were tears on his pale face—the tears he had shed when he had called: 'Good night, my pa!' and I had refused to answer! I was dumb. Then remorse came and I was frantic. I did not know when they buried him, for I was under restraint as a lunatic. For five long years life was a dark midnight to me. When reason returned and I went forth into the world my wife slept beside Jamie, my home was gone, my friends had forgotton me and I had no mission in life but to suffer remorse. I cannot forget. It was almost a life time ago, but through the mist of years, across the valley of the past, from the little grave thousands of miles away, I hear the plaintive call as I heard it that night: 'Good night, my pa!' Send me to prison, to the poor-house, anywhere that I may halt long enough to die! I am an old wreck, and I care not how soon death drags me down."

He was tendered food, but he could not eat. He rocked his body to and fro and wept and sobbed, and by and by, when sleep came to him, they heard him whisper:

"Good night, my boy, good night, my Jamie!"—Detroit Free Press.

Fees of Doctors.

The fee of doctors is an item that very many persons are interested in just at present. We believe the schedule for visits is $3.00, which would tax a man confined to his bed for a year, and in need of a daily visit, over $1,000 a year for medical attendance alone! And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.—Post.

A Decidedly New Game at Cards.

A Paris correspondent gives this account of a pretty game of cards now fashionable in that city:

"The participants were young ladies and gentlemen who sat in equal numbers on either side of the table. The cards were dealt out to each, and one hand, like as in euchre, settled each wager. The wager played for in this game is that the lady or gentleman who gets the ace of hearts and can take a trick with it, or beat it with another card, has the option to kiss any lady or gentleman he or she may select. If a lady is the winner of the successful trick, this option may be used or not, as she elects and generally she does waive her right; but if a gentleman holds the lucky card, of course he invariably exercises his right. The result was that a gentleman when he held the ace of hearts was sure to get it passed; if a lady held it she almost always had it taken. It was quite a study to watch with what perfect sang froid the gentlemen stood up to receive the stake he had won, and with what consummate grace the lady bent her head to one side so that her lucky opponent across the table should receive his full pound of flesh, not to mention the utter indifference of both to the presence of friends or strangers sitting around. I do not know how the players felt, but the watching of a few hands played was sufficient to satisfy me that it was but a poor game after all. How it came about I don't know, but I saw one gentleman win six games in rapid succession and kiss the same lady as many times. That destroyed all interest I had up to that time taken in the game. It satisfied me that it was a game in which the cards could be so manipulated that a poor player or a beginner could have very little chance. It made me feel indeed that I would yet prefer a hand at euchre for the drinks.

The California Beet Sugar Industry.

Beet sugar manufactories in California seem to be experiencing a greater degree of prosperity than has heretofore fallen to their lot. Prices are more remunerative, competition less urgent, and, by reason of careful management, the field of saccharine matter appears to return a greater percentage of sugar than has been the case in past seasons. Nor do we hear any complaints as to the quality of their out-put. About 2,000 barrels per month are now said to be turned out by the two beet-root sugaries now in operation in that State. The San Francisco Grocer, in referring to the subject, says: "Nothing can be more entirely a home product than beet sugar, and while looking about for opportunities to develop profitable local enterprises, we know of nothing better entitled to the consideration of capitalists than this industry."

The Bandmaster's Account.

"Yes, I seen most of the first fight," responded the gentleman on the hydrant to the eager inquiries of the reporter. "You know the little fellow came dancing down the street, and waltzed right up to the big one and fetched him one in the eye. I knowed there would be a cotillion, so I chasseed to one side. The tall fellow balanced to corners and tripped the little fellow across the car-track. He jumped up polkaed around until he see an opening, and went in.

"For two minutes it was all hands around, till the little fellow got a hip-lock and flung the big one. Then he got up and schottisched after the little one, and got in on his ear. The little fellow forward-teed and lifted him under the chin. Then they had a grand change for wind, and ladies in the center, which fetched 'em both down. Then the quadrille was lively, you bet! The big one reeled off and caromed on his eye, and then it was gents the same for about three minutes.

"You'd think they were walking for a cake. The little man varsouvianned about like a hot wire, but the big one stood forward and back till he got a show, and it was seat your partners for the little man. Oh! you bet she was a redowa from the start to the finish, only I'd like to have seen the little fellow mazourka him."

"May I ask your business?" inquired the reporter.

"I play for parties. You might publish my card and give me a lift."

THE Northwestern Lumberman, which is rendering an important service to the country by awakening people to the fact of the ever-increasing denudation of forests, estimates the loss involved by the fires of 1871, in Wisconsin, Michigan and New York, at $215,000,000. In 1878 the woods on Lake Superior were afire almost continuously for 160 miles.

☞ Sold by all Druggists.

Eight Reasons

Why we NEVER sell POND'S EXTRACT in BULK, but adhere to the rule of selling ONLY in OUR own BOTTLES, inclosed in BUFF WRAPPER, on which is printed our landscape Trade-Mark.

1. It insures the purchaser obtaining the GENUINE ARTICLE.

2. It protects the consumer in buying Pond's Extract not weakened with water, which we found was done a few years ago when we induced to furnish dealers with the genuine article in bulk.

3. It protects the consumer from unscrupulous parties selling crude, cheap decoctions to him as Pond's Extract, for any person can tell the genuine from the bottle and wrapper.

4. It protects the consumer, for it is not safe to use any other article according to the directions given in our book, which surrounds each bottle of Pond's Extract.

5. It protects the consumer, for it is not agreeable to be deceived and perhaps injured by using other articles under the directions for Pond's Extract.

6. No other article, manufactured or imitation, has the effect claimed for and always produced by Pond's Extract.

7. It is prejudicial to the reputation of Pond's Extract to have people use a counterfeit believing it to be the genuine, for they will surely be disappointed if not injured by the effect.

8. Justice to one of the best medicines in the world, and the hundreds of thousands using it, demands every precaution against having weak and injurious preparations palmed off as the genuine. The only way this can be accomplished is to sell the genuine put up in a uniform manner—in our own BOTTLES, complete with buff wrappers, trade-mark, &c.

REMEMBER—The Genuine Pond's Extract is cheap, because it is strong, uniform and reliable. Our book of directions explains when it can be diluted with water and when to be used full strength.

REMEMBER—That all other preparations, if colorless, are mere decoctions, boilings, or produced simply to obtain the odor and without the scientific or practical knowledge of the matter which many years of labor has given us.

REMEMBER, AND KNOW NOW—[illegible]

REMEMBER AND KNOW—[illegible]

AN IMMENSE AREA OF RAILROAD AND GOVERNMENT LANDS, OF GREAT FERTILITY, WITHIN EASY REACH OF PERMANENT MARKET, AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES, is now offered for sale in EASTERN OREGON and EASTERN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

These lands form part of the great GRAIN BELT of the Pacific Slope, and are within an average distance of 150 to 300 miles from Portland, where steamships and sailing vessels are directly loaded FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

GRAIN AT PORTLAND, OREGON, COMMANDS A PRICE EQUAL TO THAT OBTAINED IN CHICAGO.

The early completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. is now assured, and guarantees to settlers cheap and quick transportation and good markets both East and West. The opening of this new overland line to the Pacific, together with the construction of the network of 700 miles of railroad by the O. R. & N. Co. in the valleys of the great Columbia and its principal tributaries, renders certain a rapid increase in the value of the lands now open to purchase and pre-emption. There is every indication of an overflowing emigration to the Columbia region in the immediate future.

RAILROAD LANDS offered at the uniform rate of $2.50 AN ACRE.

A Funny Flambeau.

A party of men assembled at Tommy Gent's bar-room, and after comparing notes and telling some big stories, the conversation gradually drifted to the comparative sizes of chests of the parties present. Finally some one proposed that they measure chests. A tape line was accordingly produced, and the measuring commenced. Each party swelled his breast to its greatest capacity, and the measuring continued with abundance of mirth and good humor. At last Gent took the line and passed it around the chest of M. Quinn, and was apparently greatly pleased with the result. To express his satisfaction, he placed his hands on either side of Quinn's head and commenced rubbing his ears. He had drawn his hands across the ears only twice, when he was frightened nearly out of his wits, by seeing a bright flame shoot quickly upward, reaching nearly to the ceiling. The friction caused by rubbing the ears seemed to have caused the spark, which ignited the hair, and the blaze sprang up almost instantly.

To say that Gent was horrified is putting it mild. He thought he had been the involuntary tool used to bring about Quinn's destruction by fire. The reader can imagine what his feelings would be were he to simply place his hand on a friend's ear, and instantly he should find the friend's head in flames. Gent sprang back, threw up his hands, and ejaculated:

"My God! what is this?"

And still the flames rolled on.

Gent's face turned pale, and the other gentlemen in the party hastily made room for the human flambeau, who, as he hastily paced the room, reminded one forcibly of the Circassian beauty with the red porcupine hair, only he had fire instead of hair. Some of the inmates of the room yelled fire, fire! and others, of a more religious turn of mind, commenced praying. Gent's knees were beating the devil's tattoo on each other, as he nervously clung to counter. He subsequently said he thought the master mechanic, from Hades, had surely come to see him.

Fially, after some lively work, the man whose head was being cremated, succeeded in extinguishing the conflagration without calling out the fire department. As soon as he had the fire under control, his companions regained their senses, and gradually approached him.

"Sure an' I didn't know you was loaded," said Gent.

"Do you have such spells often?" asked another.

"I knew you were 'gasing fearfully," chimed a third, "but I didn't think you would go off in that way."

And so they continued, while the man, who was indulging the torch-light procession, proceeded to explain.

It seems that Quinn is baker of bread, and while at work, frequently had occasion to look in the ovens, which are dark. When doing so, he merely strikes a match. In order to have the matches handy, he has acquired a habit of carrying a handful back of his ears.

Using ears for a match-safe is a new idea, and should be patented.

However, the matches being stored away in the suburbs of Quinn's ears, they were ignited by coming in contact with Gent's hands, which are made rough by honest toil. The hair was oily, and what followed was nothing more or less than an oil fire.—[Oil City Derrick.

To Accommodate the Public.

The proprietors of that immensely popular remedy, Kidney-Wort in recognition of the claims of the public which has so liberally patronized them, have prepared a liquid preparaton of that remey for the special accommodation of those who from any reason dislike to prepare it for themselves. It is very concentrated and, as the dose is small it is more easily taken by many. It has the same effectual action in all diseases of the kidneys, liver or bowels. —[Home and Farm.

KIDNEY-WORT

This Great Remedy

in either Liquid or Dry Form acts at the same time on the diseases of the Liver, Bowels and Kidneys,

This combined action gives it wonderful power to cure all diseases.

WHY ARE WE SICK?

Because we allow these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

KIDNEY-WORT WILL CURE

by causing free action of these organs and restoring their power to throw off disease.

Why Suffer Billous pains and aches!
Why tormented with Piles, Constipation!
Why frightened over disordered Kidneys!
Why endure nervous or sick headaches!
Why have sleepless nights!

Use KIDNEY-WORT and rejoice in health

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.

☞ Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for the convenience of those that cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

Selected Poetry.

Heliotrope.

(Ada Columbiana.)

Amid the chapel's chequered gloom
She laughed with Dora and with Flora,
And chattered in the lecture room—
The saucy little sophomore!
Yet while (as in her other schools)
She was a privileged transgressor,
She never broke the simple rules
Of one particular professor.

But when he spoke of varied lore,
Paroxy tones and modes potential,
She listened with a face that wore
A look half fond, half reverential.
To her that earnest voice was sweet;
And though her love had no confessor,
Her girlish heart lay at the feet
Of that particular professor.

And he had learned, among his books
That held the lore of ages olden,
To watch those ever-charming looks,
The wistful eyes, the tresses golden,
That stirred his pulse with passion's pain
And thrilled his soul with soft desire,
Longing for youth to come again,
Crowned with its coronet of fire,

Her sunny smile, her winsome ways,
Were more to him than all his knowledge,
And she preferred his words of praise
To all the honors of the college.
Yet "what am foolish I to him?"
She whispered to her one confessor.
"She thinks me old, and gray and grim,"
In silence pondered the professor,

Yet once, when Christmas bells were rung
Above ten thousand solemn churches,
And swelling anthems, grandly sung,
Pealed through the dim cathedral arches—
Ere home returning, filled with hope,
Softly she stole by gate and gable,
And a sweet spray of heliotrope
Left on his littered study table.

Nor came she more, from day to day,
Like sunshine through the shadows rifting;
Above her grave, far, far away,
The ever-silent snows were drifting.
And those who mourned her winsome face
Found in its stead a swift successor,
And loved another in her place—
All, save the silent old professor.

But, in the tender twilight gray,
Shut from the sight of carping critic,
His lonely thoughts would often stray
From Vedic verse and tongues Semitic,
Bidding the ghost of perished hope
Mock with its past the sad possessor
Of the dead spray of heliotrope
That once she gave the old professor.

Rubies and Sapphires in Georgia.

Itinerant mineralogists and our own citizens have been exploring and mining for rubies and sapphires in this county during the last four years. The Sequah mines, owned by W. R. McConnell, of this place, and W. G. Strubbe, of Cincinnati, Ohio, have yielded many precious opaque and translucent rubies, nearly all of which have found their way, through the late Professor Bradley and others, into the choice mineral cabinets of the world. Only a few were found nearly transparent, of from three to four carats, and these have been set in jewelry by the present owners The proceeds arising from the sale of these opaque and translucent prisms have heretofore only paid the expense of mining, but in a short time a new method will be employed for washing these precious stones out of the alluvial soils and gravel adjacent to Sequah Creek. A few days ago Ulysses Grant Ledford, a boy eleven years old, found a large, deep blue sapphire, perfectly transparent, in size nearly an inch square, but wedge shape, weighing thirty-seven and one-half carats, the largest ever found in America. W. G. Strubbe, of Cincinnati, Ohio, is now the owner, by purchase, of this precious stone, which, according to Prof. J. D. Dana's method of determining the value of precious stones, is worth $51,200. Boys and girls and grown persons are searching for others where this was found. The sapphire is nearly equal to the diamond in value and hardness. The largest known sapphire is in Mr. Hope's English collection of precious stones, a crystal formerly belonging to the Jardin des Plantes, of Paris, for which he gave $150,000. Sir Abram Hume also possesses a large crystal. The composition of a sapphire is pure alumina. Blue is the true sapphire color. When red it is an oriental ruby, when green an oriental emerald: when of other bright tints it receives other names.—Gainesville (Ga.) Eagle.

An Incidental Scene.

Old Lady—(to our poetical friend, the doctor, who has pulled her tooth and demands twenty-five cents): "So you want twenty-five cents, do you? you lying blackguard. Don't your old sign say 'teeth extracted without payin?'"

The doctor has since seen the old lady in his dreams, but he has used that placard for kindling-wood.

An exchange says: "Streams all over the country are running dry." This is a canard. When a stream is dry it can't run.

"I'm a man of few words," said Prendergast. "True enough," replied Fogg, "true enough, but you never tire of repeating them."

A MANSION FOR THE BATS.

The Deserted Splendors on Which Sandy Bowers, of Nevada, Squandered a Million.

[Carson (Nevada) Appeal.]

All residents of Nevada will recall what a famous resort Bowers Mansion used to be in the flush times some fifteen years ago. Sandy Bowers made some lucky turns in Crow Point and Belcher, and almost before he knew it was worth a cool million, and some say more. He believed that money was made to use, and so purchased some property near Washoe Lake and built his mansion. It was by far the most pretentious dwelling that had ever been thought of in Nevada, and when people saw the broad and solid masonry going up they wondered if it would not bankrupt its builder. After the house was finished the Bowers went to Europe for upholstery and furniture. The house cost about $100,000 to build, and the furniture cost about as much more. It was a simple proposition with Bowers to have everything in sight "and—— the expense." He had about him some bad advisers in those days, and they led him into all sorts of extravagance. He was open-hearted and liberal as the day, and the mansion became a favorite resort. He was never happier than when he had a big crowd dancing in his parlors and drinking his champagne. He gave grand suppers, balls and receptions, and the bigger the crowd the better he liked it.

This sort of thing went on for years, and presently Bowers reached the bottom of his sack. Gradually the property passed out of his hands. It went little by little, but it went all the same, and finally Sandy Bowers died in poverty, and left a widow known as the "Widow Seeress," a good, kind-hearted, genial old lady, who makes a living by revealing the future, and is looked upon as a wonderful medium by the Spiritualists. After his death the glories of the mansion departed, and at the present time it is uninhabited.

A few Sundays ago an Appeal reporter visited the place. The gate was tied up, and the unbroken road showed that no carriages had driven through it for many a day. A stroll over the grounds showed that they were really deserted by everything except birds and jack-rabbits. The dancing-hall was empty, and the old bath-house supplied with water from the hot springs, had been turned into a sort of hostelrie for the wayfaring tramps who, at the approach of footsteps, crawled out and betook themselves to the hills. The fountain, which in better days had sent jets of silver high in the air, and showered its spray upon the grass when the wind was high, had evidently not been in a state of activity for years. A blacksnake lay coiled on the masonry. Unabashed by human presence, he continued basking in the sun, and wore the air of a party who knew his rights. Lizzards dart in and out of the crevices of the stones, and mottled toads, with bellies of aldermanic patterns, sweated and sweltered in the grass, the growth of which no lawn-mower ever worried. The house had kept pace with the premises in the matter of decaying. The doors were all nailed up, and any one stepping on the porch would wager any amount that the building was empty. Each tread was multiplied into a score of echoes, which only empty houses respond to. A peep through the windows showed nothing but uncarpeted floors, bare walls and ghastly white ceilings. Bowers had built a fish-pond when he was flush, and not forgetting that scenery was something, placed an island in the center. This was covered with a delightful growth of willows, which swept the water with truly picturesque effect. The fish, snakes and turtles held possession of this spot, and seemed oblivious of intrusion. The water was perfectly clear, and from the bottom a curious vegetable growth was discernible, which was in itself a sufficient attraction to repay a visit. The weed was fine and green, and arose in such heavy masses that half the pond was filled with it.

Mr. J. Clephane, aged 90, a printer now living in Washington, is the oldest resident of the capital. He was one of the compositors who set up "Waverly," and also read proof with Sir Walter Scott. He came to this country in 1817, and was for many years employed on the Washington National Intelligencer.

A Wonderful Case of Dentistry.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

For six months or more, Mr. Simon Baumgarten, of this city, has been subjected to the most intense suffering, caused by inflammation and swelling of the left side of his face. A number of our prominent physicians were consulted, some of them pronouncing the trouble cancer, others abscess, decay of the bone, etc. By the advice of Dr. Joseph Ransohoff, he finally consulted a dentist, Dr. Cameron, of the corner of Seventh and Elm streets, who expressed the opinion that the trouble was caused by an undeveloped tooth, imbedded in the upper jaw-bone. Mr. Baumgarten finally concluded to allow Dr. Cameron to attempt the removal of the difficulty, which he did most successfully, though almost an hour was spent in performing the operation, the dentist laboring under great difficulties the entire time, being unable to use the ordinary instruments, as the tooth was so deeply imbedded in the bone that its presence was unknown to Mr. Baumgarten.

How a Senator Was Made.

[Gath's Letter.]

A New York gentleman, intimate in the concerns of the Albany lobby, told me a queer thing about the way Tom Platt was made senator from New York. He said that Crowley and Depew, both defeated candidates, as well as Arthur, the vice-president, Platt himself, Robertson and a large number of men around the Albany legislature, were owners of a half a dozen valuable gold mines in New Mexico, and they wanted a senator who would not cross them in having one of their number appointed governor of the territory. They wanted General James Husted made this governor, and were afraid to antagonize Platt, lest Husted would be beaten. So they all made haste to get over on Platt's side. I inquired about these gold mines further.

"They were worked 100 years ago," said my informant, "by the Spanish, and the Indians broke into revolt, murdering the miners, and stopped up all the fissures and shafts out of which the gold had been brought, so that no other white men would re-commence operations. But the tradition has been kept. A large association of New York politicians has got these mines, and they want a governor down there who will subserve their interest. Jimmy Husted expects to come back from New Mexico United States senator."

On this I remarked drily that some of the same coterie had told me recently that New Mexico was not fit to come into the Union, and would not be admitted for several years.

"I will make you a bet," said my informant, "that inside of three years New Mexico is in the Union. The railroads will bring her in by swelling up her American population."

Habits of the Beaver.

I am well acquainted with the habits of the northern beaver. Several years ago, I bought several hundred acres of mining lands near the south shore of Lake Superior, in Ontonagon county, Michigan. On Carp river, a stream that crossed a part of my lands, the beavers had built several dams, and formed extensive ponds, in which they built their houses, or lodges, as the Indians call them. These lodges are built in the water several feet in depth, and the entrance is several feet under water, but the floor of the lodge is built at least two feet above high-water mark. The floor is built solid from the bottom of the pond except the entrance.

Although the beaver is warmly clad with long, fine fur, he is very sensitive to the cold, and rarely, if ever, leaves the pond or lodge during the cold weather. He lays in his winter supply of food, which mainly consists of the bark of certain spices of poplar. He cuts down small trees and cuts them into short pieces of one foot or a little over in length, and takes them into the pond. These pieces of wood are dragged up into the lodge as often as food is needed, and the bark is gnawed off, and, after being denuded of the bark, they are by no means thrown away as useless, but are taken under the ice and are carefully placed in the dam to strengthen it.

They built one dam a little below the foot of Carp lake, which raised the lake thirty inches. The lake is a small one —about one mile long and a fourth of a mile wide. I measured the stump of a maple tree that they had cut down, and it measured fourteen inches in diameter. There were no less than eleven dams on the stream, all in sight of our buildings, where we were mining for copper.

The beaver possesses great engineering skill, always building his dams in form of an arch, giving it strength to resist the pressure of the water. The Indians used to tell the many singular traits of character that this animal possesses.—[Forest and Stream.

Doc. was kept so busy that he did not get to his dinner, but took dinner and tea together. We'll bet the landlady did not make anything in that operation, for Doc. looked as though he could eat any and everything set before him.

Programme for Richland Township Sunday-school Institute to be held at West Richland, school district No. 9, Saturday, February 26:

FORENOON SESSION.

Order called by the president. Devotional exercise. Welcome address by J. B. Scott. Reading and adoption of minutes. Address, "The Influence of the Sunday-school on General Intelligence and Refinement," by Rev L. Rice. Song and general discussion. Address, "The Power of the Sunday-school in Reforming Desperate Neighborhoods," by Rev. Levi Harding. Song and general discussion.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Song. Address, "How and what to Teach," by Mrs Eilers. Song. Address, "How can we best induce the members of the Sunday-school to study the lesson, and what is the best method or methods of studying it?" by J. H. Smalley. Song. Address, "The True Object of the Sunday-school Work," by L. W. Treesh. Song and general discussion. Question drawer, miscellaneous business and adjournment.

J. B. SCOTT, Secretary.

School Reports.

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL.

No. of pupils neither absent nor tardy during the month ending February 4: Nina Quince, Carlton Fair, Elza Housal, Elmer Wildeson, Frankie Feagler, Willis Matthew.

JAS. A. QUINCE, Teacher.

SCHOOL NO. 7, JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Report for the month ending February 1: Number of pupils on roll, 42; average attendance, 35; per cent. of attendance, 83½. Names of pupils neither absent nor tardy: Laura Means, Pearly Boots, Reuben Mullen; absence caused by sickness: Lauren Means, Nancy Kester, Josie Henderson.

S. M. HIGH, Teacher.

Report of school No. 6, Richland township, for the month ending Februara 11: No. of pupils enrolled, 21; average daily attendance, 15; names of pupils whose deportment is 100 per cent: Anna Treesh, Nettie Monroe, Minnie Thomas, Nettie Lintz, Arthur Lipsett and Perlie Feagler. Names of pupils neither absent nor tardy: Nettie Monroe, Minnie Thomas, John Monroe, Lawrence Finnia and Frank Finnia. Parents and those interested in schools are cordially invited to visit the school and see what we are doing.

MILO THOMAS, Teacher.

THE DEAD MOON.

The moon is in a state of decrepitude, a dead earth.—Proctor's Lecture.

The moon is dead—defunct—played out—
So says a very learned doctor;
She's [illegible] well, beyond a doubt;
Perhaps she's in a trance, dear Proctor.

At any rate, she's most entrancing
For one of such decrepit age;
And on her radiant beauties glancing,
She charms the eyes of youth and sage.

And so the man upon her's perished!
He lived in doleful isolation;
Poor wretch! No wife his reason cherished,
No children equalled his consolation.

Yet she's adored by all the gypsies,
Whose lovers sigh beneath her beams,
She aids the steps of staggering tipsies,
And silvers o'er romantic streams.

And once she caught Endymion sleeping,
And stooped to kiss him in a grove,
Upon him very slyly creeping;
He was her first and early love.

But that's a very ancient story,
And was a youthful indiscretion,
When she was in her primal glory,
Ere scandal schools had held a session.

Dear, darling moon! I dote upon her,
I watch her nightly in the sky;
But oh? upon my word of honor,
I'd rather she were dead than I.

MY MASTER AND I.

BY BARBARA YECHTON.

"WANTED—A Cashier.—Must write a good hand, and be intelligent. Apply between ten and twelve at — Broadway."

Such was the advertisement that met my eyes as I looked anxiously over the columns of "Female Help Wanted" in the Herald. I read it over twice, then cut it out, and put the slip in my pocket book, determined to call at No. — that morning.

There were two of us, Netta and myself; she was the child of my stepmother, upon whose death she had come to live with me. Neither of us having any relatives able to help us, and very little money, times were very hard. So for the past weeks, and, indeed, ever since I came to the city, I had studied the papers daily, and done a great deal of traveling in answer to advertisements, but without any good result. However, I was not easily discouraged, and, after dispatching Netta to school, sallied forth.

No. — proved to be a large retail and stationery house. "M. A. Chisholm" was the sign. There were a number of clerks about; to one I told my errand, and was conducted to the upper end of the long store, where, standing and sitting, were some six or seven females, who all looked severely at me; but, nothing daunted, I sat down and awaited my turn.

A little distance from us was an inclosed office, wherein, no doubt, was the party who was to decide the momentous question; and as each one went in and came out with flushed or disappointed face my heart sank lower and lower, and throbbed so when my turn came that I could scarcely speak.

As the office was dark the gas was lighted; at a low, wide desk almost covered with papers and writing materials sat a gentleman. He must have heard me come in, but he did not stop writing, nor even lift his eyes; so, a low chair being near me, I quietly sat down, examing first the countenance of M. A. Chisholm (for he it was), and then the comfortably furnished office.

The gentleman was not at all good-looking; he was very dark, sallow, in fact, with very black hair and heavy mustache; the nose was too large for beauty, the mouth and chin square and determined, the forehead prominent, with creases between the heavy brows as if from constant frowning; shoulders broad and head well set on them. The tout ensemble that of a man who would not take thwarting kindly.

The surroundings were a pleasant red carpet, several office chairs, two desks, (one occupied), waste-paper baskets, files, &c. My survey completed, my gaze went back to Mr. Chisholm, when I was considerably disconcerted at meeting two keen brown eyes fixed coldly and calmly on me.

"Well," he said, presently, with extreme politeness (sarcasm, I called it), "I trust you admire my office?"

"Yes, sir, I do," I answered, feeling uncomfortably warm.

"Humph!" after another cool glance. "So you would like to be my cashier? Know anything about arithmetic?"

"Yes, sir, something — not much, though," trying in vain to steady my voice.

"Write a good hand?"

"Yes, sir," wondering if my cheeks and ears could possibly burn more. "I write a distinct but not a pretty hand."

"Made up of negatives, eh?" he queried, sharply. "Are you bright and intelligent?"

"I leave that for you to judge, sir," I exclaimed, quickly, almost determined to get up and go away.

"Oh, you do! Well, if you get the position you will have to sit at that desk, take charge of the cash, and write such letters as I shall dictate to you, besides assuming a part of the correspondence yourself. Now write your name there."

With trembling fingers I wrote my name; never, it seemed to me, had I done so badly; the "M" looked weak and uncertain, while the "K" was decidedly broken-backed. My heart sank; was that a good hand? I felt sure the next words would be my dismissal.

He looked at the miserable scrawl, then at me, with a scarcely concealed smile.

"Well," he said, after a pause, "perhaps you may suit; at any rate you may come and try. Now about salary," naming a sum which to my country ideas seemed very generous. "Enough, eh?" with a keen glance from under his heavy eyebrows. "Can you come to-morrow? Then that will do. Good-morning. Oh! our hours are from half-past eight to six."

How I got into the street I don't remember. I was so happy to think I had at last obtained employment, and such a good salary; yet I trembled a little at the thought of my future master. He would be difficult to please, and sharp almost to rudeness, sometimes; but rather that than too much politeness; that I had been warned against. I had actually gotten the situation without any "references," for there in my pocket still remained the kind letter of recommendation from our dear old clergyman at home.

The first day was a wearysome one to me, and the crowning misery came with the adding up of my cash; add, subtract, divide, do what I would, it would not come right; and the knowledge that Mr. Chisholm was furtively watching me did not mend matters. At last he came to the rescue, and in a few rapid strokes showed me where the mistake lay. My other duties I found to be easy; to assume a small share of the correspondence, to write letters at my master's dictation, or to copy them for him after they were written, was light work.

He was just, if sharp and strict, and gradually became very kind to me; but he was a man of moods, puzzling me a great deal at first, until I concluded not to notice the changes in his manner, but simply to try to do my duty. I could see he was not happy, though I heard he was much courted in society, and lived alone in a big, handsome house up town. Sometimes, when we were not busy, he would talk so pleasantly to me! He had traveled a great deal, and possessed good descriptive powers, and rare humor. These occasions were treats to me. Then, perhaps the very next day, he would come down, dark and stern, hardly saying a word, or, if he did, something bitter or disagreeable.

He was a queer man, this master of mine, rough, polished, considerate, sharp—each phase as strongly marked as the other. A masterful man, too much accustomed to having his own way. Still I could not help thinking of him, and talking of him a little to Netta, when we were cosy and happy in our little room.

One day I tied a black ribbon several times over my hair to keep some refractory locks in place, and in the midst of dictating a letter to me, my master said abruptly:

"That ribbon in your hair makes me think of a song my mother used to sing—something about 'Janet with golden hair and silken snood,' Do you know the words?"

I colored up and said I did.

"I like the name—Janet—Janet," he continued musing; "I shall call you so in future. I know it's not your name, but I like it—and it suits you."

Then he continued dictating without waiting for my assent.

So, after that when we were alone, and he was in a genial mood, I was 'Janet,' and I did not dislike the name.

Christmas Eve came. It had been long and very tiresome. Mr. Chisholm had been out nearly all day. It wanted now but a quarter to 6. I had put on my cloak and hat, and was slowly drawing on my gloves, when a quick step sounded outside the office. The next moment he entered, with the brightest, happiest expression I had ever seen him wear.

"Still here, Janet?" he cried, gayly. "I hardly thought to find you. Have you no purchases to make?"

"Yes, sir, one," I replied, wishing with all my heart that I had gone ten minutes earlier. "I am going now."

I was at the door of the office when he called:

"Janet, come here."

"I have a purchase to make, sir," without removing my hand from the handle of the door. "I shall be late for dinner."

"But I want to tell you something; I came back here on purpose to tell you," he replied.

I walked slowly back and stood within a few feet of him.

"I am waiting, sir."

He laughed.

"Congratulate me, Janet. I am going to be married."

"To be married?" I repeated, vaguely, with a horrible sinking at my heart, and conscious that my face was growing pale, with my master's keen eyes looking straight at me.

"Yes. You see I have a big house up town, handsome and comfortable, but very lonely, Janet; I've no one to bid me good-by in the morning, no one to welcome me home at night; no happy, wee wife, no merry, childish voices to cheer my heart; I am lonely, and I love a good woman—so—I am going to be married. But you have not congratulated me yet."

"I do wish you joy, sir," I managed to say with tolerable composure.

"Thank you," he responded almost gleefully. "Ah! my love is a rare one, good, pure, and lovely. Wait till you see her. I shall show her to you some day, my little clerk, and I hope you will be friends."

This was too much.

"Good-evening, sir," I exclaimed. "I must go now."

"Good-night." He walked to the office door with me, then held out his hand. "You have known me more than four months, and we have never yet shaken hands. How is that, Janet?"

"I did not know that clerks generally shook hands with their employers, sir. Good-night and Merry Christmas." And folding both hands demurely in my muff, I marched by, pretending not to see his outstretched hand.

I had but one purchase to make, a small gray muff for Netta, and was soon on my way home at as rapid a pace as the slippery, snow-covered sidewalk would allow.

This pain at my heart was almost intolerable; it had been there nearly all day. I began to realize what it meant; I was an idiot, an arrant fool! A man had been simply polite, and a little kind to me, and forthwith I had been silly enough to fall in love with him. It had actually come to this; I was in love with my master, who had never spoken one word of love to me in his life, and who was going to marry another woman. I was thoroughly ashamed of myself, and vowed I would die rather than he should know—my foot slipped, I pitched forward, then back in a vain attempt to recover my equilibrium, and settled suddenly into a heap of soft snow, while my package flew in an opposite direction. Twice I made an awkward attempt to rise, when a pair of strong arms raised me, a familiar voice saying:

"Not a comfortable time of the year for sitting out of doors."

Then, while I brushed the snow from my dress, my master picked up my parcel, and before I could object had tucked my hand under his arm, and was walking toward my boarding-house. (I wondered afterward how he knew the address.)

"Mayn't I call and see you some evening when I am lonely? I'll be very good, and I do want to come," with a wistfulness in his tone that made my heart bound.

"Resist the devil and he will flee from you" had been a favorite quotation of my step-mother's; the "devil" in this case was my own heart, that was clamoring so loudly forbidden fruit. To resist him, I answered sharply, angrily:

"No, sir, you may not come! You must find some other way of relieving your loneliness."

My master looked astonished, frowned, and then laughed.

"You need not look so cross about it, Janet. You don't look pretty when you scowl. Merry Christmas to you!" and he was gone.

Some bitter tears were shed that night, with a protest against the bitterness of life.

My one Christmas gift was a bunch of delicious hot-house flowers which had been left for me by an unknown hand, and which brightened our room and gladened our hearts as long as they lasted.

I rather dreaded meeting Mr. Chisholm the next day; how would he act? Would he be cool and caustic, or overlook me altogether? I felt the blood rush to my face as I heard his step. He carelessly returned my salutation, and immediately became interested in his letters. Evidently he was angry.

Later in the afternoon, Mr. Jarvis ushered two ladies into the office. One was young and very lovely. Mr. Chisholm greeted them with empressement.

"The youngest one is Miss Raymond," whispered the head clerk, fidgeting among my papers, "the lady Mr. Chisholm is to marry."

"Indeed!" I answered, bending over my work. "Is it settled?"

"Oh, yes!" was the low reply. "I hear they are to be married in March."

She was a brilliant-looking woman, but I thought, had I been in her place, I would never have shown Mr. Chisholm my preference so lavishly before strangers, or been content with such mocking homage as he rendered. His crossest manner pleased me more; this was too light and free to suit me, but Miss Raymond appeared well satisfied, flashing bright glances, and tossing her queenly head in a manner that might have bewildered a stronger man than my master. Some grand ball was to take place within a week, and she wanted him to meet her there. At first he appeared unwilling, then he allowed himself to be coaxed into consent. I saw her slip her small hand into his in her thanks, then, amid gay speeches and merry laughter, he escorted them to their carriage.

"Well, Janet," said Mr. Chisholm, a little later, with a sudden change of manner, "what do you think of Miss Raymond?"

"I think she is very lovely, sir," I answered, quietly, "and must congratulate you on your future happiness."

He arched his heavy eyebrows comically.

"Won't she make my home happy?" he cried. "Won't she be a patient Griselda? She'll never give a thought to other men's admiration after the knot is tied—no, not she! And she'll look well at the head of my table; these large women make a much better appearance than small ones do."

"Please do not speak so; I wish you wouldn't. Indeed it is not honorable," I broke in.

He walked over to my desk, looked at me with a queer expression.

"Oh, pray continue! By all means show me my duty to my future wife, nee Miss Helen Raymond! Janet, you certainly missed your vocation; you should have gone in for the pulpit or the platform; those demure eyes would surely have gained you many a convert. Now, by way of a reward for your defence of the absent, let me tell you that her parting advice was to get rid of you as soon as possible—a man would be so much more useful." Suddenly laying his hand over mine, pen and all, "What do you know about how much in earnest I could be? There—don't be prudish—I shan't hurt you!" Then, abruptly walking away, "Bah! you women make grand mistakes sometimes, in spite of your vaunted intuition. I could swear I love my future wife with my whole heart—and must positively be paid by the 15th of the month."

I lifted my head in amazement at the sudden change in his voice. Mr. Jarvis stood in the doorway.

For all Mr. Chisholm's assertions I would not have changed places with Miss Raymond; better be his clerk and be treated respectfully, than be his wife and be sneered at.

After this he was away from the office a great deal, and when in it was full of plans for the future. I was a good deal puzzled by his manner; sometimes he assured me of his love for his future wife, and expressed great hopes for his happiness, then again, would sneer at her frivolousness, being gloomy and sarcastic; still he was uniformly kind to me, and I felt sorry to see him 'so tossed about by inward hopes and fears.'

One night as I was getting ready to go home he said abruptly:

"My wedding day is drawing near; will you come to the church to see me married, Janet?"

"No, sir," I answered, "I think not; you know holidays are rare, and if I have one on that day no doubt I shall find plenty to do at home, and you will be married just as happily without my presence."

"No, I won't!" he cried vehemently. "Promise you'll come, promise, Janet, or I declare I'll keep you here till you do."

His face was flushed; the hand that barred my way actually trembled. I was astonished, but not afraid.

"If you really wish me to come, of course I will do so," I said, smiling at his earnestness.

"Thank you, I do. Good night, Janet; you are a good little girl; the bride shall send you an extra large slice of wedding cake." And this extraordinary man bowed me out with a smile.

The next day was Sunday. Netta and I were enjoying sweet, pure Farrar, when our small servant made the unprecedented announcement:

"A gentleman for you, miss, waiting in the hall."

Much surprised, I went down. At the foot of the stairs stood my master, hat in hand, looking sallow, gloomy and cross.

"Will you do something for me?" he began, abruptly, without even offering his hand. "Put on your things and come to the Park with me. Don't be prudish; let Miss Raymond go to the dickens" (only it was a stronger word) "for to-day, and come help me get rid of the gloomy thoughts that have been pestering me all day. Come, Janet, I want you. If you refuse, I'll just sit down here on this step and stay the rest of the afternoon, and I think," grimly, "entertaining me out of doors will be the easiest."

He was fully capable of keeping his word; he looked ill and unhappy. I suddenly resolved I would go with him; I was not, could not be, afraid of him, my love was too thorough for that, and I might win him to a better mood; but I also resolved, with a swift consciousness of my own weakness, that it should be the first and last time. After all, it would be better for me when Mr. Chisholm was married.

By the time we reached the Park he was more amiable. Sitting on the platform of the tower, we two alone, he told me the story of his life. His father died suddenly while Miles was at college, preparing to graduate; he had been recalled to a darkened home, to find, when affairs were settled up, that the business was in a very bad condition. College was given up, and he devoted all his energies to paying off his father's debts, and keeping his delicate mother and sister in as luxurious style as before the failure. It had taken the best part of his life, and, just as fortune really came within his grasp, death claimed his dear ones, and he was left alone. His experience of life and people had not inspired a very great trust in his fellow beings.

I pitied him with all my heart; tears were in my eyes when he held out both hands with wistful eyes and said, earnestly:

"Once more life begins to look bright. I am being educated in goodness and purity; you are doing it, my little Janet, with your sturdy honesty and simple, pure womanliness. Oh, child, you can never know the world of good you have done me, the new light and life that has come to me with your dear presence! With you I am good, my evil temper is exorcised. I want you—I want you for my own wife! Don't send me away! It will be a sorry day for your master, my darling, if you refuse to marry him."

"But Miss Raymond," I gasped, shrinking from him. "You are engaged to her."

"I am not—I never was," he broke in, eagerly "Miss Raymond is nothing to me. Did you think I could marry such a woman, Janet, with you before my eyes? I have never made love to her; she knows I would never marry her. I have no faith in women outside of you, and you would not blame me, my darling, if you knew all my life. Like Diogenes I doubted if there were an honest man or woman in the world until I met you. I have been a bad man, too, and my heart fails me that such a pure little dove will never nestle in my bosom; but, please God, if you will come to me, I will strive to be worthy of your precious love. Richard Steele says 'a good wife is a liberal education.' Be my education. This is my birthday, be my birthday gift, Janet. Are you still thinking of Miss Raymond? I swear she is not and never has been anything to me; don't make me suffer for the lies report has circulated. I said what I did to try you. Oh, my love, answer me! I am not used to begging."

What need to keep him waiting? I loved him with my whole heart, and it was a very happy little woman who put two hands in his, and a very beaming face that was hidden on his shoulder. The mystery was explained. I, not Miss Raymond, was to be Mr. Chisholm's wife.

These events happened nearly five years ago, and in all the time that has passed since then I have never once regretted the birthday present I made my master. Netta's at school. On my husband's knee sits a small Miles Chisholm, who is the delight of both our hearts.

Miles senior is still eccentric, but there is perfect sympathy between us; our love has strengthened with each year. And I am truly thankful to the Great Giver who has "cast my lines in such pleasant places."

Needles.

A writer in the Home Journal briefly tells of the progress made in the last 2,000 years in forming the little implement so serviceable to women:

"Among the uncivilized people, at a very early period, rude attempts were made to form needles or bodkins of bone and ivory, by means of which they might stitch their garments together; but among the more refined nations of antiquity, as the Chinese, Hindoos, Egyptians and Hebrews, fine needles must have been in common use.

"Pliny mentions needles made of bronze for sewing and knitting as being used in his time, and bronze needles of a larger size have been found in Egyptian tombs, which must have been made 4,000 years ago. The action of moisture and the atmosphere would have destroyed smaller ones.

"The Spanish, or steel, needle was introduced into England in the time of Queen Elizabeth, but the process by which it was made was kept a secret, and the art was lost till the year 1650, when it was revived.

"Great improvements have since been introduced in needle-making, and the fine steel needles of that period bear but a faint resemblance to the delicate and highly-tempered needle of the present day, which requires to pass through the hands of no less than 120 workmen before it is ready for use."

House of Wurtemberg.

The house of Wurtemberg, it is said, derives its name from the following legend:

"A poor burgher fell in love with the daughter of the Emperor of Austria, and as the young people saw no prospect of obtaining the imperial consent to the union, they fled together into Suabia, where they bought a small piece of land, and established an inn. It stood at the foot of a mountain, and its possessor therefore went by the name of 'Wirt am Berg,' or the 'Landlord at the Mountain.' One day the Emperor was traveling to Frankfort, and stopped on on his way at his daughter's house without recognizing her. She knew him directly, and persuaded her husband to make himself known to the Emperor, and to beg his forgiveness. Accordingly, taking their little son they fell at his feet entreating his pardon, which he willingly granted. Moreover, the Emperor created his son-in-law a duke; but in memory of this occurrence he was to keep his name 'Wirt am Berg,' which subsequently became Wurtemberg."

"REAL estate is advancing rapidly, and no mistake," said Jones, as he dug the dust out of his eyes of a windy day.

How a Great Engineer Got His Start.

James B. Eads was born in Indiana in 1820. He is slender in form, neat in dress, genial, courteous and nearly sixty years of age. In 1833, his father started down the Ohio River with his family, proposing to settle in Wisconsin. The boat caught fire, and his scanty furniture and clothing were burned. Young Eads hardly escaped ashore with his pantaloons, shirt and cap. Taking passage on another boat this boy of thirteen landed in St. Louis with his parents; his little bare feet first touching the rocky shore of the city on the very spot where he afterward located and built the largest steel bridge in the world, over the Mississippi—one of the most difficult feats of engineering ever performed in America.

At the age of nine, young Eads made a short trip on the Ohio, when the engineer of the steamboat explained to him so clearly the construction of the steam engine, that before he was a year older he built a little working model of it, so perfect in its parts and movements that his schoolmates would frequently go home with him after school to see it work. A locomotive engine, driven by a concealed rat, was one of his next juvenile feats in mechanical engineering. From eight to thirteen he attended school; after which, from necessity, he was placed in a dry goods store.

Over the store, in St. Louis, where he was engaged, his employer lived. He was an old bachelor, and having observed the tastes of his clerk, gave him his first book on engineering. The old gentleman's library furnished evening companions for him during the five years he was employed. Finally, his health failing, at the age of nineteen, he went on a Mississippi River steamer, from which time to the present day that great river has been to him an all-absorbing study.

Soon afterward, he found a partnership with a friend, and built a small boat to raise cargoes of vessels sunk in the Mississippi. While this boat was building he made his first venture in submarine engineering, on the lower rapids of the river, by the recovery of several tons of lead. He hired a scow or flatboat and anchored it over the wreck. An experienced diver, clad in armor, who had been hired at considerable expense in Buffalo, was lowered into the water; but the rapids were so swift that the diver, encased in strong armor, feared to be sunk to the bottom. Young Eads determined to succeed, and finding it impracticable to use the armor, went ashore, purchased a whisky barrel, knocked out the head, attached the air-pump hose to it, fastening several heavy weighs to the open end of the barrel, then swinging it on to a derrick, he had a practical diving-bell, the best use I ever heard made of a whisky barrel.

Neither the diver nor any of the crew would go down in the contrivance, so the dauntless young engineer, having full confidence in what he had read in books, was lowered within the barrel down to the bottom, the lower end of the barrel being open. The water was sixteen feet deep and very swift. Finding the wreck, he remained in it a full hour, hitching ropes to pig-lead until a ton or so was safely hoisted into his own boat; then making a signal by a small line attached to the barrel, he was lifted on deck, and took command again. The sunken cargo was soon successfully raised, and was sold, and netted a handsome profit; which, increased by other successes, enabled enegetic Eads to build larger boats, with powerful pumps and machinery on them for lifting entire vessels.

Only a Pair of Guinea Fowls.

In the "good old times," Sunday was strictly kept in Connecticut. But its neighbor, Rhode Island, was inclined to hold very liberal views as to Sabbath-breaking. Natives of "Little Rhody" who had settled in the "land of steady habits," were not unfrequently placed by their Sabbatarian laxity in conflict with their more strict neighbors.

One of these settlers was Benjamin Wilkinson, who kept one of the best of taverns at Thompson. He was a man of much public spirit, and had done many things to beautify the town. Before his advent the ground on which the meeting-house stood, was covered with bush, old stumps, and rock. He transformed it into an attractive common and training-field.

He was a generous man, and wished all to share in the good things of life. So he planted a peach pit by every rock and along the road side, that boys, travelers, and church-comers might have a free supply of peaches.

On winter Sundays, Wilkinson's tavern, being near the church, served as a "Sabbs'-day house." The shivering congregation—there were no stoves in meeting-houses in those days—found warmth by the glowing hearth and, it may be, in something from the bar.

But Wilkinson was not a strict Sabbatarian. His neighbors overlooked sundry failures to keep in harmony with their ideas, seeing that he had been brought up in Rhode Island, and was a worthy citizen. But one Sunday the congregation was disturbed all through the morning service by what sounded like the creaking of a rusty-handled grind-stone. The noise came from the tavern yard.

That was the ounce that broke the back of the much-enduring Thompsonians. Not even the best inn-keeper in the State could be tolerated in disturbing divine service. Accordingly at noon the deacons and the selectmen waited upon Wilkinson, and charged him with turning a grind-stone on the Sabbath-day.

"I deny the charge," he promptly answered.

"Why, we hear it now," retorted the officials, as a long-drawn, creaking sound startled them.

"Come and see for yourselves," said the landlord, smiling mischievously, and leading the way into his yard. "Gentlemen," he said, "let me introduce to you the first pair of Guinea hens brought into Thompson."

It was their doleful cries which had ruffled the serenity of the congregation.

Only Words.

It is an unfortunate fact that with many authors words are almost the only care; they make it a study not so much to produce new sentiments as to recommend those already known in fairer decorations. Thus the reader searches for information in vain; he finds nothing but words.

STOMACH BITTERS

No Time Should Be Lost,

If the stomach, liver and bowels are affected, to adopt the sure remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Diseases of the organs named beget others far more serious, and a delay is therefore hazardous. Dyspepsia, liver complaint, chills and fever, early rheumatic twinges, kidney weakness, bring serious bodily trouble if trifled with. Lose no time in using this effective, safe and long-known medicine.

Collecting Debts in New York State.

Like most other civilized States, New York long ago abolished imprisonment for debt, but, also like most others, her statutes permit special proceedings for detention of debtors who are believed to be about to go beyond the limits of the State and the jurisdiction of her courts, or who are charged with fraudulent practices. It appears that the laws governing cases of this kind in New York are so construed as to permit very gross and barbarous abuses, and a movement has commenced which will doubtless result in such modification of the law as may remove this reproach. It is said that in the jail in New York City there are nine men who have been imprisoned for long terms—one for four years—without any other charge than the creditors' alleged belief that they intended to leave the State. Being unable to give bail to the amount of creditors' claims, these unfortunates are detained at the pleasure of those upon whose suit they have been committed. Such a practice is, of course, intolerable, and now that its existence is exposed, measures for its suppression will not be long delayed. Perhaps the law would not have been left till this late day in the present form, but for the somewhat exceptional relations which New York holds with the general business of the country. The city being the commercial center and general supply point of nearly the whole country for many important lines of trade, her merchants are naturally large creditors of non-residents, and the legislation of the State was doubtless framed for the purpose of giving them as much security as possible in their dealings with persons living beyond the limits. The law under which debtors are imprisoned in the manner complained of was designed to bring reluctant or dishonest debtors to terms, in case they should venture into New York jurisdiction; and it is possible that the amendments which are now sought will retain something of this sort of moral suasion. While the State assumes to enforce the obligations of debt contracts, there can be no very strong objection to means of enforcement which will at least exhaust the property, open or concealed, of debtors. The fault with the present law of New York seems to be that it leaves the poor debtor at the mercy of the creditor, instead of requiring prompt proceedings to test his ability to pay. If fraudulent concealment or diversion of a debtor's assets is made a crime, he should at least be allowed a fair trial when charged with it. The existing law in New York practically permits sentence for imprisonment for life upon the mere affidavit of a creditor, without jury trial or any other judicial proceeding to determine his guilt or innocence of fraud. It is strange that a system capable of such barbarous abuse, and which, as the evidence shows, has been made the instrument of most atrocious oppression, should have received so little public attention heretofore, in a city whose newspaper writers and reporters are supposed to be always on the lookout for matters of a sensational character.—Minneapolis Tribune.

EVERY TIME.

[From the Keokuk Constitution.]

A man, or even a piece of machinery that does its work right every time, is we think very correctly judged "valuable." And certainly none the less valuable is any article designed to relieve the ills of mankind, and which does so every time. Messrs. Jones, Cook & Co., Bay State Brewery, Boston, Mass., write: We have used St. Jacobs Oil among our men and find that it helps them "every time." We therefore heartily recommend it as a pain-healing liniment.

The Growth of Children.

Dr. Percy Boulton, of the Samaritan Hospital, London, has made interesting studies of the health and growth of children. Instead of taking the average of a large number of children measured once, he has found it more profitable to measure a number of children of normal growth, brought up under average circumstances, many times, thus ascertaining their rate of increase. The annual rate of growth was found to vary between two and three inches for each child per year. The following working table, though not exact, is an approximation to the statement of a law. The weight, it will be observed, normally corresponds with the height, rising by steps of one inch:

Feet.	Inches.	Pounds.	Feet.	Inches.	Pounds.
3	0	36	4	1	62½
3	1	38	4	2	65
3	2	40	4	3	67½
3	3	42	4	4	70
3	4	44	4	5	72½
3	5	46	4	6	75
3	6	48	4	7	77½
3	7	50	4	8	80
3	8	52	4	9	82½
3	9	54	4	10	85
3	10	56	4	11	88½
3	11	58	5	0	90
4	0	60

Dr. Boulton believes that when a child varies more than a quarter of an inch annually, or when his weight does not correspond with his height within a margin of safety, put at seven pounds, the danger signal should be put out. Then it is safe to conclude the child's diet is not good, or possibly some disease is lurking in his system. It is a curious fact that loss of weight always precedes the development of consumption.

What We Know About It.

[From the Cairo (Ill.) Radical Republican.]

"What do you know about St. Jacobs Oil?" said one of our oldest subscribers. This was a fair question, and we answer that we are reliably informed that a gentleman of this city who has suffered untold agony and spent a mint of money to get relief from Rheumatism, in desperation bought some and tried it, and declares that it is the best remedy for rheumatism he ever heard of.

What Is a Cold?

In the first place, we must be paradoxical, and affirm that it is not a cold at all. It is rather a heat, if I might so express myself—that is, it is a form of fever, but, of course, of a very mild type, when it is uncomplicated by other diseases. It is certainly, in the majority of instances, due to the effects of cold playing upon some portion of the body, and reacting upon the mucous membrane through the intervention of the nervous apparatus. What is called a cold, then, is in reality a fever; and though, in the majority of instances, it is of such a trivial nature as to necessitate few precautions being taken during its attack, yet in some cases it runs a most acute course, and may be followed by great prostration. Even when the premonitory symptoms of a cold are developing themselves—when, for example, what a medical man calls a rigor, or, as it is popularly designated, a shivering is felt, when we would naturally suppose that the animal temperature is below par, it is at that very moment higher than the normal; thus showing the onset of fever.—Chambers' Journal.

Mrs. Partington Says

Don't take any of the quack rostrums, as they are regimental to the human cistern; but put your trust in Hop Bitters, which will cure general dilapidation, costive habits and all comic diseases. They saved Isaac from a severe extract of tripod fever. They are the ne plus unum of medicines.—Boston Globe.

Back to Back.

A rowdy cannot endure the sight of a well-dressed man. It acts upon him as a red shawl upon a bull. Some years ago, as two young gentlemen were going home from a party in Philadelphia, they were attacked by a gang of rowdies. The youths were brothers, and noted for their skill in boxing. Standing back to back, they knocked down their assailants as fast as they came at them. In a few minutes the rowdies fled. Similar tactics once saved two English anglers from being bitten by a pack of fierce dogs. As they were passing a farm-house, a large dog, whose barking and glaring eyes announced his rage, dashed at them.

"Catch up some stones and stand back to back, or he'll worry us," cried the elder.

Armed with as many stones as they could pick up, they put themselves in position and waited the charge. But the dog did not attack. He evidently thought the position too formidable for him to carry by assault. After circling round the men two or three times, he returned to the farm-house.

The anglers, congratulating themselves on the success of their tactics, pressed onward. They had just passed over the brow of a hill when a chorus of "Yelp, yelp, yelp!" announced another and more dangerous attack.

"We are hunted," shouted one to the other; "more stones, and stand firm, or we are dead men."

Filling their pockets and hands with stones, the two men again stood back to back, and waited anxiously the attack. On came the large dog, with four other dogs, all open-mouthed and barking furiously.

They, too, had their tactics. They began by circling round the anglers, and gradually drew nearer and nearer.

A well-aimed stone struck the leader of the pack on the head and rolled him over. Another stone hit a second dog on the side and sent him out of the circle howling with pain.

Then the pack halted, retreated some distance, and again began to circle round the men. Sullenly they went round and round, until, seeing no chance for an assault, they went slowly off over the hill.

The anglers went their way, speculating as to the method by which the large dog persuaded his four companions to join him in assaulting his enemies.

Novel and Interesting News.

The Boston Globe has made a happy deal. In an extraordinary special edition dated Jan. 1, "1981," it presents the news of 100 years from now, in a highly interesting and elating manner. The Phonograph in Divorce Suits—Sunday-School Excursion in Air Cars—Terrible Accidents in Mid-Air—Invention of a Burglar Bouncer, are respectively treated from the standpoint of the advanced journalism of that day. News by the Talkogram and Photophone from all parts of the world is fully presented. To show the progress of those times, it is only necessary to state that "Hiram Grant's bay mare Broad S. trots a mile in 1.37¼." Every one should secure from his newsdealer or from Messrs. A. Vogeler & Co., of Baltimore, Md., by whom this edition is exclusively controlled and owned, a copy of the Boston Globe for "1981." Mailed on receipt of price—FIVE CENTS. To read it is to have grace and flexibility imparted to the intellect, and a strong desire to live on—as the poet would express it.

Compliment Exchanged.

Says the Cleveland Herald: "They tell of a very 'cultured' divine in Boston, who, instead of saying, 'The collection will now be taken up,' impressively remarks: 'The accumulation of money will now ensue.' Perhaps there is such a man, but he is a poor creature compared with the Cleveland shepherd of souls who says, 'The deacons will now sail around, and the congregation will enthuse and pass in its chips.'"—Boston Transcript.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

THE water of the sea and rivers contains more animal life than exists on the land, if we can believe scientists.

TWO FROGS put in an earthen jar with a little water by a physiologist who intended to use them for experimentation, were overlooked for nine months, during which time they were without food. Yet, when found at last, they were "alive and kicking."

ACCORDING to Dr. Edward Smith, an egg contains 15¼ per cent. of nitrogen. Another writer estimates that the value of one pound of eggs, as food for sustaining the active forces of the body, is to the value of one pound of lean beef as 1,584 to 900. As a flesh producer one pound of eggs is about equal to one pound of beef.

STORM warnings are a distinct branch of the forecasts of meteorology. Their object is to give to seamen notice of an approaching gale. They have been now in operation for more than ten years, and during that period at least 75 per cent. of the warnings issued have been justified by the gales or strong winds which followed.

THE medical department of Queen Victoria's household comprises three physicians ordinary, three physicians extraordinary, one sergeant-surgeon extraordinary, two sergeant-surgeons, three surgeons extraordinary, one physician of the household, one surgeon of the household, one surgeon apothecary, two chemists of the establishment in ordinary, one surgeon oculist, one surgeon dentist in ordinary, and one other physician.

THE simplest postoffice in the world is in Magellan straits, and has been established there for some years past. It consists of a small cask, which is chained to the rock of the extreme cape in the straits, opposite Terra del Fuego. Each passing ship sends a boat to open the cask and to take letters out and place others into it. The postoffice is self-acting therefore; it is under the protection of the navies of all nations, and up to the present there is not one case to report in which any abuse of the privileges it affords has taken place.

THE progress of languages spoken by different people is said to be as follows: English, which at the commencement of the century was only spoken by 22,000,000, is now spoken by 90,000,000; Russian by 63,000,000 instead of 30,000,000; German by 66,000,000 instead of 38,000,000; Spanish by 44,000,000 instead of 32,000,000; Italian by 30,000,000 instead of 18,000,000; Portuguese by 13,000,000 instead of 8,000,000. This is, for England, an increase of 310 per cent.; for Russia, 110 per cent.; for Germany, 70 per cent.; for Spain, 36 per cent., etc. In the case of France the increase has been from 34,000,000 to 46,000,000, or 36 per cent.

MANY of these productions, says an English paper, have a very curious history, if it could only be traced. Some of them probably owe their origin to names distinguished in our literature, as Oliver Goldsmith, for instance, is believed in his earlier days to have written such compositions. Dr. E. F. Rimbault gives us the following particulars as to some well-known favorites: "Sing a Song of Sixpence" is as old as the sixteenth century. "Three Blind Mice" is found in a music book dated 1609. "The Frog and the Mouse" was licensed in 1580. "Three Children Sliding on the Ice" dates from 1639. "London Bridge is Broken Down" is of unfathomable antiquity. "Boys and Girls Come Out to Play" is certainly as old as the reign of Charles II., as is also "Lucy Locket Lost Her Pocket," to the tune of which the American song of "Yankee Doodle" was written. "Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, Where Have You Been?" is of the age of Queen Bess. "Little Jack Horner" is older than the seventeenth century. "The Old Woman Tossed in a Blanket" is of the reign of James II., to which Monarch it is supposed to allude.

Two Organs.

Regulate first the stomach, second the liver; especially the first, so as to perform their functions perfectly, and you will remove at least nineteen-twentieths of all the ills that mankind is heir to in this or any other climate. Hop Bitters is the only thing that will give perfectly healthy natural action to these two organs.—Maine Farmer.

The Mining Prospects.

Behold the prospector who wandereth over the face of the earth.

He traverseth the hills and picketh the barren mountains with his pick.

The pangs of hunger grip his bowels in the morning, and at night he lieth down with only a blanket to cover him.

And the graybacks come forth and rend him.

And he lifteth up a voice of lamentation in the wilderness and cries aloud to heaven:

"Why has this affliction come upon me, and why do the terrors of hell compass me round about?"

And while he sleeps the wolves devour his substance.

And when he findeth the croppings he diggeth in the ground and tacketh up the location notice on the board.

Then he hieth to the valleys and sayeth to the capitalist:

"Hearken unto me, for I have struck it big. Here are the samples from the ground, and behold the gold maketh lousy the rock with richness."

And the twain return to find others toiling upon the claim.

And the prospector graspeth his gun, saying:

"Get ye gone from here, for this is holy ground."

And a fire coming out of the bush smites him on the hip, and he calleth with a loud voice:

"I am done for; take off my boots."

And they hasten to take off his boots, and the fragrance of his socks reacheth unto heaven.

And he giveth up his ghost and is gathered to his fathers.

And behold, others work the mine.—Nevada Monthly.

A Long-Felt Want.

"Margaret!" yelled both parents.

"On my little brother, who had me by the hand, and like to have smashed him. Now, what's the matter?"

The girl's mother emerged from behind the coffee-pot, a sigh of relief escaped from the minister, and the old gentleman very adroitly turned the conversation in a political channel.

Constitutional Amendments.

Now that the subject of submitting the constitutional amendments again to the people is being discussed, it will be well for all to give the matter a little more attention than was the case last year. It seems to us that some of the changes proposed ought to be made, especially the striking out of the word "white" in the constitution, and the chaging of the time for holding the state election. No doubt the day should be the same for state and presidential elections when both come the same year. But here again comes in the inevitable registry law. The amendment would make it obligatory upon the legislature to pass a registry law, whether a majority of the members were in favor of such a measure or not. No election could be held until that was done. And that could not be done until the legislature meets. Therefore the legislature would have to be called together in special session at a considerable expense to the people. Then if a majority of the members should oppose a registry law, such a law would not be enacted. Then again, no election could be held. Why not propose a new amendment, simply changing the time of holding the election? We are satisfied that a majority of the people are not in favor of a registry law. Too many remember the one we had last, when every man's vote was a public matter, as his vote could be ascertained by examining the ballots and tally-sheet. Such a law, instead of purifying the ballot and preserving it to such only as were entitled to vote, would put it into the power of such as chose to do so, to bulldoze every man in his employ, to ascertain each man's vote and use it against him. Or, if the previous plan of numbering the ballots be omitted, there are still reasons why such a plan is not desirable. See those states in which a registry law is now in force, as for example, New York, California and Pennsylvania. It is notorious that more illegal voting is done in these states than in any others. In those states the party in power, holding all the election machinery in its own hands, can, and too often does, prevent the registration of voters of the opposite party. False names are put on the register's books, names of non-residents, of absentees, of persons long since dead, and other fictitious names added; and then on election day some one is allowed to vote these extra names. And at the same time many qualified voters are refused, simply because their names are not on the books—oftentimes having been prevented from registering by the very election officers who ought to be the guardians of the ballot-box. Then, too, the extra expense is no small item. The trustee, or other person, must spend several days before each election, in holding a sort of polling place where voters may come to register. This requires extra time to be spent by the voters who come to register, and extra polling books for the registering of voters. In short, the more cumbrous our election machinery becomes, the more expensive it will be; and the more complex the laws, the greater will be the opportunity to cover up rascality.

Worked Up Big

HAS BEEN THE PROGRAMME FOR THE INAUGURATION, THE COMMITTEE AND THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO BEING STILL AT IT.

With so great a degree of success have the elaborate preparations for the inauguration of Mr. Garfield been perfected, that there can be no question as to the ceremonies being the grandest of the character this country has ever known. There appears to be no end of attractions, and now that the Baltimore and Ohio has announced that the sale of tickets will commence on Tuesday, the first of March, the advanced demand for them is something remarkoble. The Baltimore and Ohio, from the fact of its being the only line from Chicago and the west direct to Washington, occupies a very strong position, and that the people should prefer it over the other lines which only reach Washington by circuitous routes is very natural. Certain it is the company has spared no pains or expense for the accommodation of the vast number of people who will travel over it next week. The company has received its full complement of the magnificent new sleepers built expressly for it, and this, together with the elegant new dining cars, splendid day coaches and motive power, which has no superior on the globe, must render it by far the pleasantest as well as the most convenient of all lines to the national capital. The low rate round trip tickets will be sold on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, March 1st, 2d and 3d, good for any train on these days, and for the return will be good for any train up to midnight of the 8th inst.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Those who sympathise with the oppressed people in Ireland, are holding land league meetings in various parts of the country.

All our exchanges have for the past ten days been filled with accounts of the unprecedented floods. No such uprising of the waters have ever been known before.

Wood-choppers inform us they find a great number of squirrels frozen to death in their nests in the hollow limbs of trees. This has been a terrible winter for all kinds of wild game.—Paulding Gazette.

S. D. Crane, county superintendent of Lagrange county, has got into trouble with an irate parent whose boy did not get along smoothly in school. An open letter is the result, and certain parties are handled without gloves.

The re-union of the 44th Indiana regiment at Ft. Wayne last week, is reported to have been a very successful affair. A large number were in attendance in spite of the bad weather, and everything passed off pleasantly. Many of the boys and their friends from Waterloo and Auburn were in attendance.

Valparaiso is agitating the subject of water works. They propose to bring a supply from Flint Lake, over three miles from the city. From this lake, which is over twenty-four feet above the streets in town, it is proposed to pump the water into another lake having an elevation of forty-seven feet. This latter is used as a reservoir, and pipes leading from it will take the water to any part of the city.

It is interesting to read in our exchanges the various accounts of the Nessel homicide in Fairfield township. the unfortunate young men are made to range all the way from sixteen to thirty years of age, and figure through all the degrees of good citizenship and morality from the mild eyed Sunday-school superintendent to the dashing James brothers, or the brutal Benders. It would make the family doubt their own identity.

A DESERTED BABY.—Friday evening a couple stopped at a south town hotel. They had a baby. They left the baby while they went out shopping. While away, a note was put under the pillow where the little one rested. The note stated the parents were too poor to rear the child, and hoped the finders would take care of it. For some time the proprietor of the hotel and his family were in a terrible stew, and even the perpetrators of the joke began to be worried, but they held their hush until the parents returned, when they relieved the suspense of the victims of the joke.—[Fort Wayne Sunday Mail.

The Fort Wayne News of the 17th inst. says in regard to the new railroad that is expected to follow the line of the old canal: "Just as we go to press, we learn that negotiations for the sale of the canal were concluded last Saturday, and that this afternoon, the late owners of the canal, Messrs. Bass, Simons & Co., received from the New York, Chicago & St. Louis railway a cash consideration of $137,000 for the transfer of 55 miles of the Wabash canal, the late canal company reserving the right of water privileges in this city. That settles the cake, and the prospective suspense of 60 days is over."

Mrs. Thorp's poem, "Drifting out to Sea," reminds me of an incident that occurred some years ago in Orland. Some little girls went to a neighbor's to play. The lady of the house told the children not to go behind the house as the well curb had been removed, and she was afraid they would fall in. One little girl, who was possessed of an inquiring mind, desired to see how a well looked without a curb and went and looked in, and losing her balance, fell into the well. An alarm was immediately given, and a number of persons were soon on the spot, first of whom was Charles Luce, now of Toledo, O., who descended into the well and succeeded in rescuing the drowning child. As he passed her upward to the eager hands out stretched to receive her, he recognized his own daughter.—Steuben Republican.

Under the head line, "A Remarkable Circumstance," the Vincennes Sun relates the following curious circumstance: At the present time George Gardner, son of Dexter Gardner, undertaker, is an object of considerable interest. It will be remembered that two or three years ago his body was made the recipient of a piece of cold lead, the pistol being in the hands of a playmate. The ball, a twenty-two caliber affair, entered George's breast, just above the left nipple, and for several days it was thought that the wound was fatal. The doctors could not find the ball, and as he finally recovered and felt no ill effects from its presence, no more attention was paid to it. The matter of the shooting had almost passed from the boy's memory, until a few days ago, when he felt a peculiar lump on his ear. The lump continued to get into a more prominent position, and is now cosily settled in the lobe of his right ear. It is plainly to be felt, if not seen, that the foreign substance is the pistol ball that was fired into George's breast two or three years ago. We would like to have a physician to explain the phenomenon; how a ball entering the left breast can possibly find its way into a fellow's ear—especially the auricular appendage on the opposite side of the body.

Newville High School.

The school at this place will open in the spring with the following programme:

We will have three departments in our school, viz: primary, teachers' and advanced. The primary department explains itself. The teachers' department will complete the eight common school branches. Thorough instruction and drill will be given in them, so that any one going through this department will be prepared to teach in the common schools. This will be one of the chief features.

The advanced department will contain a three-years course. The first two years will entitle to a certificate and enable the student to enter the freshman class of any college. The special year will go beyond that and be for any who desire to take it. The following will be the three-years course:

FIRST YEAR—FIRST TERM.

English analysis, ancient history, physical geography, Latin or Greek.

SECOND TERM.

Temperance Talk.

Talking to boys in public meetings is getting to be an art and a science. Billy Ross is a great temperance lecturer, and at Rosherville, Ill., was preaching to the young folks on his favorite theme. He said: "Now, boys, when I ask you a question you mustn't be afraid to speak right out and answer me. When you look round and see all these fine houses, farms and cattle, do you ever think who owns them all now? Your fathers own them, do they not?" "Yes, sir," shouted a hundred voices. "Well, where will your fathers be in twenty years from now?" "Dead," shouted the boys. "That's right. And who will own all this property then?" "Us boys," shouted the urchins. "Right. Now tell me, did you ever, in going along the streets, notice drunkards lounging around the saloon doors, waitng for sombody to treat them?" "Yes, sir, lots of them." "Well, where will they be in twenty years from now?" "Dead," exclaimed the boys. "And who will be the drunkards then?" "Us boys." Billy was thunderstruck for a moment, but recovering himself, tried to tell the boys how to escape such a fate.

Communicated.

The following letter from Miss Danels, lately a teacher in the Auburn schools, but now a resident of Minnesota, will be read with interest by all, especially by those who think we have hard winters here:

FAIRMOUNT, MINN., Feb. 7, 1881.

MR. EDITOR:—I received your letter some time ago, but I have so much writing to do, and it is so seldom that we have a mail this winter, that when we do have one, I have to hurry up and get my letters ready. We have had a very hard winter here; it commenced the middle of October, and it has continued ever since. Such terrible storms! blocking the railroads so that we hardly have a mail once a week, but we have just passed through the worst one we have had yet, a regular old fashioned Minnesota blizzard. It would be impossible to give you an idea of it. The wind blew furiously. You never knew of such a wind in Indiana. The air was filled with snow as fine as meal; it seemed to sweep across the country in great waves, and we could scarcely see across the street. I am glad I saw it, but I do not want to see another. It commenced Thursday night and continued until Monday morning. I was boarding near the store, but did not venture to go there. The stores were all closed, and all the signs of life, was, occasionally a man would venture out to get some provisions. To-day it is warmer and rains a little occasionally, so that the drifts have settled considerably, but here on Main street in front of the stores, it is up to the second story windows. Saturday morning the doors and windows, at my boarding place, were completely covered, they had a spade in the house, and had to dig their way out.

We have not had a mail since one week ago last Saturday night, and it is impossible to tell when we will have another. They used to send the mail to Wells with a team, but now the road is blockaded clear to LaCrosse. The people on the west end of the road are suffering. Two, or three families are huddled together in one house, and are using the other houses fuel. In some places they are taking up the railroad ties to burn. It has not been so bad here as that, for we have had more trains than they have farther west. The business men, of this place, turned out and shoveled snow on the railroad a few days ago, and the superintendent ordered the first load of wood to be sent to Fairmount, but if the blockade continues much longer there will be a wood famine here. The man who keeps the wood yard, keeps also a lumber yard. He has sold all his wood and is now selling lumber for fuel. Corn burns well and is as cheap as anything, only twenty cents a bushel, but winter came on so early that farmers did not get it husked and the most of it is under the snow. The business men of this place have made a bee and shoveled a track so that a team can pass. In one place they have tunneled through the snow.

Feb. 8. To-day it has cleared off and it is a lovely day, warm and spring-like One can hardly imagine that this lovely day is in the same country with the furious storms of last Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Well, there is nothing like variety.

Feb. 13. We are having another blizzard. The school authorities are kindly(?) dividing up the school wood to those who are out at $9 per cord, they only have two cords to sell and twenty-three sent in their names for a share of it.

Feb. 14. It is not storming to-day and they are going to send the mail out with a team. Write soon for I shall be glad to hear from you again. Perhaps I shall get your answer sometime.

Your friend,
LUCINDA DANIELS.

—We see that an effort is to be made to abolish that part of the present insurance law, that requires the publication by foreign companies, of a statement of condition, etc., in the Indianapolis papers, and in them only. This is a move in the right direction. Those companies should be allowed to publish their statement in any paper they choose, provided the paper has a sufficient circulation, or provided its circulation is found to be mainly in the district in which such company does the greatest amount of its work. If advertising does the company or its patrons any good, it is reasonable to suppose, that no one or two papers, arbitrarily selected, without regard to locality, or otherwise, can accomplish that end. Insurance is a business. Then let insurance men, like other business men, select the medium by which to reach the public. As well might we have a law requiring all the hardware men in the state to advertise in the Logansport papers, and all drygoods men in those of Evansville, as to require all insurance companies doing busines in the state to publish their semi-annual statements in the State Sentinel and Journal.

—Candidates for town offices are hopping up like mushrooms in a forest. The marshal is the leading feature. We believe that Dry Houton and Col. Miller will not come before the republican caucus. Brother Kinmont seems to be outdoing them.

—On Tuesday of this week a man named John Hurt was arrested over at Butler on a charge of larceny, and taken before 'Squire J. J. Sise and bound over to court. He is now in jail. The articles stolen were a watch, money and clothing.

—The L. S. & M. S. railroad will sell tickets on February 28, March 1st and 2d, to Washington, D. C. and return. Tickets good to return eight days after date. Rate from Waterloo, $18.50 for the round trip. For tickets, apply to H. D. Armstrong, Waterloo, Ind.

—The Fort Wayne papers make up the majority of their local matter by puffing a home minstrel company, with the beautiful title of "Bijou." Wonder if Billy Stewart has a hand in it. If he has, we would inform him that our hall is engaged for the festivals of the winter.

—For change of climate, compare Miss Danels letter, in this week's issue, with that of T. C. Mays in our last. Truly it is a great country that can have such a variety of weather, and that at the same time.

—Hon. Henry Feagler, one of the old-time wheel horses of this county, made us a call this week. Though differing from us in politics, Mr. Feagler is too much of a gentleman to let his political opinions interfere with his friendship.

—The Corunna band will give a concert in this place, in Ensley's hall, on Tuesday evening of next week, March 1. The reputation this band has justly acquired, is a guarantee that the entertainment will be a good one. Let all turn out and welcome them with a full house. Tickets 25 cents.

—The boys at the Junction depot had a rather interesting female tenant the other day. It was for some time a mooted question, whether she would put Clark out, or vice versa. But Clark has such a winning way with the gentler sex, that he, at last, succeeded in holding the fort and keeping the enemy at bay.

—When one doctor gets dosing out medicine it generally satisfies the patient. But when

Four doctors tackled Johnny Smith,
They blistered and they bled him;
With squills and anti-bilious pills and ipecac they fed him.
They stirred him up with calomel.
And tried to move his liver;
But all in vain—his little soul
Was wafted o'er the river.

—Nathan Wyatt, of Concord township, after a seven year's endeavor, has been made the happy father of a bouncing boy. The recording angel hath it, that when it was announced to the proud father that a little Garfield had come to live with him, the infant, as by inspiration, on hearing the sacred name of "Garfield," raised its tiny hands above its head and clapped them playfully. All of which, goes to show the Ohio influence is spreading his way.

—We hear that Miss Laura Fair, of this place, was married to a young man by the name of Lash, at Fort Wayne, last Tuesday. If the reports are true, which they probably are, that Fort Wayne chap has Lash(ed) onto a very Fair girl. Miss Laura is one of our most accomplished and best looking girls. We hope their career through life will be pleasant and successful.

—Picnic at Isaac Ochs store for the next fifteen days. Selling overcoats and winter clothing at cost, boots and shoes regardless of cost and a big line of vests, cost from $2.00 to $3.00 each, choice $1.00. Big line of wool and fur hats, cost from $1.50 to $3 00 each, at 50 and 75 cents each. All other winter goods at cost and less than cost. To secure bargains, come early.

In haste,
ISAAC OCHS.

Waterloo.

—Fire department is in good trim.

—F. B. VanAuken, so long principal of our schools, was in town Monday.

—It looks like the old days, to see wood hauled to town "sled length."

—J. R. Skilling of Garrett, was visiting relatives at Summit last Sunday.

—Mrs. John Leas is reported some better, but the improvement is very slow.

—Miss Fanny Clark entertained a few invited guests one evening last week.

—Johnny Beidler is temporarily at the Long's hotel, Newt Hall having taken a furlough for a few days.

—Mrs. Ed. Smith, of Pierceton, is visiting her sisters, Mrs. Barns and Mrs. Kelly his week.

—The running gears of a saw mill, are on the "Y" at the Jackson depot, awaiting the owner

—G. W. Trout has left for parts unknown, after appropriating a considerable sum of money belonging to H. E. Trout.

—Mr. Lamport, principal of the schools, is preparing for the teachers' meeting, to be held here one week from Saturday.

—Our city dads had an informal meeting Tuesday evening, to discuss the omitted tax matter, but came to no conclusion.

—Frank Swartz, the butcher, has been trying conclusions with a stick of wood. If his eye had been an inch higher he would now be in half darkness.

—We need a few more fire cisterns in various parts of town. Had there been a fire during the dry season, this winter, it might have proved a serious matter for those at a distance from the cisterns.

—There was an alarm of fire on Monday evening, at about ten o'clock. Cause, the burning of the chimney in the masonic lodge room, in the Abbey block. The engine was promptly on hand, as usual, but fortunately was not needed.

—Some one borrowed the water-pitcher, water and all, at Long's Hotel, the night of the fire alarm. No criminal intent, however, but for use at the fire. Every little helps. However, the patrons of that popular resort, may rest assured that Ed. will attend to their wants, fire or no fire.

Another Candidate.

By a large majority the people of the United States have declared their faith in Kidney-Wort as a remedy for all the diseases of the kidneys and liver, some however, have disliked the trouble of preparing it from the dry form. For such a new candidate appears in the shape of Kidney-Wort in Liquid Form. It is very concentrated, is easily taken and is equally efficient as the dry. Try it.—Louisville Post.

Hurrah For Our Side!

Many people have lost their interest in politics and in amusements because they are so out of sorts and run down that they cannot enjoy anything. If such persons would only be wise enough to try that celebrated remedy Kidney-Wort and experience its tonic and renovating effects they would soon be hurrahing with the loudest. In either dry or liquid form it is a perfect remedy for torpid liver, kidneys or bowels.—Exchange.

Town Teachers' Association.

On Saturday, March 5, 1881, the Town Teachers' Association will hold their regular meeting in the school building at Waterloo, where the exercises will be conducted according to the following:

PROGRAMME.

10—10:30, T. J. Saxton—What should be taught in graded schools, and methods of teaching.

10:30—11, Henry Coe—Incentives, prizes and rewards.

11—11:30, F. A. Brink—The use and abuse of emulation.

11:30—12, Miss Emma Mills—Treatment of the stubborn and refractory, corporal punishment and suspension.

AFTERNOON.

1:30—2, Laura E. Clark—Methods of teaching arithmetic in primary grades.

2—2:30, Mrs. A. L. Lamport—The assistance of professional literature to practical workers.

2:30—3, Millie Kester—How can the objects of school instruction be best attained.

3—3:30, Maggie Dolan—The relation of early training to later high education.

3:30—4, M. W. Johnston—Comparative advantage of the study of language to mathematics.

4—4:30, A. K. Grubb—The teacher, the molder of character.

All teachers and friends to progressive education, are invited to attend our meeting, and to take part in our discussion.

W. H. MCINTOSH, President.
A. L. LAMPORT, Secretary.

Examination Of Teachers.

Examinations for the year commencing June 1, 1879, will be held regularly, in the school building south of the jail, in Auburn, the last Saturday of each month. Special examinations at other points on due notice.

W. H. MACINTOSH.

KIDNEY-WORT
THE ONLY MEDICINE
IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM
That Acts at the Same Time on The Liver,
The Bowels,
and the Kidneys.
These great organs are the natural cleansers of the system. If they work well, health will be perfect: if they become clogged dreadful diseases are sure to follow with TERRIBLE SUFFERING.
Biliousness, Headache, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, Kidney Complaints, Gravel, Diabetes, Rheumatic Pains or Aches, are developed because the blood is poisoned with the humors that should be expelled naturally.
KIDNEY-WORT WILL RESTORE
the healthy action and all these destroying evils will be banished; neglect them and you will live but to suffer.
Thousands have been cured. Try it and you will add one more to the number. Take it and health will once more gladden your heart.
Why suffer longer from the torment of an aching back?
Why bear such distress from Constipation and Piles?
KIDNEY-WORT will cure you. Try it at once and be satisfied. Your druggist has it. Price $1.00.
It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.
Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated for the convenience of those who cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

He died within half an hour....Charles Colton, Treasurer of the Dollar Savings Bank, at Hartford, Ct., whose death is announced, was the seventh in direct line from one of the pilgrims who came to Massachusetts bay in 1640....Peter Cooper's 90th birthday received fitting celebration in New York. He sent a check for $10,000 to the trustees of the Cooper Institute....A tank of the Standard Oil Company, at Bayonneport, N. J., exploded and took fire, several thousand barrels of naphtha being consumed.

F. A. McLAIN started from Bradford, Pa., for Aiken with 200 pounds of nitro-glycerine in a cutter. His horse evidently ran away, as after an explosion only pieces of flesh remained of the outfit....A committee of directors of the Permanent Exhibition of Philadelphia voted to sell the building, which was the main structure of the Centennial.

THE exports from New York since the 1st of January, exclusive of specie, are valued at $51,000,000, against $42,000,000 worth during the corresponding period of last year, and $41,000,000 during the same period of 1879.... By an explosion at Logan & Sons' oil works, at Hunter's Point, N. Y., three men were fatally injured....The billiard match between Jacob Schaefer and William Sexton, in New York city, resulted in favor of Schaefer, who won by four points. New Yorkers say it was the finest game ever played.

THE bark Hazard, of Salem, Mass., was wrecked off Nantucket, and seven of her crew drowned....Pierce's Palace Hotel, of Buffalo, N. Y., one of the finest structures of the kind in the country, and valued at $500,000 has been destroyed by fire....The Convent of the Good Shepherd, the principal female Catholic school there was also burned.... The heavy ice blocks in New York bay and Long Island sound have done much damage to the docks. Several of them will have to be rebuilt in consequence....It is reported from New York that Jay Gould and Russell Sage have obtained control of the New Jersey Central road.

AN immense project has been undertaken by the firm of Henry Disston & Sons and other capitalists, of Philadelphia. It is to drain and reclaim the vast tract of swamp land in Florida known as "The Everglades." The capital stock of the company is $10,000,000, and the work is to be performed under contract with the State of Florida.... Thomas Moore, President of the Youghiogheny Coal Company of Pennsylvania, has given some spicy testimony before the Philadelphia Common Council committee to investigate charges against the management of the gas works of that city. He agreed to supply the works with coal at $5 per ton, but his bid was rejected, he having refused to make the bid $6.10 and divide the extra $1.10 per ton at the suggestion of a "ring." The city has already lost $200,000 through the rascality of its officers in the item of coal alone.

THE WEST.

THIRTEEN miles from Santa Fe, N. M., Julian Vigil, Mexican, killed his wife and young daughter, chopping them with an ax, and severely wounded his son, leaving him for dead. The man then hung himself to a rafter in the same room. Cause, insanity produced by liquor.

THE interior of the Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, in Chicago, was destroyed by an incendiary fire. The loss was about $60,000. ....Six laborers were burned to death by an explosion in the Belmont mine, near Helena, M. T....Omaha is to have a grain elevator with a capacity of 600,000 bushels. The Union Pacific railway will subscribe $60,000 toward its construction and leading citizens have pledged $40,000.

THE terrible severity of the past winter in Montana is thus stated by a correspondent in Helena, Mon., under date of Feb. 13: "This Territory will lose at least one-fourth of all its stock, both cattle and sheep. The snow in most places is three feet deep, and often from nine to twelve feet. Cattle with sufficient remaining strength will often follow a load of hay coming into market fifteen and twenty miles, with the hope of catching a stray bite. The streets are full of dying animals. Fifty died the other day, all in one lot, just outside the town. I fear this last snow will finish all. It has snowed every day for seven days."... Since Dec. 1 over $1,000,000 has been disbursed for pensions at the Chicago agency.... A bill has been presented in the Illinois State Senate, providing that children may be taken away from drunken, brutal or negligent parents, and placed under proper guardians.

SMALL-POX is raging at Calliope, a village in Sioux county, Iowa. Sixteen cases occurred there in one day recently. It is impossible to obtain nurses to attend the sick or undertakers to bury the dead....After a two weeks' struggle the Kansas Legislature passed what is known as the Ironclad Temperance bill by a vote of 103 to 21.

EIGHTEEN THOUSAND families, are suffering in the Kansas counties of Pratt, Ellis, Rush, Phillips, Graham, Decatur, Norton, Sheridan, Trego and Osborne, and measures are being taken to distribute the $25,000 recently appropriated by the State Legislature among them....Charles Swagart went uninvited to a dance near Webster, Clarke county, Ohio. He fired a pistol into the ceiling with the intention of frightening the dancers. Lewis Christian resented his action, and shot him dead.

THE SOUTH.

IN a case brought by a railroad stockholder against the Railroad Commission of Georgia, Judge Woods fully sustained the latter in prescribing freight and passenger tariffs, on the ground that the roads are subject to Legislative control unless protected by their charters....Twenty convicts, at work in a tunnel near Ashville, N. C., were buried under a mass of earth which fell into the cut. Four were killed and several injured.

THE murder of F. H. Petterson, of Madison, Fla., by a negro named Savage, created intense excitement. The assassin was sent to jail, and the Governor sent two militia companies to keep guard over him....A volcano has been discovered in the Allegheny mountains, in Fayette county, Va. Steam rises in considerable volume, and stones thrown in were heard plunging down the abyss for several seconds.

THE Pope has appointed Vicar General Janssens, of Richmond, Bishop of Natchez. J. C. Neeze is to be Bishop of San Antonio.... A tornado sweeping through the pines of North Carolina crushed a rude hut occupied by turpentine makers, killing ten of them and seriously wounding three others....A loss of $50,000 was sustained at Charleston, S. C., by the burning of two bag factories.

GEORGE E. WEBSTER'S cotton warehouse at Columbus, Ga., occupied by Allen & Crawford, has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $70,000....Advices from Alabama show that the murder of the Rev. Mr. Pickens, late Greenback candidate for Governor, was a brutal assassination. Mr. Pickens was acting as a peacemaker in a deadly quarrel between two men, when one of the bystanders shot him down.

A NUMBER of Swiss farmers of the better class have determined to settle on land in Eastern Kentucky. A number of the colonists have already arrived. The bulk of them will come in April....The proposed amendment to the constitution of West Virginia prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating drinks was defeated in the Senate of that State

WASHINGTON.

MR. ROBERT P. PORTER, chief of the wealth, debt and taxation division of the Census Bureau, has issued a preliminary report upon 300 cities having a population of over 7,500 each. The statement is a startling one. The bonded debt of these cities aggregates $654,000,000, and there are 6,000 smaller cities and towns yet to be heard from. The per-capita debt of the Eastern cities is $62, of those in the Middle States $75, and of those in the South $56, while in the West the per-capita debt is only about $32. Mr. Porter estimates the entire local indebtedness—State, county and city—of the United States at over $1,200,000,000....The Senate Committee on Territories will report in favor of creating the Territory of Pembina from the northern half of Dakota.

IT is reported that Speaker Randall is firmly opposed to any greater rate of interest than 3 per cent. in the refunding measure, and that in the conference committee appointed by him no compromise will be thought of.

GEN. THOMAS C. CRITTENDEN is to be placed on the retired list, with the rank and pay of Brigadier General....Representative Tucker, of Virginia, becomes Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, vice the Hon. Fernando Wood, deceased.

PRESIDENT HAYES has nominated Daniel N. Bash, of Illinois, as Paymaster of the United States navy....The Greenbackers are working industriously with the view of presenting a compact front in the next House and their holding the balance of power. Messrs. Weaver and Gillette, whose terms expire with this Congress, will devote their energies to keeping their party organized.

POLITICAL.

SAMUEL W. KING, the Democratic candidate for Mayor of Philadelphia, was elected over Mayor Stokeley....The Maine State Senate has declared against woman suffrage....Robert W. Lyon, Democrat, has been elected Mayor of Pittsburgh, by a majority of 1,500. All the other city officers elected were Republican.

THE Michigan Greenback State Convention was held at Lansing, Feb. 16. A permanent organization was effected, and the following nominations were made: For Judge of the Supreme Court, John B. Chipman, of Coldwater; for Regents of the University, Charles G. Willets, of Gratiot county, and David Parsons, of Wayne. The convention then reaffirmed the Chicago platform, and adopted a resolution sympathizing with the Irish cause.

THE Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, who was elected to Congress from one of the Brooklyn districts as an Independent candidate, has written to a Republican Congressman to say that he will act with the Republicans in organizing the next House, and on political questions generally....It is said that Senator Davis, of Illinois, will vote with the Democrats in organizing the next Senate.

GENERAL.

THE extraordinary weather of the current season culminated on Saturday, the 12th inst., in one of the most furious snow-storms ever known throughout the Western States, and in heavy rains, consequent floods, and extensive damage in the Eastern States. The rains in the East, following the partial thaw, swelled the rivers, and all the principal cities along the Potomac, the Pennsylvania rivers, and other streams, had their streets turned into temporary canals. The extraordinary sight was witnessed in Washington city of tow-boats employed in transferring passengers along Pennsylvania avenue. Three spans of Long bridge were washed away. At Toledo, Ohio, the water in the streets was five feet deep. Boats, barges and schooners were caught in the ice gorges, and many of them sunk. Trains could not leave as the tracks were flooded or strewed with debris, the bridges dangerous or swept away. Several freight cars lying on the tracks were submerged and their contents damaged. From Trenton, N. J., it is reported that the ice on its way down the Delaware river crushed everything in its track. Bridges on country roads and railroad bridges were swept away by thousands throughout Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey. An iron span 200 feet long and weighing 400 tons, belonging to the Pennsylvania railway bridged at Toledo, was thrown by the ice directly into the channel of the Maumee river. Reports on Monday are as follows: "The flooded districts report a material improvement in condition. The streets of Washington are again passable. The Maumee has fallen nearly two feet at Toledo, but trains are forced to take a circuitous route. The Ohio river touches the curb at the foot of Main street in Cincinnati. Gen. Cyrus Bussey urges that 10,000 men be set at work on the levees at New Orleans. Deadwood reports three feet of snow and a blinding storm. On the Burlington road in Iowa the snow is as high as the car-tops."....The police of Montreal have traced out several mysterious burglaries by finding a grocer's wagon at the door of a wholesale house at midnight. The grocery proved to be only a fence for the stolen goods, of which large quantities were recovered.

HON. FERNANDO WOOD, of New York, He was born in Philadelphia, of Quaker parents, expired the other night, at Hot Springs, Ark. When but 28 years of age he was elected to Congress, in which he served ten terms. In 1850 he retired from mercantile pursuits with a fortune, and in 1854 was elected Mayor of New York. CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The House bill granting public lands in Dakota, Arizona, Montana and Wyoming Territories for university purposes was passed by the Senate on Friday, Feb. 11. Mr. Hoar introduced a resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to take into consideration the danger arising from the presence of large bodies of armed State militia at Presidential inaugurations. In a personal statement Mr. Dawes declared that Secretary Schurz had stood in the way of all redress to the Poncas. Mr. Conkling submitted a resolution of inquiry as to the collection of tolls on the Kanawha river. Senator Wallace urged a return to the district system of voting for President. A test vote on the Post-office Appropriation shows that the steamship subsidy of $1,000,000 will pass. The session of the House was devoted to private bills, among them being one to make Indianapolis a port of delivery. An ineffectual attempt was made to put through the Chicago lake-front measure. The Committee on Appropriations reported in favor of the appropriation for the Jeannette search expedition.

The credentials of Senators-elect Platt, of New York, and Bayard, of Delaware, were presented to the Senate, on Saturday, Feb. 12. Mr. Morgan, on behalf of the committee having charge of the matter, stated that no proposition relative to the election of Presidents and Vice Presidents would be reported this session. Mr. Kernan reported favorably the joint resolution inviting foreign nations to take part in the international exhibition. A bill was passed for the protection of officers of the United States in the performance of their official duties. Resolutions fixing the hour of meeting hereafter at 11, and limiting debate on motion to take up a bill or resolution to fifteen minutes, and five minutes to each speaker, were adopted. The postal bill was taken up, and Mr. Hampin's amendment, appropriating $1,000,000 for ocean mail service, was ruled out. The bill was discussed until the discovery was made that no quorum was present. The House of Representatives, by an almost-unanimous vote, tabled the bill in aid of the Tehuantepec Ship railway. The bill regulating the imports of materials used in the construction or repair of vessels engaged in the foreign trade was slightly amended and passed. The Senate bill amending the charter of the Freedmen's Savings Bank passed. The River and Harbor bill was taken up, and three of its forty pages were disposed of.

Numbers of petitions from temperance organizations in various States praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors were presented to the Senate, on Monday, the 14th inst. Mr. Saunders reported back the bill establishing the Territory of Pembina, and it was placed on the calendar. Mr. Booth reported with a favorable recommendation the resolutions authorizing the payment of prize money to the officers of the Farragut fleet. They were adopted. The postal bill was then taken up, and the steamship subsidy amendment further discussed, and finally laid on the table by a vote of 34 to 14. The bill was then reported to the Senate and passed. The refunding bill was taken up and informally laid over. The cattle disease bill was under consideration when the death of the Hon. Fernando Wood was announced, and the Senate adjourned. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Stephenson presented the resolutions of the Illinois Legislature relative to railroad discrimination and commerce between States. The Senate amendments to the joint resolution inviting France to join with the United States in celebrating the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown were concurred in. Mr. Hill reported back the resolutions declaring the policy of the United States in regard to the inter-oceanic canals. The House went into committee of the whole on the Senate bill to provide for funding the 3-per-cent. certificates of the District of Columbia, but took no action on the matter. Bills were introduced, fixing the first Monday in November as the time for the assembling of Congress, and to admit free articles intended for the International Exhibition of 1883. Resolutions respecting the death of the Hon. Fernando Wood were passed, and the House adjourned.

On the opening of the Senate on the morning of Tuesday, Feb. 15, the Military Committee reported favorably the bill to place Thomas C. Crittenden upon the retired list of the army with the rank and pay of a Brigadier General. Mr. Hereford presented a resolution of the Legislature of West Virginia favoring a law for the regulation of inter-State railway traffic. Mr. McDonald introduced a resolution relative to the equalization of taxation, which was laid over. The Cattle Disease bill, which was the regular order, was laid aside, and the Funding bill taken up. Mr. Bayard spoke in explanation of the amendments made by the Finance Committee. He advocated a 3-20 bond at 3½ per cent. interest, and opposed the clause making only the new bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation. The principal debate was in reference to the rate of interest, and it continued without result until the adjournment. The Committee on Elections reported to the House upon the contested-election case of McCabe versus Orth, from the Ninth Indiana district, confirming Orth's title to the seat. It was concurred in. The morning hour was occupied principally by a discussion on a point of order, which was left unsettled. Brief addresses were made on the acceptance of the statue of Jacob Collamer, of Vermont. The House then went into committee of the whole on the River and Harbor bill. Several amendments were proposed and rejected, and finally, without action on the bill, the committee rose. As less than a quorum had voted on the last amendment, the Sergeant-at-Arms was dispatched in search of absent members. Two or three hours passed in a vain attempt to secure a quorum or reach an agreement by which the session might be closed. Finally a recess was taken until morning.

The Committee on Foreign Relations reported to the Senate, on Wednesday, Feb. 16, a resolution that the United States Government insists that its consent must be obtained as a condition precedent to the construction of a ship canal or any other work for the transportation of sea-going vessels across the Isthmus of Panama. The Fortifications bill was reported and placed on the calendar. It was resolved to hold night sessions hereafter for the consideration of measures on the calendar. Mr. McDonald, of Indiana, made a speech on the inequality of taxation. He condemned the present tariff system, and defended the free-trade plank of the Democratic platform adopted at Cincinnati. A prolonged debate on the Funding bill was next in order, in which Mr. Hereford, referring to the issue of silver certificates, said Secretary Sherman was neither a competent nor a trustworthy adviser. Mr. Allison thought the Secretary of the Treasury should not be restricted to sales at par. Mr. Bayard announced that he would press the measure to a vote next day. The House of Representatives devoted the entire day and night to the consideration of the River and Harbor bill. The opposition to the measure was led by Mr. Updegraff, of Iowa, who criticised almost every item as it was read. Innumerable amendments were offered, but nearly all were rejected. Those which were agreed to were, in most cases, merely explanatory of the manner in which certain appropriations contained in the bill should be expended.

In the Federal Senate bills were favorably reported on Thursday, the 17th inst., for Government buildings at Terre Haute, Ind., and Columbus, Ohio. In the debate on the Funding bill, Mr. Logan favored a fixed rate of 3½ per cent., and Mr. Cockrell expressed his belief that a 3-per-cent. bond could be floated at par. By a vote of 22 to 33 an amendment favoring 3½ per cent. was lost. It was voted that the bonds run from five to twenty years, and that public subscriptions be received. Mr. Kirkwood offered an amendment, which was adopted, providing that the general public be given an opportunity to subscribe for the new bonds for thirty days before any contract should be made with a syndicate. Mr. Voorhees introduced a resolution, which was passed, calling on the Judiciary Committee to introduce a bill immediately to protect farmers and others from imposition at the hands of patent-right swindlers and others of that ilk. The joint resolution was adopted authorizing the placing of books and ornaments in the possession of the Government relating to the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in the Memorial Hall of the national Lincoln Monument at Springfield, Ill. The House of Representatives adopted a resolution authorizing the payment of $2,300 to Frank Hurd, as counsel in the case of Hallett Kilbourne vs. J. G. Thompson, J. M. Glover and others. The River and Harbor bill was then taken up and passed by a vote of 163 to 94. The conference report on the Consular and Diplomatic bill was agreed to. The Apportionment bill came up, and, after a short debate, was temporarily laid aside. Mr. Cox had intended to move the previous question, but, at the request of the Republicans, who wished to consider the bill in caucus, he consented to let the debate run on until Saturday. The conference report on the Pension bill was adopted. A message from the President asking an immediate appropriation to provide for the proper representation of the United States at the international monetary conference was read and referred.

Customs of the Savages.

Among the many strange customs of savage nations, not the least curious are the ceremonious observances offered by them to the wild beasts which they hunt and kill. The boldest native hunters of British India would shudder at the thought of leaving the corpse of a slain tiger till they have singed off its whiskers to the very root, without which precaution they firmly believe that the ghost of the dead monster will haunt them into their graves. In many parts of Russia, the killing of a wolf is not thought complete without the cutting off of the head and right fore-paw. The Lapps and Fins, whenever they kill a bear, surround the body with loud lamentations. One hunter then asks the dead beast,

"Who killed thee?'

Another hunter answers,

"A Russian."

Then all the rest exclaim in chorus:

"A cruel deed, a bloody deed!"

They hope by this means to divert the bear's resentment from themselves to the imaginary Russian. Skulls of brown bears, nailed to the trees by the Indians, in compliance with some native superstition, are often found by Canadian camping parties in the woods around Lake Simcoe; and the tribes of Northern Siberia never kill a polar bear without extracting its two largest teeth, which in their belief, is the only safeguard against its coming to life.

Absinthe.

About a century ago, absinthe, which is an extract of wormwood, was proclaimed by its discoverer as a heal-all, in much the same manner as the patent-medicine man of our day vaunts the curative properties of his nostrums. It was first made in the Canton of Neufchatel, in Switzerland, by a Dr. Ordinaire. His patients took to this medicine so kindly that the doctor made a small fortune. At his death he gave the recipe to his housekeeper, and she disposed of it to a third party, who increased its sale by distributing it through the neighboring country. The recipe, however, again changed hands, and, although the demand for the liquor was not large at first, it gradually increased until "Extract d' Absinthe" came into almost universal use in France. Dr. Ordinaire's opinion of the properties of his medicine was either a singularly fallacious one, or the art of making absinthe has been lost, as it is now considered to be the most dangerous stimulant a person can habitually use.

OF a miserly man somebody wrote: "His head gave way, but his hand never did. His brain softened, but his heart couldn't."

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, Feb. 11.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the bill providing for the resubmission of the constitutional amendments by a vote of 28 to 22. All the Republicans voted for it, together with Senators Poindexter and Davis, two Nationals, and Senators Woods and Viehe, two Democrats. Then Senator Brown's bill providing for a Constitutional Convention was taken up and defeated by a vote of 28 to 22. The same Senators voted against it that voted in favor of resubmitting the amendments. Monday, April 4, is the date of the election on the amendments.

HOUSE.—There was some debate in the House over the bill authorizing the election of women as school officers, and a resolution was adopted in the committee of the whole recommending its passage. A bill was introduced authorizing notaries public to perform the marriage ceremony. The 6 per cent. interest measure was called up, and an effort made to increase the rate to 7 per cent., and also providing against interference with existing contracts, but the amendment failed, 46 to 39. The Female Suffrage bill was made the special order for Wednesday, and the free-toll road scheme went over until Thursday. Bills were introduced protecting wild game, tinkering with the fees of Clerks and Recorders, and relinquishing the title of the State in the bed of Beaver lake, in Newton county. Bills were passed: Authorizing the Auditor of Dearborn county to report to the Superintendent of Public Instruction in relation to school funds; establishing a Superior Court in Vanderburgh county; authorizing the sale of State lands in Porter county.

In the afternoon both branches met in joint convention, and by a party vote elected Joel J. Finney, of Wayne, Director of the Prison South, and A. C. Beeson, of Randolph, W. T. Horine, of Lake, and Leopold Levi, of Huntington, for the Prison North.

SATURDAY, Feb. 12.—SENATE.—The Senate engrossed the bill increasing the per diem of the Speaker of the House to $10, and indefinitely postponed the proposition making all judgments collectable without relief from valuation or appraisement laws. Senator Wood's resolution calling for a survey of the Kankakee swamp lands for drainage purposes was recommended to lie on the table, but was afterward taken up. A number of bills were advanced a stage, and adjournment followed until Monday afternoon.

HOUSE.—The House engrossed the wife-whipping bill after voting down an amendment by Lindley, of Hamilton, that the wife injured shall do the whipping. A bill was introduced recognizing the public school, as suggested by the Revision Committee. Adjourned.

MONDAY, Feb. 14.—SENATE.—The Senate held a short session, and the consideration of the bill authorizing the purchase and maintenance of full-toll roads elicited a spirited discussion. So, also, the bill appropriating $6,000 for the improvement of the Calumet river. Both were engrossed. The customary amount of new bills were introduced, the only one of importance being an act repealing the law enabling counties to aid in the construction of railroads.

HOUSE.—The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the bills resubmitting the constitutional amendments, and changed the date of popular election from April 4 to March 14. The investigating committee made a report commending the general management of the House of Refuge, and favoring an appropriation of $45,000. A petition was received from numerous mechanics asking that the laboring men be protected from competition with convict labor, as it is impossible for honest labor to survive when contractors can employ convicts at 45 cents per day. The Prison Committee was given permission to visit the Northern Prison on Wednesday.

TUESDAY, Feb. 15.—SENATE.—The Senate session was interesting to-day, owing to the spirited discussion of several measures, notably the bill providing for the care and maintenance of abandoned children. The bill providing for non-payment of notes secured under false pretenses was engrossed. This measure is specially applicable to notes secured by "hay-fork" agents. The bills removing disabilities of coverture were made the special order for Tuesday. The resolution looking to the perpetuation of the memory of Indiana soldiers by a memorial in the State House corner-stone went over until Wednesday of next week. Consideration of female suffrage went over until Thursday. The committee made a favorable report on the measure providing that hunting and fishing on the Sabbath shall be considered a special misdemeanor. By a decisive vote the Senate declined to concur in the House resolution to petition Congress to legislate in favor of the Wabash and Erie canal.

HOUSE.—Forty-four new bills were introduced. The committee reported favorably on the bill reorganizing the management of the benevolent institutions, and the same was engrossed. A resolution passed calling for an itemized report of receipts and expenditures of the Terre Haute Normal School and the Bloomington University. The new criminal code and insurance bills were introduced. Also bills compelling railroad companies to transport freight in the order in which it is offered for shipment; reducing salaries of Trustees of benevolent institutions to $100 and prison Directors to $150 per annum; authorizing the appointment of a Superintendent and Board of Managers to prepare for the World's Fair in 1883, and appropriating $20,000; preventing and punishing the adulteration of food, drink and medicines, and constituting the Governor and State officers a Commission on Claims. A resolution favoring the taxation of United States treasury notes was adopted by 43 to 32. Among the claims presented was a demand from Clarke county for money expended in convicting William Kennedy, a prisoner in the penitentiary south, who murdered his keeper. A joint resolution passed asking Congress to open to settlers that portion of Okahoma not belonging to Indians. Afterward, however, the vote was reconsidered, and the resolution referred to the Committee on Federal Relations. Mr. Berryman, of Shelby, introduced a bill giving the right to advertise legal notices in whatever paper the person desired, at such prices as are mutually agreed upon.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 16.—SENATE.—The Senate was occupied largely in considering the amendments to the code, as reported by the revision committee. The amendatory sections were accepted as a rule. The House joint resolution calling for Government aid to the Wabash and Erie canal was withdrawn from the table and adopted unanimously. The bill establishing a State Board of Health was ordered to be taken up to-morrow. During the session ex-Vice President Colfax appeared upon the floor, and was accorded an exceedingly-flattering reception.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced: To appoint State examiners of county office books; constituting a State board of visitors for the benevolent, penal and reformatory institutions. A resolution calling for a reform of national shipping laws was referred. A recess was taken to enable Mrs. Dr. Haggart and Mrs. Helen M. Gougar to advocate the passage of the bill granting women the right to vote at Presidential elections. Upon reassembling the friends of the bill attempted to cut off debate and crowd the passage, but were voted down, 49 to 35, and further argument was made the special order for Tuesday night. The Compulsory Education bill went over until Wednesday.

THURSDAY, Feb. 17.—SENATE.—The Senate gave the female-suffrage advocates a hearing to-day, and Mrs Mary Haggart and Mrs. Helen M. Gougar presented the claims of the ladies. A motion for immediate consideration of the bill was peremptorily voted down, and, by consent, it went over until the 25th. A greater part of the day was taken up in considering the amendments to the Civil Code.

HOUSE.—The Tax bill was taken up by the House, and 145 sections accepted, with little amendment, as proposed by the codification committee. The bill for the purchase of roads was made the special order for Monday afternoon. A night session was ordered, but not held for want of a quorum.

Put a Stop to It.

A Frenchman whose wife was about to present him with the fond appellation of "father," retired to await the happy moment, and with some friends to drink long life and a noble to the first born. The punch bowl scattered its inviting fumes most prodigally around the company, and anxiety was manifested by all, when in ran Betty Lightfoot, exclaiming:

"Joy, joy, sir! I give you joy."

"Vat is he, Betty, vat is he?"

"A fine boy, sir."

"Health to the young Marquis!" exclaimed one, and bumpers went around.

"Betty, you must drink von life to the jung Marhuis."

Betty raised the glass to her lips, when in rushed the nurse:

"Joy, joy, sir, I give you joy!"

"Vat—vat—is the matter?"

"A fine girl, sir!"

"Betty," said the Frenchman, looking stern, "vat for you say no true?"

"Oh," said the nurse, "a boy first and a girl afterward."

"Vat, two—von boy—von fille?"

"Two, sir," added the dame, and helping herself to a glass, was swinging it off, when in popped another:

"Sacre!" exclaimed the Frenchman, "vat, more joy?"

"Another fine boy, sir!"

"Vat the diable—vou girl—von boy—von garcon tree times! Mon Dieu!" bewaled the poor Frenchman. "By gar, it will never do. I must go and put a stop to it!"

The French Dickens.

Speaking of Zola and his style, the London correspondent of the Troy Times says: He calls himself a naturalist (sic) because his object in many of his volumes has been to represent human nature as he found it. I have no doubt, after reading his works, that many of his delineations of character are perfectly true to nature; but what kind of nature is it? Where has he gone for his subjects? Like Dickens, to the lower strata of society, but unlike the English novelist, he has not, in most instances, selected the best types he could find there, but vilest, the most wretched, the most dejected. There is a resemblance between him and Dickens in another respect. He is a marvelous word-spinner. He takes twenty pages to tell a thing that another could tell better in twenty lines. The resemblance holds good in yet another respect. He is most popular with the people. "L'Assommoir" has run through eighty editions in three years, and "Nana," a vile book, bids fair to outstrip even that. M. Zola is, besides, a journalist, and great critic on almost every subject. And, if one can believe half that is said, the most remarkable thing about him is his self-conceit and assurance. Bear witness this stanza:

> Monsieur Zola n'est pas un homme
> Ordinaire, croyez-le bien;
> Si 'on vous dit qu'il mange comme
> Tout un chacun, n'en croyez-rien!
> Il se nourrit de la nature
> Et ne vent d'autre nourriture!
> Monsieur Zola.
> Prenez-garde, Monsieur Zola,
> C'est du tchu mets, celui-là!

The sarcasm in these lines is splendid, but untranslatable. I will tell your readers more about M. Zola in my next letter.

The Unlucky M.

Capt. John N. Bofinger, a steamboat man of St. Louis, well known throughout the South and West, has been devoting much time to the history of steamboats. He has found that steamers, and especially Western river steamers, whose names begin with "M," are very unlucky. If they have not been sunk, burned or destroyed by boiler explosions, their owners have met with financial disaster through their means. As proof of what he avers to be true he cites innumerable Magnolias, Missouris, Magentas, Marys, Myrtles, Massachusetts, Metropolises, Marigolds, Mississippis, Mayflowers, Monitors, Monticellos, and others with initial "M," all of which have come to grief.

FORTUNE has been considered the guardian divinity of fools, and on this score she has been accused of blindness; but it should rather be adduced as a proof of her sagacity when she helps those who certainly cannot help themselves.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1881.

A WOLF bit sixteen persons in a village near Naples, nine of whom died of hydrophobia.

THE butchers of Milan have invented a process of killing their cattle by launching a projectile against their foreheads; they oppose throat-cutting.

A CONGRESSMAN asked Delegate Cannon, the Mormon representative, how many wives he had. "I have enough to keep me from interfering with the wives of other men," was Cannon's quick rejoinder.

WM. FERGUSON, aged 80 years, of Lancaster county, Pa., recently married Mrs. Margaret B. Wilson, 70 years old, of Wilmington, Del. It is said that they were engaged fifty years ago, but a quarrel arose that separated them.

FAIR, the new Senator from Nevada, is in the habit of calling everybody "sonny," and the Cleveland Herald thinks it would be worth a circus ticket to take a look at Fair's remains after his "sonnying" of Senator Conkling.

DR. HIRAM SHAFFER is the leading physician at Wooster, Ohio. His wife objected to his visiting woman patients, and demanded that he should confine his practice to men. He refused to thus throw away more than half his income, and she has left him.

SPEAKING of our great wheat crops the American Miller remarks that few people in our own country realize how inexhaustible our resources are for wheat-growing. The total area of lands available for wheat culture in the United States is not less than 470,000,000 acres. Our entire wheat crop of the past year would not supply seed enough to sow so vast an area of wheat land.

THE DePauw Plate Glass Company, of New Albany, Ind., one of the largest plate-glass manufacturing concerns in the world, are to remove their works to Pittsburgh. Already the company has purchased thirty acres of land at the southern suburbs of the city. The company paid $500,000 for their works at New Albany, and the works at Louisville cost $200,000. They expect to save $125,000 a year in the cost of coal alone by removing to Pittsburgh.

THE Engineering News thinks that the great railroad crash in England, under Hudson, styled the railway king, is recalled by existing speculation. Hudson used to make $500,000 a day by the rise of shares in the lines he controlled. In 1845 more than $600,000,000 were subscribed in England by all classes of people for railroad shares; but the famine swiftly followed, and after $800,000,000 had been actually expended on railroads, a commercial panic set in, followed by the Chartist riots in 1848.

SOME one remarks that the lucky name in this country is James. Gen. Garfield will be the fifth President of that name, his predecessors being Madison, Monroe, Polk, and Buchanan. No other name occurs half as frequently in the list of Presidents. There have been but three Johns—the two Adamses and Tyler—and the only other name repeated is Andrew, which was borne by Jackson and his admirer and unsuccessful imitator, Johnson. The names which occur but once in the list are George Thomas, Martin, William, Zachary Millard, Franklin, Abraham, Ulysses and Rutherford.

THERE are many persons in the West who believe in the curative powers of the mad stone. A man who was bitten by a mad pig near Tecumseh, Neb., traveled all the way to Savannah, Mo., to try the famous mad stone owned by old Uncle John Nelson. The stone immediately adhered to the wound, which is said to be proof positive that the patient's blood was poisoned, and remained clinging to the sore from early morning until sundown, when it dropped off. The patient departed feeling that he had been cured. Uncle John Nelson has owned his mad stone since 1848, and has used it in over a hundred cases where men have been bitten. He avers that it never failed to work a cure.

PRUSSIAN manufacturers and mechanics are combining in an agitation against competitive prison labor. The German empire is the scene of multifarious agitations at this moment; socialistic and anti-socialistic, anti-Jewish, anti-Catholic, and anti-Russian, against the military system, against free trade, and very decidedly against the importation of American food products. Ten years of the iron rule of Bismarck has failed to realize for Germany the glorious future that was predicted for it. Perhaps Bismarck finds it very convenient to foster the anti-Jewish or any other agitation that will serve to draw attention away from the results of his own administration.

BECAUSE he bore the name of Thomas, a citizen of Halberstadt, Germany, has committed suicide. After the explosion of Thomassen's infernal machine, in the harbor of Bremen, he applied to the Government for leave to change his name, but permission was denied. He was so distressed by this refusal and by the jests he had to bear in consequence that he withdrew wholly from social intercourse and became moody and misanthropic. Finally he determined to seek relief in death, and, after several attempts at suicide which were frustrated, succeeded in hanging himself. He took care, in preparing for his end, to burn up his valuables, so that no human creature should derive benefit from them.

BY far the most accurate estimate of future population ever made in this country, or any other, was made by a man named Watson in 1815. As his predictions were published that year there can be no doubt of the genuineness of his "guesses." He predicted that the population in 1880 would be 56,450,000. Of course he did not calculate on the war, and hence he missed the mark some 5,000,000. To show, however, that it was the war which put Watson off the track, it is only necessary to compare the figures of those remarkable predictions with the actual result. The prophecies were made in 1815, and here is the striking manner in which successive censuses have shown their accuracy:

	Watson's Predictions.	Census of That Year.
1820	9,625,000	9,633,000
1830	12,833,000	12,864,000
1840	17,116,000	17,069,000
1850	23,185,000	23,191,000
1860	31,753,000	31,443,000

Here we find that, in 1815, Mr. Watson predicted within 300,000 of what the population of the United States would be in 1870, or forty-five years after the recording of his prophecy! As Gen. Walker says, in speaking of this matter, it almost staggers credulity. "That a man, a mere human being," says Gen. Walker, "should be able to predict fifty years in advance the number of inhabitants in a rapidly-growing country within a fraction of 1 per cent., seems wonderful beyond belief." Had the war not intervened, it is believed that Watson's predictions would have held good in 1870 and 1880. But in 1870 he was ahead of the census nearly 4,000,000, and in 1880 nearly 5,000,000. The losses of the war, direct and contingent, we can never know, but Watson's figures, almost absolutely accurate up to the war period, would show it to affect us the present year to the extent of nearly 5,000,000. That is, had there been no war, the present population of the United States would be about 55,000,000. Watson predicted that the population in 1900 would reach 100,000,000, but Gen. Walker does not believe that it will be over about 80,000,000.

Anecdote of Lord Redesdale.

Early one morning he made his way to the mansion of the Earl of Lucan. He had started for the races, and was dressed in sporting garb, his cap put on awry and a cigar between his lips. He rang at the front door, and the Earl's best man—an exquisite of the first water—answered the summons.

"Is the Earl at home?"

"No, sir! The Hearl is not at 'ome." He mistook the caller for a sportive servant, very likely seeking *hem*ployment.

"Do you know if he has gone to Windsor, my man?"

"No, I don't know hif 'e 'as gone to Windsor. But I'll tell you what I do know: You'd be a doin' of yerself a wast deal o' credit hif you'd honly just run around to the sign o' the Bell an' Crown, hand fetch me a pot of 'alf-an'-'alf."

"Hall right, where's your money?"

"Wy—bless you! I don't find money for them as I has to hanswer the bell for. 'Aven't you got a sixpenny bit of yer own?"

"I guess I can find one." And away his lordship went, really enjoying the thing, and shortly returned with a tankard of foaming half-an'-half.

The valet drank it with a keen relish—emptied the pot—and then offered to return it, with:

"There, my good fellow—I'm much—"

But the visitor put the pot back, and cut the speech short with:

"Return the tankard yourself, my man; and when your master returns, be kind enough to tell him that Lord Redesdale called."

His lordship left the dazed and confounded valet supporting himself against the door-post, the porter-pot fallen to the floor, his face the picture of horror and despair, looking for all the world like one who wished he had never been born!

The Rothschilds.

The founder of the great commercial house of the Rothschilds was Meyer Anselm Rothschild, who was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1743. He was intended for the Jewish ministry, but, being placed by his father in a counting-house in Hanover, he showed so great an aptitude for commercial pursuits that, having experienced his honesty and integrity in lesser matters, the Landgrave of Hesse appointed him, in 1801, banker to himself and his court. Nor was his confidence misplaced, for during the sway of Napoleon I. in Germany the Landgrave's private fortune was saved by the devotedness of his banker, whose name had become a tower of commercial strength all over Europe. At his death, Sept. 11, 1812, he left to his five sons not only the inheritance of an immense fortune and unbounded credit, but an unsullied reputation. The firms of the house were extended to Austria, France and England. The third son (Nathan), born in 1777, settled in London, where he died in 1836, his descendants still doing business there. Anselm settled in Frankfort, Solomon in Vienna, Charles in Naples, and James in Paris, where he died in 1868.

"THE HOUSE."

As Viewed from the Galleries.

(From Harper's Magazine.)

From the galleries of the House of Representatives popular government appears to consist of a confused mass of desks and desultory men—the desks littered with books and papers, and the men continually walking about in every direction; of a vast amount of private correspondence, a relay of page boys obeying a Turkish magnificence of clapped hands from this and that member to do his errands, and a monotonous droning by the clerks, together with a minimum of oratory. All this against a dignified background of cigar smoke in the lobbies, and of coat-rooms and barber shops, where Congressmen lounge and joke, or confer on coming measures. It is also apparent, from the amount of work done with the penknife, that the House is determined to have order as to its finger-nails, whatever may be the fate of public business in this respect. You hear some half-audible speaking, but general walking, talking and rustling suggest how Demosthenes, if he had enjoyed the privilege of a seat in this body, might have dispensed with the aid of the sea.

Then a division takes place, and members pour in from the lobbies, the restaurant, the committee-rooms, to pass like a drove of sheep between two tellers. The efforts of inexperienced or unimportant members to get attention are pathetic. One is perpetually swaggering about, but never speaks; another gets up and murmurs, but, being ignored by all parties, sits down, with a ghastly disappointment, and tries to look as if he did not feel he was being looked at; another, with Chadband hair, rises for information, asking, in a bland voice, a question so needless that some one on the other side answers it, to save the Speaker's time, and Chadband, after swaying uncertainly on his toes for an instant, subsides so abruptly that he can't at once recover the use of his limbs sufficiently to steal away toward a cloak-room. Yet at almost any moment, except in the "morning hour" and on "private-bill day," an exciting and masterly discussion may begin, which promptly fills the chairs and enchains every listener. The general demeanor of the House, too, is more business-like, excepting for the amount of preoccupation, than that of the House of Commons. Those who come to look on, with imaginations trained by history and the press, are grieved to go away without seeing a single member spring at another's throat, or even call him a liar. The homogeneity of the faces and persons on the floor is another point for remark. It is clear that Americans are Americans, however wide asunder their abodes may be, and it occurs to one that if the representatives of different sections were to get hopelessly mixed up and changed about the same day, it would produce no incongruity so far as their outward appearance is concerned. To imagine these comfortable gentlemen arrayed, in their frock-coats of identical make, on opposite sides in a civil war, or as the lawgivers of separate confederacies, would be grotesque, if the reality a few years ago had not been so tragic. A few distinctions of East and South and West may perhaps be traced in the physiognomies, but individual peculiarities assert themselves far more strongly. The man of the people, with his indifferent necktie and "well-met" manner; the smug, well-to-do lawyer; the "elegant speaker;" the richest members, with heads partially bald and faces seamed with fine wrinkles, wearing a look of long resignation to the collection of dividends; or the plethoric, rosy-faced man who gains his point by private champagne rather than public speech; the quiet gentleman of refined manners; and the gory antagonist—all these, and other types beside, may be sharply discriminated without regard to State or geographical lines. It has grown to be the fashion to say that Congress accomplishes nothing except to disturb trade, but if that is so, it is not due to idleness. Accomplishing nothing was never before so laborious a task. House members are the busiest people in the country, with their caucuses, their incessant committee meetings, their speeches and preparation, their dense correspondence with constituents, and interviews with visitors.

Burlington Society Notes.

The most stylish purse of the season is made of undressed sealskin, with nothing in it.

A novelty in neck lingerie for gentlemen is made of hemp or manila, and is so worn as to close up pretty snug when the gentleman steps through the trap. It is much affected in Nevada and New Mexico.

The engagement of Johnny Snebbly and Miss Lebechin will be announced as soon as Mr. Snebbly has got a lift in his salary to $11 a week.

Mrs. Isinglass held a brilliant reception in the back parlor of her fashionable hotel on Saturday evening last. She received $5.65 apiece from all her regular boarders except young Mr. Fasboy, who paid her 60 cents and a silver watch, and stood her off till next Saturday for the rest of it.

The fascinating Mrs. Tommary, of North Hill, had a new girl last week; a genuine Swede, imported, that runs at 178 pounds and broke two lamps and a soup tureen the first day in the house.

Miss Diffenback, the accomplished and beautiful cantatrice of West Hill, slapped her old mother over the head with the dish-rag last Tuesday evening, because the old lady wouldn't let her go down and sing in a Dutch chorus at the masquerade in Bogus Hollow. Miss Diffenback has the true temper of a lyric artist and our city will yet be proud of her.

Mrs. Dinkleman read a profound paper before the "American Woman's Society for the Elimination of the B. B. in the B. S." Mrs. Dinkleman said she always got the drop on them when she used corrosive sublimate.—Burdette.

Frugal Fare.

The Puritan farmers were remarkably frugal in their diet. They had pease-porridge for breakfast; bread, cheese and beer or cider for luncheon; a "boiled dish," or "black broth," or salt fish, or boiled pork, or baked beans for dinner; hasty pudding and milk for supper, and a constant succession of fruit or berry pies at every meal when the housewife had time to make them in addition to her other cooking, her dairy, washing, mending, carding, spinning, weaving and knitting. Swedish turnips were the staple vegetables. The bread was generally made of corn, barley or rye meal and, if the diet was rather farinaceous than animal, there was less demand for medicine, and a larger, longer growth of men and women than in these degenerate days of luxury and "progress."

POLITICAL NOTES.

IT appears that Hayes has been in the habit of drawing his salary monthly in advance, in order to have the use of the money, and the matter has been kept secret until recently, when somebody at the treasury gave it away. Mr. Hayes was very angry when he found his weakness had been exposed, and has been hunting up the person who told on him with a view to bouncing him out. Whereupon a Washington paper remarks? "And this is the civil-service reformer! This is the man who has prated long and loudly for the need of greater purity and stricter compliance with the laws in all the departments. This is the psalm-singer who affects the society of godly men, and whose sycophantic admirers laud him for the 'purity' of his administration. This, in short, is R. B. Hayes." The same.—Peck's Sun.

IT is hardly worth while to call an honorable Senator to account for words spoken on the stump, otherwise Butler, of South Carolina, is on the right track in attacking Conkling for his malignant, outrageous and gratuitous attack upon that State with reference to the census enumeration. Conkling was echoed by the whole partisan press, which was joyous in the mere excuse for firing the Northern heart with the cry that the South was endeavoring to falsify the record in order improperly to increase its representation in Congress. The Superintendent of the Census deprecated any statements of the kind, but his word, which, in ordinary times, would have been received with some regard, was brushed aside and the cry of fraud passed from stump to stump. Since the November election it has been found that the enumeration was wholly correct, a special recount having been made to ascertain.

THE best-provided man in this country just now appears to be Ulysses S. Grant. He starts with an admitted income of from $7,000 to $10,000, which is enough to keep a moderately-temperate man in toothpicks. Then comes Gen. John A. with his bill to retire Mr. Grant with the full pay of a General; and backing the illustrious "sprout" of Illinois is the Assembly thereof, "instructing the Senators from Illinois and requesting its Representatives" to go and get that General's pay for Grant, and no mistake. Comes then the more tangible Philadelphia cash subscription of a round $100,000, which will pay import duty on cigars, while the George Jones fund of $250,000 may be employed in the purchase of those very few meals which the hospitality, the gratitude, and the lion-devouring instincts of the American people permit him personally to arrange for at his own pecuniary cost. Then there are those Arabian stallions, the gift of the Sultan of Turkey. They are better than a Leadville mine as a source of income. People ambitious to cross their stock with the famous strain are also willing to pay roundly for the chance, and so it happens that the receipts from that source are sufficient to pay the limited amount of transportation for which the General has personally to provide. Altogether, it can't be said that he's suffering.—Chicago Times.

CHARLES A. DANA, editor of the New York Sun, having been asked by a committee of Howard University graduates to contribute his mite toward the sum now raised to procure a painting of President Hayes, to be placed alongside of those of the Adamses, replied very savagely to the applicant: "I decline to join in such a subscription." He goes on to say: "I am not willing to do anything that may be designed or construed as a compliment to Mr. Hayes, or that may recognize his tenure to the Executive office at Washington as anything other than an event of dishonor. He was not chosen President. He was defeated in the elections, and then a band of conspirators, Mr. Hayes himself conspiring and contriving with them, setting aside the constitution and the laws, and making use of forgery, perjury and false counting, secured for a time possession of the Presidency to which another man had been elected, and, when he got possession of it, his most sedulous care was to repay with offices and emoluments those authorized managers and agents of the conspiracy to whom he had been chiefly indebted for its infamous success. Sooner than honorably commemorate such an event, or do public homage to such a man, I beg you, gentlemen, with your own hands first to destroy the portraits of John Adams and John Quincy Adams in Memorial Hall, and then raze to the ground the hall itself."

THE story that Gen. Garfield had promised to select the Pennsylvania member of the Cabinet from one of three names furnished by Senator Don Cameron is denied by the Lancaster New Era, which says it is able to produce the best sort of evidence to the contrary. This implies that Gen. Garfield has written a letter to somebody on the subject, and the somebody is understood to be Mr. Barker, "the original Garfield man." The removal of Rutan from the post of Collector at Pittsburgh was one of Hayes' parting kicks at Cameron, who, by the way, made Hayes by suppressing the Blaine vote of Pennsylvania; but it is not believed that poor Hayes would have thought of giving the kick just at this time without some prompting from Mentor. The treaty of Mentor having been negotiated by Don Cameron, it was surmised for a while that his footing with the new administration would be better than that of some of the other leaders of the Grant forces. It is unfortunate for him that the members of the Pennsylvania Legislature should be undeceived in the very pinch of a struggle for the maintenance of his dynasty. It is Mr. Blaine's turn now. He has the power to revenge a long list of wrongs; and if he does not remember 1876 and 1880 it will be a marvel. The Republicans of Pennsylvania were in both those years heavily for Blaine; but the Camerons had decreed that he should never receive the votes of the State, and he never did.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

TEA CAKES.—One cup of sour cream, one cup of sugar, two eggs, two cups (full) of flour, teaspoonful of soda.

FRIED OYSTERS.—Dip each oyster in beaten egg, then in rolled crackers or corn-meal and fry quickly in hot butter or lard.

PUFFS.—Two eggs, two cups of milk, two cups of flour and a little salt. Pour into hot roll pans, and bake in a quick oven. Fill the pans about half full.

COCOANUT COOKIES.—Two cups sugar, one cup butter, two eggs, one teaspoonful soda dissolved in a tablespoonful of milk, one cocoanut and flour enough to roll.

FRENCH LOAF CAKE.—Two cups sugar, half cup butter, half cup of sweet milk, teaspoonful of soda, two of cream tartar, three eggs, three cups flour; flavor with lemon.

LEMON FLAP-JACKS.—One pint of milk, four eggs, juice of one lemon, flour to make a light batter, pinch of soda. Fry in hot lard. Serve with sugar and nutmeg.

FRIED MILK TOAST.—Dip slices of bread in milk, wetting both sides; have some butter in a hot frying pan and fry the bread a delicate brown. Will relish for tea.

PUFF CAKE.—Two cups sugar, three eggs, one cup butter, one cup sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, one teaspoonful soda, three cups flour. Bake in a quick oven.

POTATO PUFFS.—Two cups of cold, mashed potatoes; stir into this one tablespoonful of melted butter, two well beaten eggs, and one cup of milk or cream. Pour into a deep dish and bake in a quick oven.

CIDER CAKE.—One cup of sugar, half cup of butter, one egg well-beaten, one large cup of cider, one teaspoonful of soda, flour sufficient to make it as thick as pound cake. One cup of raisins can be added if desired.

CREAM COOKIES.—Two cups sugar, two eggs, one cup cream, one cup butter, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful lemon extract or one-half a nutmeg, grated; flour enough to make a dough as soft as it can be rolled. Delicious.

LAYER CREAM CAKE.—Three eggs, one cup white sugar, four tablespoonfuls cold water, one teaspoon of cream, two spoonfuls of baking powder, half cup flour; for the cream, half cup of cream beaten to a stiff froth; add a little sugar; flavor to taste.

WASHINGTON CAKE.—Two eggs, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of milk, one and a half cups of flour, one small teaspoonful of saleratus, same quantity of cream of tartar. This will make three cakes. I use half butter and half lard.

FRUIT CAKE.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three and a half cups of flour, one cup of molasses, one cup of cream, four eggs, one pound of raisins, citron and currants according to means, one teaspoonful of saleratus, spice to taste. Warranted to keep a year.

FRIED APPLES.—Quarter tart apples without peeling; have some nice salt pork fryings, or butter if preferred, and lay the apples close together, skin side down; cover till well steamed; then uncover and brown both sides, turning and watching closely to prevent burning.

FEATHER CAKE.—One cup of white sugar, one teaspoonful of melted butter, one egg, two-thirds cup of milk, two even cups of sifted flour, two even teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one of soda; flavor with lemon. I always sift my cream tartar and soda into the flour. You will be surprised when you make this cake, it is so delicate.

MOLASSES CAKE.—One cup of buttermilk, one egg, one cup of molasses, half cup sugar, two-thirds cup of shortening, two even teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in a little water, one teaspoonful of salt, two of ground cinnamon, a very tiny bit of cloves, one even teaspoonful of ginger, one-third of a small nutmeg and flour sufficient to make middling stiff. This will make two small loaves or one quite large one.

SNOW BALLS, WHITE.—One cup of sugar, six tablespoonfuls of melted butter, two eggs, one cup of sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one of soda, a very little nutmeg, one teaspoonful of salt; mix middling soft and roll out, and cut with a small round cutter. I use my tea canister top, it being just the right size. Fry in hot lard. Have ready a small bowl with a little fine white sugar in it. As you take them from the lard drop them in the sugar and roll around quickly until the surface has a very thin coat of sugar all over it, then lay carefully on a plate. Repeat with each cake separately, adding a little fresh sugar occasionally.

SOUTHERN GUMBO FILA.—Take an onion and cut it up fine; have the lard quite hot, then drop the onion in and let it fry a light brown; dust in two tablespoonfuls of flour and stir all the time to keep from burning, and in a few minutes it will be brown; pour in boiling water as much as will serve the family, allowing for boiling down; have a nice fat chicken cut up, put in the pot and let it boil until tender; take fifty oysters from the liquor and strain it to remove all pieces of shell; put the liquor in a stew pan, let it boil up once, then skim and put the liquor in the pot, season with salt, black and red pepper, also a small piece of garlic; after letting it boil some time, add the oysters; take two tablespoonfuls of fela and dust in, stirring all the time; as soon as it boils once it is ready to serve; always serve with boiled rice.

THE small boy soon grows tired of a new drum. There is nothing in it.

We strongly recommend to mothers Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup. It never fails, is easy to take, and no after-physic is required. Price, 25 cents.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

AS AN UNFAILING SPECIFIC

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, etc., etc.,

Seminal Pastille

An entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency [illegible]

HARRIS REMEDY CO. MF'G CHEMISTS, Market and 8th Streets, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Seminal Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patients

Indiana, April 18th, 1879.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for eight years past.

Chicago, Aug. 14, 1879.—I am thoroughly cured and fired up. The young man in the country is getting better.

Missouri, Sept. 19, 1879.—I received so much benefit from the use of your remedies that I want to try them in another case. This is of long standing, and will need something very strong.

A Lover of Shakespeare.

[Harper's Magazine.]

One of the most noted characters on the border twenty years ago was old Jim Bridger, of Fort Bridger, in Utah. On one occasion he came to New York and was pleased with the theaters, and expressed the utmost delight at a performance of the Midsummer's Night dream. He had no clear idea who Shakespeare was, but conceived and developed the most extravagant admiration for him.

Returning to the fort he sold old stock and supplies to emigrants and other travelers as in time past. One day a man wished to buy some oxen. Jim said he could have any except one yoke, which he had made up his mind to keep at all hazards. In the morning a messenger came to say that the man wanted this yoke, and none other.

"He can't have 'em," says Jim.

"Well, he wants them, and is just a-waitin' for them," said the messenger. "He's a-settin' there readin' a book called Shakespeare."

"Eh," yelled Jim, jumping to his feet. "Did you say Shakespeare? Here——you, give me my boots." He ran to the corral.

"Stranger," said he, "just give me that book and take them oxen."

"Oh, no," said the man. "I only bought the book to read on the way. I will give it to you."

"Stranger," said Jim resolutely, "jest you take them oxen and give me that book." And so the man did.

Jim hired a reader at $50 per month and listened to Shakespeare every evening. All went well until one night, as the reader came to the proposed murder of the princes in the tower. Jim sprang from his seat with blazing eyes, and yelled in thunder tones:

"Hold on there! Just wait till I get my rifle, and I'll shoot the——scoundrel."

His Secret.

A tea peddler, who was holding forth in a town up the river a few days ago, selling a pound of "extra fine Oolong for 80 cents, and giving each purchaser a chromo worth two dollars," found the crowd hanging back and felt obliged to explain:

"I know that some of you are suspicious, and others are amazed. It's a big thing, and it takes you by surprise. Gather a little nearer, and let me tell you how I do it."

The crowd surged up around his dry-goods box, and he continued:

"In the first place, I am consumptive and obliged to travel for my health. Then talking benefits me; I have one uncle in China, another in Japan. They are in the tea business, and they can furnish me good tea at twenty cents a pound. They lose a little at this figure, but when they die I will not be remembered in their wills as an offset. I have two brothers in New York in the chromo business. They furnish me these chromos at fifty cents each, but wholesale them at a dollar and a half. They They lose a dollar on each one they send me, but I furnished them the capital to go into business, and they want to show their gratitude. Therefore—"

He sold a woman a pound of tea, helped her to shoulder a chromo, and finished:

"Therefore, I make ten cents per pound on this tea. That is only a small profit, but yet I donate five per cent. of it to the orphan asylums of this country, and what I can't use up of the balance, I give to preachers. Now pass up your money, get the best tea in the market, adorn your walls with beautiful landscapes, aid orphans and asylums, do good to preachers. Who takes the next."

Examination Of Teachers.

Examinations for the year commencing June 1, 1879, will be held regularly, in the school building south of the jail, in Auburn, the last Saturday of each month. Special examinations at other points on due notice.

The Vacation of Mustapha.

Now in the sixth month, in the reign of the good Caliph, it was so that Mustapha said, "I am wearied with much work; thought, care and worry have worn me out; I need repose, for the hand of exhaustion is upon me, and death even now lieth at the door."

And he called his physician, who felt his pulse and looked upon his tongue, and said:

"Twodollahs!" (for this was the oath by which all physicians swore.) "Of a verity thou must have rest. Flee unto the valley of quiet, and close thine eyes in dreamful rest. Hold back thy brain from thought and thy hand from labor, or you will be a candidate for the asylum in three weeks."

And he heard him, and went out and put the business in the hands of the clerk, and went away to rest in the valley of quiet. And he went to his Uncle Ben's, whom he had not seen for lo these fourteen years. Now, his Uncle Ben was a farmer, and abode in the valley of rest, and the mountains of repose rose round about him. And he was rich, and well favored, and strong as an ox, and healthy as an onion crop. Oft times he boasted to his neighbor that there was not a lazy bone in his body, and he swore that he hated a lazy man.

And Mustapha wist not that it was so.

But when he reached his Uncle Ben's, they received him with great joy, and placed before him a supper of honey viands well cooked, and piled up his plate like the wreck of a box-car. And when he could not eat all, they laughed him to scorn.

And after supper, they sat up with him, and talked with him about relatives whereof he had never, in all his life, so much as heard. And he answered their questions at random, and lied unto them, professing to know Uncle Ezra and Aunt Bethesda, and once he said that he had a letter from Uncle George last week.

Now they all knew that Uncle George was shot in a neighbor's sheep pen, three years ago, but Mustapha wist not that it was so, and he was sleepy, and only talked to fill up the time. And then they talked politics to him, and he hated politics. So, about one o'clock in the morning, they sent him to bed.

Now the spare room, wherein he slept, was right under the roof, and there were ears and bundles of ears of seed corn hung from the rafters, and he bunged his eyes with the same, and he hooked his chin in festoons of dried apples, and shook dried herbs and seeds down his back as he walked along, for it was dark. And when he sat up in bed in the night, he ran a scythe in his ear.

And it was so that four boys slept with him, for the bed was wide. And they were restless, and slumbered crosswise and kicked, so that Mustapha slope not a wink that night, neither closed he his eyes.

And about the fourth hour after midnight, his Uncle Ben smote him on the back and spake unto him saying:

"Awake, arise, rustle out of this and wash your face, for the liver and bacon are fried and breakfast waiteth. You will find the well down at the other end of the cow lot. Take a towel with you."

When they had eaten, his Uncle Ben spake unto him, saying: "Come, let us stroll around the farm."

And they walked about eleven miles. And his Uncle Ben sat him upon a wagon and taught him how to load hay. Then they drove into the barn, and he taught him how to unload it. Then they girded up their loins and walked four miles, even into the forest, and his Uncle Ben taught him how to chop wood, and then walked back to supper. And the morning and the evening were the first day, and Mustapha wished that he were dead.

And after supper his Uncle Ben spoke once more, and said: "Come, let us have some fun." And so they hooked up a team, and drove nine miles, down to Belcher's Branch, where there was a hop. And they danced until the second hour in the morning.

When the next day was come—which wasn't long, for already the night was far spent—his Uncle Ben took him out and taught him how to make rail fence. And that night there was a wedding, and they danced, and made merry, and drank, and ate, and when they went to bed at 3 o'clock, Mustapha prayed that death might come to him before breakfast time. But breakfast had an early start, and got there first. And his Uncle Ben took him down to the creek, and taught him how to wash and shear sheep. And when evening was come, they went to spelling-school, and they got home at the first hour after midnight, and Uncle Ben marveled that it was so early. And he lighted his pipe and sat up for an hour and told Mustapha all about the forty acres he bought last spring of old Mosey Stringer to finish out that north half, and about the new colt that was foaled last spring.

And when Mustapha went to bed that morning, he bethought himself of a dose of strychnine he had with him, and he said his prayers wearily and he took it

But the youngest boy was restless that night, and kicked all the poison out of him in less than ten seconds.

And in the morning, while it was yet night, they ate breakfast. And his Uncle Ben took him out and taught him how to dig a ditch.

And when evening was come, there was a revival meeting at Ebenezer Methodist church, and they all went. And there were three regular preachers and two exhorters, and a Baptist evangelist. And when midnight was come, they went home and sat up and talked over the meeting until it was bed-time.

Now, when Mustapha was at home, he left his desk at the fifth hour in the afternoon, and he went to bed at the third hour after sunset, and he arose not until the sun was high in the heavens.

So the next day, when his Uncle Ben would take him out into the field, and show him how to make a post and rail fence, Mustapha would swear at him, and smote him with an ax-helve and fled, and gat himself home.

And Mustapha sent for his physician, and cursed him. And he said he was tired to death. And he turned his face to the wall and died. So Mustapha was gathered to his fathers.

And his physician and his friends mourned, and said: "Alas, he did not rest soon enough. He tarried at his desk too long."

But his Uncle Ben, who came to attend the funeral, and had to do all his weeping out of one eye, because the other was blacked half way down to his chin, said it was a pity, but Mustapha was too lazy to live, and he had no get-up about him.

But Mustapha wist not what they said, because he was dead. So they divided his property among them, and said if he wanted a tombstone he might have attended to it himself, while he was yet alive, because he had no time. —[Burlington Hawkeye.

Church Keno.

While most of our traveling men our commercial tourists, are nice Christian gentlemen, there is occasionally one that is as full of the Nick as an egg at this time of year is full of malaria. There was one of them stopped at a country town a few nights ago where there was a church fair. He is a blonde, good-natured looking, serious-talking chap, and having stopped at that town every month for a dozen years, everybody knows him. He always chips in towards a collection, a wake or a rooster fight, and the town swears by him. He attended the fair, and a jolly little sister of the church, a married lady, took him by the hand and led him through green fields, where the girls sold him ten cent chances in sawdust dolls, and beside still waters, where a girl sold him sweetened water with a sour stomach, for lemonade, from Rebecca's well. The sister finally stood beside him while the deacon was reading off numbers. They were drawing a quilt, and as the numbers were drawn all were anxious to know who drew it. Finally, after several numbers were drawn it was announced by the deacon that number fifteen drew the quilt, and the little sister turned to the traveling man and said: "My, that is my number. I have drawn it. What shall I do?" "Hold up your ticket and shout keno," said he. The little deaconess did not stop to think that there might be guile lurking in the traveling man, but being full of joy at drawing the quilt, and ice-cream because the traveling man bought it, she rushed into the crowd toward the deacon, holding her number, and shouted so they could hear it all over the house, "keno!" If a bank had burst in the building there couldn't have been so much astonishment. The deacon turned pale and looked at the poor little sister as though she had fallen from grace, and all the church people looked sadly at her, while the worldly-minded people snickered. The little woman saw that she had got her foot into something, and she blushed and backed out, and asked the traveling man what keno meant. He said he didn't know exactly, but he had always seen people, when they won anything at that game, yell "keno." She isn't exactly clear yet what keno is, but she says she has sworn off on taking advice from pious-looking traveling men. They call her little keno. Peck's Sun.

The Proposed Election Law.

A bill to prevent fraud in elections and other matters in connection therewith, and repealing all laws and parts of laws inconsistent therewith, introduced in the legislature.

Mr. Cooper, of Shelby county, presented to the legislature a bill to prevent fraud at elections, a full text of which we give below:

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Indiana, That it shall be made the duty of trustees and inspectors of elections in the several townships, wards and precincts in the state to provide a room adjoining to or near each voting place in this state for the use of the electors for preparing their ballots.

Section 2. It shall be made the duty of each elector desiring to vote to receive a ticket from each political party having candidates to be voted for at said election, if the same be tendered to him, and when so supplied with tickets, he shall retire into said room privately, and out of sight of any person, place the ticket he desires to vote in an envelope prepared for that purpose, and seal the same, and leave the other tickets he may have in his possession in a waste basket or box prepared for the purpose.

Section 3. Said elector shall then proceed to the polls, and present said envelope to the inspector, who shall pronounce his name in an audible voice, and if there be no objection he shall receive said envelope with the ticket in it, and put it into the ballot-box in the presence of the other judges, when the name of the elector shall again be distinctly repeated by one of the other judges, in the presence of the clerks.

Section 4. Then the polls are closed, or at any time after 4 o'clock of the afternoon on the day of election when the judges are at leisure, they may open the ballot-box and commence counting the votes, when the envelopes containing the ballots shall be taken out carefully, one by one, by the inspector who shall open them as he takes them out, and if two or more tickets are found in the envelope, neither shall be counted for any candidate, but, if only one is found, the inspector shall proceed to read aloud the names of each person printed or written thereon, and the office for which every such person is voted. He shall then hand the ballot to one of the judges, who shall examine the same and hand it to the other judge, who shall string it on a thread of twine.

Section 5. It shall be made the duty of the auditor of state to furnish each county auditor of the several counties of this state with a number of envelopes, fully equal to the whole number of voters in each of the several counties of this state. Said envelopes shall be of uniform size and color, and only large enough to contain the ticket when properly folded, and shall have no distinguishing marks or embellishments.

Section 6. Any elector or other person who shall make any distinguishing marks on said envelopes with pen or pencil, or by folding or creasing, or any other way, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than $25 nor more than $50.

Section 7. Provides that all sick or infirm persons or blind persons may select some persons known to them to prepare their ballots for them and hand them to the inspector, or convey them to the polls for the purpose of voting.

Section 8. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The best-provided man in this country just now appears to be Ulysses S. Grant. He starts with an admitted income of from $7,000 to $10,000, which is enough to keep a moderately temperate man in toothpicks. Then comes Gen. John A. with his bill to retire Mr. Grant with the full pay of a general; and backing the illustrious "sprout," of Illinois is the assembly thereof, "instructing the senator from Illinois and requesting its representatives" to go and get that general's pay for Grant, and no mistake. Comes then the more tangible Philadelphia cash subscription of a round $100,000, which will pay import duty on cigars, while the George Jones fund of $250,000 may be employed in the purchase of those very few meals which the hospitality, the gratitude, and the lion-devouring instincts of the American people permit him personally to arrange for at his own pecuniary cost. Then there are those Arabian stallions, the gift of the sultan of Turkey. They are better than a Leadville mine as a source of income. People ambitious to cross their stock with the famous strain are also willing to pay roundly for the chance, and so it happens that the receipts from that source are sufficient to pay the limited amount of transportation for which the general has personally to provide. Altogether, it can't be said that he is suffering —Chicago Times,

Suprise Party.

AUBURN, IND., Feb. 28, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER:—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McClellan entertained a few of their numerous friends at their residence, in Jackson township, on Friday, February 25. The party came in the form of a surprise. The suprise was a failure, however, but the party was a success. Below is a list of those who partook of the feast:

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Moor, Mr. and Mrs. George Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Elson, Mr. and Mrs. James Provines, Mr. and Mrs. Guilford, Mr. and Mrs James McClellan, of Auburn, Mr and Mrs John Sheller, Mrs. C. Grube, Mr. H. Griswold and Mr. H. Wright. The presents were numerous, and highly appreciated by the recipients. The dinner was such as a king would admire, and a more enjoyable time is not to be hoped for The guests came early and adjourned late, and "all felt that it was good to be there." Mr. and Mrs. McClellan heartily thank the friends and neighbors for the honor shown them, and hope that this will not be the last surprise enjoyed under their roof.

GRANDMOTHER.

Grandmother paces with stately tread
  Forward and back through the quaint old room,
Out of the firelight, dancing and red,
  Into the gathering dusk and gloom;
Forward and back in her silken dress,
  With its falling ruffles of frost-like lace;
A look of deepest tenderness
  In the faded lines of her fine old face.

Warm on her breast in his red night-gown
  Like a a scarlet lily the baby lies,
While softly the tired lids droop down
  Over the little sleepy eyes.
Grandmother sings to him sweet and low,
  And memories come with the cradle song
Of the days when she sang it long ago,
  When her life was young and her heart was strong.

Grandmother's children have left her now;
  The large old house is a shadowed place;
But shining out in the sunset glow
  Of her life, like a star, comes the baby's face.
He lies where of old his father lay;
  Softly she sings him the same sweet strain;
Till the years intervening are swept away,
  And the joy of life's morning is here again.

Grandmother's gray head is bending low
  Over the dear little downy one;
The steps of her pathway are few to go—
  The baby's journey is just begun.
Yet the rosy dawn of his childish love
  Brightens the evening that else were dim;
And, in after years, from her home above,
  The light of her blessing will rest on him.

A GHOST IN THE GARRET.

"This is the garret floor. It's a relic of the past," said Miss Pettigrew. "They do not build such garrets now. The house is more than 100 years old. It was my grandfather's grandfather who built it. By the way," continued the lady, turning on her guest in a sharp and bird-like manner peculiar to her—"by the way, this garret is haunted."

"How delightful! Do tell me about the ghost!" cried the young lady who had followed her into the great room which covered half the large house.

"The ghost, Miss Walker, is a soldier, an officer who was killed by a jealous husband in a duel, which took place here. He walks up and down, trailing his sword after him, and is said to be as pale as death; however, he hasn't been seen for ten years, though the servants are terribly afraid of him yet.

"They sleep," said Miss Pettigrew, "in that half of the garret which is partitioned off, and use the back stairs. They wouldn't come here for the world, so I make a sort of store closet of those shelves there, and feel perfectly safe about my sweetmeats.

"Here," said Miss Pettigrew, opening a little door—"here is still another pair of stairs. They lead to the orchard. It is said that that idiotic lady who caused the duel had them built that her lover might come to the garret without discovery. It may be true. It's evident that they were never built in the original house. Nobody ever uses them now; and they are actually moldering away."

With some difficulty she moved a rusty bolt, and the young lady peeped down the rickety stairs.

"I can fancy the ghost coming up," she said, with a little, soft shriek, as she drew back. "How romantic!"

Descending the large, well-carpeted stairs that ran down the middle of the house, the two ladies entered the parlor, where an elderly gentleman sat waiting. The young lady then addressed him:

"The rooms are lovely, pa, and if Miss Pettigrew will let us come, we ought to be delighted."

Miss Pettigrew gave a polite wave of the hand, which signified that she was charmed to receive such boarders.

"Elsie, dear, go out and get into the carriage," said the old gentleman. "Miss Pettigrew and I will have a word about terms."

The young lady tripped lightly away.

"I have but one condition to make, madam," said the old gentleman, the instant she was gone. "That you will take no single-gentlemen boarders."

"I have one, sir," said Miss Pettigrew, "Mr. Jeffers, 75 years of age, and quite rheumatic."

"Ah! I don't mind him," responded Mr. Walker. "I—I mean— In fact, I have brought my daughter to this quiet place to separate her from a person who is paying his addresses to her, and I am afraid he will follow us."

"Not into this house," said Miss Pettigrew. "My other rooms are filled; two families, mother, father and children; a widow lady and her daughter; and Miss Budwick, principal of a school in ——."

"The place will suit me perfectly," said Mr. Walker. "We'll come over to-morrow morning;" and with a bow he trotted down the path and also took his place in the carriage.

About a fortnight from the day on which she had received her first boarder Miss Pettigrew descended to the dining-room at an early hour, as was her wont, and in a very cheerful mood.

"This is very comfortable, indeed," thought she to herself, "very comfortable. Why shouldn't I turn a penny as well as my neighbors? Certainly my house is full of genteel people, and it's really pleasanter than to live alone." And Miss Pettigrew regarded her well-spread breakfast table with just pride and pleasure.

"Very comfortable, indeed—My goodness!" The latter portion of the sentence did not belong to the former. It was an ejaculation forced from her by the sudden appearance of her two servants, pale as death, hollow-eyed, and with compressed mouths, who, having made each a courtesy, ground themselves against the wall and stood looking at nothing, in a way, as Miss Pettigrew afterward said, calculated to freeze the blood of an observer.

"My goodness!" repeated Miss Pettigrew. "Fanny Ann and Abby Jane, what's the matter? Is the house on fire?"

"No, Miss," replied Fanny Ann.

"Have you seen a ghost?" proceeded Miss Pettigrew.

"Yes, Miss," replied Abby Jane.

"And please, Miss, we can't sleep in that awful place no more," continued Fanny Ann. "If you can't put us somewhere else we must go. We've seen him three times."

"Three nights hand-running," said Abby Jane.

"Why didn't you tell me before?" asked Miss Pettigrew.

"We thought you wouldn't believe us," said Fanny Ann.

"Well, I believe you've seen something terrifying," said Miss Pettigrew, "and I'll see what I can do. Don't mention this to anybody. You'd frighten some of my boarders away, perhaps. I'll talk it over after breakfast, and I'll wager I'll lay the ghost."

Fanny Ann and Abby Jane departed, promising silence, and the boarders ate their breakfast as usual. Afterward, behind closed doors, she heard this narrative:

At 11 o'clock every night for the past week the girls had heard a noise in the outer garret; but, the last three having been lit by a brilliant moon, they had been able to see through a crack in the door, and espied—"as sure as she was a living woman," Abby Jane declared—a ghostly soldier in complete uniform, pacing up and down.

The first time the figure vanished rapidly. The second time it was longer in going, but on the third night they saw it enter by the disused stairway, and heard it speak. What it said was: "Darling, I would die for you! I would risk all to meet you!"

"We could look no longer, Miss," said Abby Jane. "We thought we should take spasms."

Miss Pettigrew rubbed her nose.

"This is unpleasant," she said. "Certainly, the ghost was an officer, and my own Aunt Lydia declared that she saw him. That was before her daughter, Grace, eloped with— Good gracious! I have it!"

"What, Miss?" cried Abby Jane.

"An Idea!" said Miss Pettigrew. "Girls, you may take a mattress on the parlor floor to-night, and hold your tongues until to-morrow morning."

The police force of —— was not large, but that night two of its members stood concealed behind the largest apple trees in the orchard at the east of Miss Pettigrew's house. They were No. 12 and No. 14. These figures glittered on their cap bands.

Within, on the other side of the garret door, Miss Pettigrew, in a flowered dressing-gown, stood listening intently. The moonlight flooded the old garret. Stern and strong of mind as she was, Miss Pettigrew felt a cold shudder run up her spine. It was now a quarter to 11. Soon the old clock in the hall below croaked, rolled and struck the hour. At that instant a faint creaking was heard. A door opened—not the stair door, the one into the hall—and a figure, all in white, stole in and sat down on a great box. It was very ghostly. "Ugh!" shuddered Miss Pettigrew. "I declare I feel scary." Hark! another faint creaking. The door to the mysterious stairway opened softly and a figure entered. It was dressed in a soldier's uniform. It wore a sword, but its face—its awful face, though it bore the features of a man, was of an awful ghostly white, lips and all, enlivened only by two great black eyes, that glared about them.

Miss Pettigrew shivered until the door rattled. The next instant the two ghosts ran into each other's arms. Another instant, and the stair door was opened with a bang, and Officer No. 12 followed Officer No. 14 into the garret, each armed with a club.

"Ghost or not I'm quite safe now," said Miss Pettigrew, and opened the garret door with her kerosene lamp in her hand.

"So we've caught you," said Officer No. 12.

"And we'll find how ghosts like being locked up in jail," said Officer No. 14, as he pulled a wet handkerchief with two holes in it from the ghost's face, and revealed a very pale human countenance, adorned by a mustache which had most-carefully-waxed points, and, under other circumstances, might have been very fierce, indeed.

"And this young woman—your servant, most likely—shall we arrest her along with the burglar? Do you make a charge against her, Miss Pettigrew?"

At these words the female ghost, who had hitherto done nothing but wring its hands, tore from its form the sheet in which it was enveloped and revealed the face and figure of Miss Elsie Walker, who instantly went down on her knees at the feet of Miss Pettigrew.

"He is not a burglar, dear Miss Pettigrew. We were neither of us doing anything dishonest. It's Capt. Slasher, to whom I am engaged. Pa wouldn't let us meet as we wished, so we had to meet as we could, and the dress and disguise were only assumed to save me if we were seen by any one. Don't—don't—don't arrest my Alfred for a thief, when it is only his great love for me that—that—that—"

Here Miss Walker's voice failed her and she became hysterical, and Capt. Slasher was heard to say, rather faintly and nervously:

"Be calm, Elsie, be calm."

"Officers," said Miss Pettigrew, "I am sorry to waste your time, but will you be seated—take some boxes, pray—until I summon another person."

And Miss Pettigrew sailed from the room and returned, ten minutes later, with old Mr. Walker, hastily clad in his dressing-gown, on whose appearance the gallant Captain grew pale, and Miss Elsie wrung her hands again.

"A pretty piece of business, indeed!" said Mr. Walker.

"Yes, sir," said Miss Pettigrew, "pretty, indeed. Here is a decent young man—in the army, I suppose—who is driven to sneaking up back stairs into a garret to pay attention to a respectable young lady who prefers to receive him in the parlor. Now, if that young lady loses her character, whose fault is it, sir? The fault of those who drove her to it. We are old, Mr. Walker, but we have been young. I'm single, but—and Miss Pettigrew drew out her pocket-handkerchief—I have a heart! I should have been somebody's wife twenty-five years ago if I had had the spirit that girl has; but I was meek and submissive—and—no matter. If you really have nothing serious against that young man, hadn't you better let him marry your daughter, Mr. Walker?"

"Perhaps I had, Amelia—I mean, Miss Pettigrew," said the old gentleman.

"You angelic woman!" cried Miss Elsie, casting herself into Miss Pettigrew's arms.

"Sir, I thank you," said Capt. Slasher, who had grown red to the tips of his ears.

"I suppose no charge whatever will be made, then," said Officer No. 12, in an irritated tone.

"Oh! no. This is not a case for charges," said Miss Pettigrew.

"Good-night, then," said Officer No. 14, turning on his heel and departing as he came, but in a huff.

"You may call on my daughter two evenings a week and see her in Miss Pettigrew's presence," said the old gentleman to the Captain. "If my daughter were not motherless this would not have happened."

The Captain shook hands with everybody and followed the policemen. Miss Pettigrew bolted the garret door. Mr. Walker assisted her.

"I thought you did not know me, Amelia," he said.

"You might very well have forgotten me, I'm so dreadfully changed," sighed Miss Pettigrew.

And after these mysterious whispers they went down stairs.

There was a wedding at Miss Pettigrew's that autumn. Elsie was united to her Captain in the presence of all the boarders and many friends. But Miss Pettigrew did not take boarders again the next summer. Before that time came she had changed her name, and had married old Mr. Walker.

"It's rather late in life, Elsie," said she, as she embraced her step-daughter, "but the fact is, your pa and I were old sweethearts, and but for the cruelty of the old folks, who broke the match, I suppose I should have been your mother in reality."

Elsie did not discuss the question. She only kissed her and said:

"You've been my best friend, at all events, dear mamma."

Some Other People.

Cheerfulness is to the mind what sunshine is to the earth—its rejuvenating force. The cheerful people are always young, however gray their locks, dim their visions, or wrinkled their faces. Nay, cheerfulness will keep gray hairs and wrinkles at bay more effectually than any cosmetic or magic wash. It is a talisman which attracts affection and regard to those who wear it. The cheerful person is everywhere welcome, and nowhere out of place. She lights up the darkest day, and has the same genial and stimulating effect as the sunbeam; she makes the best of everything—even misfortune seen through her spectacles does not look so ugly; she anticipates happiness ahead and is sure that trouble will get detained on the way; she sees the silver lining of every cloud, and the first rift; when another murmurs and doubts, she is full of thanksgiving and hope.

The small discomforts of life do not fret her as they do many another. She is the best traveler the world over—heeds jolts on the road only to laugh at them; breakdowns and detentions are only so many novel experiences to her; and we doubt if even a highwayman could rob her of the habit of looking on the bright side of everything. She does not make faces over a poor dinner or a bad bed, but resigns herself to inconveniences so complacently that one might be deceived into thinking her accustomed to them. That she is the most companionable personage, the comfort of her presence attests. Her example is infectious, and we find ourselves groping our way out of the slough of despondency by the light of her countenance.

With many of us, perhaps, cheerfulness is no more a virtue for which we are responsible than a quick ear for music would be, than a Grecian profile, or a fine head of hair. It is bred in the bone with a few of us, just as talent for carpentry, for sculpturing, or versifying is; and as it is reckoned a disgrace to spell badly, but no virtue to spell well, so the talent for cheerfulness, being our birthright, is not so much set down to our credit, but so much subtracted therefrom if we do not develop it into genius. But it is none the less a sweetener of existence, and such a charming thing to meet with in man or woman, that we are apt to treat the owner as if it were a plant of his own selecting and sowing, since we do not stop to inquire how much is indigenous or how much exotic; for though the effect is the same upon the spectator, yet the meed belongs to those who, having no natural inclination toward cheerfulness, have yet succeeded in grafting it upon the barren stock of a despondent disposition, who have been obliged to fight bravely for the sunshine they spend lavishly.

We do not question that cheerfulness is a more certain receipt against the encroachments of disease than the specifics of modern medical science. By examination we should doubtless find that the few who reach the nineties are of a sanguine temper, who wear life like a garland rather than a yoke; who do not wring their hands when their stocks depreciate, but are certain they will rise to-morrow; who, when their case is desperate, do not make it worse by desperation—people who can say—

> "If life an empty bubble be,
> How sad are those who never see
> The rainbow in the bubble!"

Dinner at the White House.

The happy recipient of an invitation to dine with the President, says the correspondent of the Congregationalist, is always expected to come attired in dress-coat and light gloves, and, when he has deposited his hat and outer habiliments with the usher, he receives an envelope containing the name of the lady to whom he is assigned for a dinner partner; but the lady receives no intimation of her fate. The President and Mrs. Hayes meet the company in the Blue parlor; and after the gentleman visitor has paid his respects to the host and hostess he is expected at once to seek out the lady assigned to him. The dinner hour is 7, and at that time a procession is formed in two lines, which at once proceed to pass from the Blue to the Red parlor, and from thence to the dining room. To this room, decorated handsomely with flowers, there are two doors; and one procession, to be seated on the same side of the table with the President, follows him and the lady he takes with him, through one door; the other line, to be seated on Mrs. Hayes' side of the table, follows her escort through the other. At the table each guest's name, written in large hand on a card, stamped in gilt with the seal of the United States in gilt, shows the place he is expected to occupy. Under this card, and on each gentleman's plate, is a smaller card having a diagram of the table, with the name and place of each guest. Every visitor can, therefore, see at a glance who his fellow-diners are.

The dishes—meaning the food—are, of course, the best the market supplies; the other dishes—meaning table-furniture—the most beautiful in the country. After dinner there is promenading in the various parlors, and between 9 and 10 o'clock the guests depart, some to their homes, others to a night of ball-going.

PARISIAN actresses wear paper lace a great deal. It is tough, soft, and so effective on the stage it cannot be distinguished from real lace. All together then—for one two 'ate one on a sofa or anywhere else. They should love one another.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Made Bald.

Terror, it seems, can take off the hair, as well as turn it. The Gazette des Hospitaux gave an account not long ago of a singular case of alopecia.

A girl, aged 17, who had always enjoyed good health, had one day a narrow escape from being crushed by a floor giving way beneath her. She was very much frightened, and the same night began to complain of headache and chills. The next morning she felt restless, and had itching of the scalp.

During the few following days she steadily improved, with the exception of the itching. One day, in combing her hair, she noticed that it came out in great quantities.

Three days later she was perfectly bald. Her general health was good, but her head continued bald, and was still so when seen two years later by the reporter.

Something About Ice.

Beside the fact that ice is lighter than water, there is another curious thing about it which persons do not know, perhaps—namely, its purity. A lump of ice melted will always become purely distilled water. When the early navigators of the Arctic seas got out of water they melted fragments of those vast mountains of ice called icebergs, and were astonished to find that they yielded only fresh water. They thought that they were frozen salt water, not knowing they were formed on the land and in some way launched into the sea. But if they had been right the result would have been just the same. The fact is that water in freezing turns out of it all that is not water—salt, air, coloring matter and all impurities. Frozen sea water makes fresh-water ice. If you freeze a basin of indigo water it will make it as pure as that made of pure rain-water. When the cold is very sudden these foreign matters have no time to escape either by rising or sinking, and are thus entangled with the ice, but do not form any part of it.

Care of Nails.

Some persons insist that the finger-nails are signs of character. The slender, tapering nail, they say, indicates a refined nature which is sometimes accompanied by a shrewish temper. The broad, stubby nail suggests natural coarseness which may be allied to good nature. Whether these are signs or not, it is true that the care of the nails reveals personal habits as to cleanliness.

Nails may be greatly improved, both in shape and color, by proper attention. The best appliance is a nail-brush used in water softened by the addition of a little borax and really-fine toilet soap.

In well-brushed and well-cared-for nails the little curtain-like rim which surrounds them is well pushed or rolled back, displaying generally a delicate little crescent at the root. The skin of the finger should never be allowed to grow up on the nail.

In paring and trimming the shape given should always be as long an oval as possible. To cut a nail squarely off gives the finger-end a stubby look.

The corners should be carefully and closely cut, and the center left rather long, so as to give the long oval shape.

In cleaning the nails the knife should never scrape off the inner substance of the nail, as this renders the edge opaque and muddy in appearance, whereas it should be transparent.

The nail is susceptible of a high degree of polish by rubbing with the towel when drying the hands.

The habit of biting the nails is one against which children should be carefully guarded. It is ruinous to the very structure of the nail, and once acquired, is one of the most difficult habits to break.

This is evidenced by the fact that some men and women, but more especially men, have a habit of biting their nails when reading or studying, of which they are perfectly unconscious.

Not a few lawyers and clergymen occur to mind whose nails are almost a deformity as a result of this habit.

THE State of Louisiana levies a poll-tax for the benefit of the public schools upon all male inhabitants over 21 years of age. It is a lien on all property of the tax-payer, and employers are liable for the tax of those they employ, provided the service has been for ninety days during the year for which the tax is due. The property of employer or employe, in case of non-payment of the tax, may be seized and, after ten days' advertisement, sold to pay the tax and costs. The tax is never to be less than $1 nor more than $1.50.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

Dr. Muller, of Geneva, has made a calculation in which he estimates the number of plant species existing on the globe to reach a minimum total of 250,000.

It is not expected that it will be possible for the Italian Antartic expedition to start before 1883. In the meantime it is intended that Lieut. Bove, the originator of the scheme, should make a preliminary voyage in a whaler to the Southern seas.

The planetary discoveries of 1880 were eight in number, five of which were found by Herr Palisa, Director of the Observatory at Pola. The last was discovered Sept. 30, and raised the total number of known small planets to 219.

Colonel Glukofsky, who has surveyed the ancient bed of the Oxus, is of opinion that the diversion of the river to the Caspian Sea from its present course is quite practible, and a sum of 600,000 roubles has been set apart for the work. Ten Russian engineers, five companies of infantry, and three sotnias of Cossacks are engaged in the operations.

M. Cauvet, in the Bulletin of the Botanical Society of France, describes his experiments made to determine the development of carbonic acid by the roots of plants. His result appears to show that roots constantly develop carbonic acid, but that the development is less by night than by day, and that it begins to increase with sunrise, that it decreases about noon, and rises again in the evening, to decrease at midnight.

Mica has been applied to a new use, that of fashioning it into middle soles to boots and shoes. The invention consists of a sheet of mica imbedded in thin coatings of cement, and placed in the boot or shoe under and adjacent to the insole, the upper leather of the shoe lapping over its edges, or next under the filling, or between the filling and the outer or bottom sole, and covering the upper space from the toe to the instep.

The royal engineers have tried the effect of gun cotton in bringing down two old chimneys at the Dockyard Extension Works, Chatham, England. The first was demolished by placing a necklace of gun cotton inside the chimney, the total charge consisting of about four and a half pounds. The second was destroyed by placing six charges of the explosive in the center of the base of the chimney, the total charge weighing twenty-eight ounces. The experiment was very successful. At the instant the electric spark ignited the gun cotton the chimneys became wrecks.

At the Greenwich observatory a very ingenious instrument is in use to record automatically the duration of sunshine during the day. It consists of a glass globe hung in a hemispherical cup of slightly greater diameter, the cup being lined with a strip of paper covered with stencil ink. The globe is entirely exposed upon the roof, and while the sun is shining, acts as a burning-glass, and causes a continuous line to be made upon the paper. This line will be broken, however, as often as the sun's light is obscured by clouds, and thus a record of the amount of sunshine for the day will be obtained.

M. Morids has shown the French Academy a new alimentary substance, called nutricine. Raw meat, freed from bones and tendons, is passed into suitable machines with nitrogenized food substances—such as bread, etc.—which absorbs its water, and perhaps form organic combinations with it. The whole is dried in the air or over a mildly-heated stove, and then pulverized and sifted. The powder obtained is grey or yellowish in color, and has an agreeable taste. With fats, albumen or gummed water, solid cakes or cubes may be made of it, to be afterward made into soups, sauces, etc. The substance is very nutritive, and keeps indefinitely if not exposed to moisture or too great heat.

An ingenious Frenchman has devised a game for facilitating the study of geography by children. It consists of a large planisphere map of the globe, accompanied by numerous objects representing animals, plants, flags, costumes, tows and landscapes. These objects, of painted cardboard, stand upright when the small inscription accompanying them is folded back; and each one bears, moreover, a number corresponding to one on the map. Placing each in its proper position, the child quickly becomes familiar with the subject illustrated; if it be a plant, he knows the place which produces it, and its use; if a town, he knows its population, position, etc. The new game has received the approval of the Paris Society of Geography.

Stage Coach Amusements.

A lively writer in one of the Paris journals describes the playful tricks with which the occupants of omnibusses while away the tediousness of a long drive. One will set the others all yawning by means of a series of yawns on his part. Another will secretly bring into the vehicle a small bag full of vivacious snails, which are furtively allowed to make their way to the garments of the unsuspecting passengers. The third joke is taking the silver piece which is passed by a lady to be handed to the conductor, and in a pretended fit of abstraction to carefully insert it into the operator's purse, from which it is released after some discussion with an air of incredulity that the claim made by the owner is unfounded. Or when a passenger of anything like suspicious aspect enters the omnibus one will begin by staring very hard at him, and then, when he is not looking, pull out a notebook and pencil and take notes of him with great assiduity. The other passengers straightway suppose that the note-taker is a detective, and that the other individual is a criminal of some sort, the consequences being that he is regarded with suspicion and repugnance not only during the rest of the journey, but on any other occasion when he may happen again to be ecountered.

Rats Who Enjoyed Fun.

A good rat story is told by a lady who lives in Baltimore, which shows that rats have a kind of humor about them at times which they will exercise even to the extent of forgetting their plundering propensities. In the house of this lady was a child's rocking horse, and every night the rats would jump on the rocking horse and start it rocking, and rock it for hours, seemingly with the greatest enjoyment in the world. At first, hearing the noise, the people couldn't imagine the cause, and didn't know but that the spirits had a hand in it; but when they cautiously peered out and saw the performance it became one of the marvels of the neighborhood to see the rats in their gambols, enjoying themselves, laughing and having their fun rocking the horse.

Washington Etiquette.

Questions of etiquette are sometimes very troublesome in Washington, and all the more because very many of the denizens of that city, who come from distant and rural homes, know and care nothing about etiquette. How little the honorable gentleman from Symmes' Hole suspects, as he is asked to take Mrs. Senator Red Velvet to dinner, that the chair in which he shall sit, and the lady whom he shall hand out have been subjects of long and anxious deliberation. It is easy to call on Wormley, or Welcker, or Pinard, or some other chef, and order a dinner for twenty. But who who shall sit where, and shall hand whom?—these are the questions which cause vexation and anguish. A distinguished official gentleman in Washington gave a noble repast in honor of a noted guest. It was ordered of the proper purveyor. "Now," said the host, when he had bade no expense be spared, "I don't know anything about the business of seating people correctly. You must attend to that, too." The purveyor went straight to another distinguished man, who had not been invited to the dinner because it would not be agreeable to some other distinguished man who was invited, and distinguished man number one was immensely amused that he was called upon to seat the guests at a dinner to which he was not himself invited.

It is all the more perplexing because, although Washington is always full of official persons who are really indifferent to etiquette, and who greet it with a hearty democratic laugh, yet because of its official population there has been from the first especial attention paid by experts to the subject. Washington took grave counsel upon it, and Hamilton gave him some canons of behavior in writing, and there is alleged to be a more rigid system of social etiquette among official persons in Washington than is to be found in any circle elsewhere in the country. There are asserted to be due rules for the "first calling" of Senators' wives, and the wives of the members of the Cabinet and of Justices of the Supreme Court. Precedence at table is also a knotty point involving great trouble of soul. Some years ago a Senator gave a dinner to which the Secretary of State was invited. When dinner was announced, the host turned to the senior Senator, the dean of the Senatorial Chamber, and asked him to take the lady of the house to the table. The senior Senator hesitated, saying to his colleague that the Secretary of State was in the room. "Pshaw! we Senators make Secretaries of State," was the answer; and the host insisted that in his house nobody should precede the dean of his own body. —Harper's Magazine.

The Brain by Weight.

An article by Miss Nina Morris in the North American Review gives a timely value in this country to an important work which Dr. T. L. W. Bischoff, the well-known Professor of Anatomy and Physiology at Bonn, has published. This is a special and careful dessertation on the weight of the human brain, which is differenced from all previous studies of the same subject by the enormous amount of material on which its conclusions are based, Prof. Bischoff having examined and weighed not less than 559 male and 347 female brains. He treats his subjects under eight heads: Absolute weight of the rest of the body, influence of age, influence of bodily size, weights of different parts of the brain, connection of the cerebral convolutions and brain weight, and the relation of that weight to intelligence.

In a final chapter he draws his conclusions. The adult male human brain varies in weight between 1,018 and 1,925 grammes, and the females between 820 and 1,565 grammes, a gramme being about 15½ grains troy, and the average male brain weighs about 1,362, the average for women being 1,219 grammes—about 10½ per cent. in favor of men. Bodily size has no apparent relation to that of the brain, as also it has not in the case of lower animals. During childhood and youth and until a man is between 20 and 30 years old, the brain grows steadily, but a woman's brain reaches its maximum when she is about 20; then it remains in statu quo up to the 60th or 70th year, when it begins ordinarily to dwindle. Among civilized races brains are commonly of about the same weight, but in the lower negro races the average is not only smaller, but the weight varies less between the two sexes, and also between individuals.

Prof. Bischoff weighed the brains of ten cultivated and celebrated men, some of whom he found to be below the average, while none reached the maximum, and of the brains of sixteen murderers which he examined, the average was ninety grammes lighter than the ordinary brain, while not one of them attained to the common size. Prof. Bischoff does not, however, believe in the existence of such a type as the "criminal brain," and upon examining 119 ordinary offenders against the law, he found their brains to weigh eleven grammes more than the average, some of them reaching even so high as 1,500 and 1,600 grammes.

Employment for a Youthful Lover.

One of our marriageable young ladies from the suburbs had heard her father say that he wanted a boy to do chores, and as she was leaving the church for home, a forward youth of about 15, with cane in hand and a cigarette in his mouth, thinking himself every inch a man, stepped up to the young lady and with an air of assurance proffered his services as escort, at the same time offering his arm.

"Well, yes," said the young lady, "I believe father has been thinking of taking a boy to bring up, and perhaps you might answer."

The boy sloped at a go-as-you-please. —New York Mercury.

A splendid breakfast on the table surrounded by a family of Coughs. They used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and that family now keeps it always on hand and recommends it. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

A Romance of British High Life.

Many years ago a young man made his appearance in Stratford, and passed a few weeks at the tavern which then existed to afford shelter to stage-coach travelers. Whence he came, and what was his business, none could guess. Directly opposite the tavern stood the small cottage and forge of a blacksmith named Folsom. He had a daughter who was the beauty of the village, and it was her fortune to captivate the heart of the young stranger. He told his love, said he was traveling incog.; but, in confidence, gave her his real name, saying that he was heir to a large fortune. She returned his love, and they were married a few weeks after. The stranger told his wife that he must visit New Orleans. He did so, and the gossips of the town made the young wife unhappy by disagreeable hints and jeers. In a few months the husband returned, but before a week had elapsed he received a large budget of letters, and told his wife that he must at once return to England, and must go alone. He took his departure, and the gossips had another glorious opportunity to make a confiding woman wretched. To all but herself it was a clear case of desertion. The wife became a mother, and for two years lived on in silence and hope. By the end of that time a letter was received by the Stratford beauty from her husband, directing her to go at once to New York with her child, taking nothing with her but the clothes she wore, and embark in a ship for home in England. On her arrival in New York she found a vessel splendidly furnished with every convenience and luxury for her comfort, and two servants ready to obey every wish that she might express. The ship duly arrived in England, and the Stratford girl became mistress of a mansion, and, as the wife of a baronet, was saluted by the aristocracy as Lady Samuel Stirling. On the death of her husband, many years ago, the Stratford boy succeeded to the title and wealth of his father; and in the last edition of "Peerage and Baronetage," he is spoken of as the issue of "Miss Folsom, of Stratford, North America."—Toronto (Ont.) Globe.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

It is very rare that the Republican consents to editorially forward the interests of advertisers of what are known as patent medicines, as it does not frequently fall out that we can have positive knowledge of their merits, However, we take pleasure in saying of St. Jacobs Oil, from individual experiment, that it is a most excellent remedial agent, and as such we can heartily recommend it.

Land in England.

Behind the land question in England is the question of habits. The land is held in these great tracts, not for enjoyment but from pride. The brains of men are so equal, under modern facilities of education, that hereditary descent would be inconsequential if it did not have hereditary estate to advertise the fact; and consequently every parvenu in the nobility rushes to buy land at a ridiculous price, so that he can appear on the landscape of the country among the sons of Normans. For the greater part of the year an English estate is not fit to live on, on account of the climate, and there is plenty of land to be had for less than $1 per acre on the steppes of the Rocky mountains more agreeable for hunting, for residence, and for every other enjoyment, than the best land in England.

[From the Galveston News.]

The Madison, (Wis.) Democrat, in endeavoring to treat the wounds received by the candidates for the Presidency, wisely prescribes St. Jacobs Oil. Of course we could not expect our worthy contemporary to do otherwise than recommend that famous Old German Remedy—which "heals all wounds but those of love" and soothes all pains—save those of political disappointment.

State and Ceremony.

Gen. Badeau, the long-time friend of Gen. Grant, is a choice raconteur, and one of his stories is of the curious working of a law of Congress providing that officers of the United States volunteers who had been mustered out of the service might thereafter wear their uniforms on "occasions of state and ceremony." This was at once put to the test by an ex-Brigadier General, who had enlisted in the regular army as a high private, and who, on the first parade day, appeared in the ranks in his old toggery, epaulets and all, but with his musket on his shoulder. He logically remarked that if that "wasn't an occasion of state and ceremony he'd like to know what in thunder it was!"

Fees of Doctors.

The fee of doctors is an item that very many persons are interested in just at present. We believe the schedule for visits is $3.00, which would tax a man confined to his bed for a year, and in need of a daily visit, over $1,000 a year for medical attendance alone! And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.—Post.

"I believe," observed a Western Judge, as he adjourned court to attend a convention before which his name was to be presented for nomination, "that office should seek the man, not the man the office. But when the office is seeking the man there is no harm in a man being around where the office is likely to find him without any trouble."

Eilert's Extract of Tar and Wild Cherry has been used for twenty years, and during that time has saved many very valuable lives. Do not neglect a cough or cold until it is too late. Try this excellent remedy, and we are sure you will be convinced of its merits. Chronic Coughs, and even Consumptives, are cured by following the directions. Every bottle is warranted to give satisfaction. Prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago. Sold by all good druggists.

If an untruth is only a day old it is called a lie; if it is a year old it is called a falsehood; but if it is a century old it is called a legend.

Pure Cod Liver Oil made from selected livers, on the seashore, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

Uncle Sam's Condition Powders are recommended by stock-owners who have used them as the best Horse and Cattle Medicine to be had. If the animal is Scraggy, Spiritless, or has no appetite, these Powders are an excellent remedy, and every owner of stock will do well to try them. They are prepared by the Emmert Proprietary Co., Chicago, Ill., a very reliable firm, and sold by all good druggists.

Vaccine Marks.

An Eastern paper says that no person protected by a good vaccine mark, even if it be twenty years old, need have fears of small-pox.—Sioux City Journal.

It was the Chicago Inter Ocean that said that; and it was a very unwise and indiscreet remark to make. It will lull many persons into a false sense of security. There is a difference of opinion among physicians, upon this as upon every other question involved in their various schools, but the great preponderance of opinion is that vaccination, as a rule, is not a perfect protection unless renewed at least every seven years.

The conditions vary in different individuals. With some, the system once charged with the vaccine virus forever loses its susceptibility to small-pox, while in others, and the great majority of cases, it loses its power in a few years the exact limit of which also greatly varies. The safest course, and the one now generally recommended by leading physicians, is to re-vaccinate at frequent periods. If it "takes," the necessity for vaccination is demonstrated. If it fails to re-produce a vaccine sore the system is supposed to be properly charged with the vaccine previously administered and the person is liable to no greater danger from exposure to small-pox than an attack of varioloid. But a vaccine "mark" is no guarantee of immunity from small-pox unless it is a comparatively fresh one. The press ought to give prominence to this well-established fact so as to encourage general vaccination and avoid the perils of neglect and over-confidence.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

A Cross Baby.

Nothing is so conducive to a man's remaining a bachelor as stopping for one night at the house of a married friend and being kept awake for five or six hours by the crying of a cross baby. All cross and crying babies need only Hop Bitters to make them well and smiling. Young man, remember this.—Traveller.

A Plain Statement of Facts.

We English have not yet fully realized what utter knaves the ruling Pachas in Turkey are. We solemnly read their dispatches and their state papers as though they were not written with the deliberate intention to deceive, and we ask them to make pledges, as though they would be binding on them. So long as we regard these scamps as anything but a gang of shameless tricksters, ready to sell themselves and their country to the highest bidder, we shall vainly endeavor to handle the Eastern question. There are but two arguments which they understand—money and the stick. If we are not prepared to buy them or to beat them, we should not waste time in negotiations, but withdraw from all communication with them.—London Truth.

There Is No Happier Man

in Rochester than Mr. Wm. M. Armstrong. With a countenance beaming with satisfaction he remarked, recently, "Blessings upon the proprietor of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It saved me."

The estimated population of the United Kingdom in 1880 was 34,505,043; increase in that year being 349,917. From 1840 to 1878 7,617,935 emigrated from the United Kingdom. Between the years 1840 and 1879, inclusive, 5,226,459 persons emigrated to the United States.

Eight Reasons
Why we NEVER sell POND'S EXTRACT in BULK, but adhere to the rule of selling ONLY in OUR own BOTTLES, inclosed in BUFF WRAPPER, on which is printed our landscape Trade-Mark.

1. It insures the purchaser obtaining the genuine article.
2. It protects the consumer in buying Pond's Extract not weakened with water, which we found was done a few years ago when we were induced to furnish dealers with the genuine article in bulk.
3. It protects the consumer from unscrupulous parties selling crude, cheap decoctions to him as Pond's Extract, for any person can tell the genuine from the bottle and wrapper.
4. It protects the consumer, for it is not safe to use any other article according to the directions given in our book, which surrounds each bottle of Pond's Extract.
5. It protects the consumer, for it is not agreeable to be deceived and perhaps injured by using other articles under the directions for Pond's Extract.
6. No other article, manufacture or imitation has the effect claimed for and always produced by Pond's Extract.
7. It is prejudicial to the reputation of Pond's Extract to have people use a counterfeit believing it to be the genuine, for they will surely be disappointed if not injured by its effect.
8. Justice to one of the best medicines in the world, and the hundreds of thousands using it, demands every precaution against having weak and injurious preparations palmed off as the genuine. The only way this can be accomplished is to sell the genuine put up in a uniform manner—in our own bottles, complete with buff wrappers, trade-marks, &c.

REMEMBER—The Genuine Pond's Extract is cheap, because it is strong, uniform and reliable. Our book of directions explains when it can be diluted with water and when to be used full strength.

REMEMBER—That all other preparations, if colorless, are mere decoctions, boilings, or produced simply to obtain the odor and without the scientific or practical knowledge of the matter which many years of labor has given us.

REMEMBER, OR KNOW NOW—That all preparations purporting to be superior to Pond's Extract because they have color, are colored simply because they have crude and, to unprofessional people using them, perhaps dangerous matter in them, and should never be used except under the advice and prescription of a physician.

REMEMBER AND KNOW—That our very expensive machinery is the result of 30 years of experience (the most of which was entirely given to this work) and constant attention to the production of all forms of Hamamelis, and that therefore we should know what we assert, that Pond's Extract is the best, purest, and contains more virtues of the shrub than any other production yet made.

Our New History and Uses of Pond's Extract and other preparations sent free.

LADIES—Read pages 13, 18, 21 and 26, in our book, which is found around each bottle, and will be sent free on application.

Pond's Extract Company,

If you are Interested

In the Inquiry—Which is the best Liniment for Man and Beast?—this is the answer, attested by two generations: the MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT. The reason is simple. It penetrates every sore, wound, or lameness, to the very bone, and drives out all inflammatory and morbid matter. It "goes to the root" of the trouble, and never fails to cure in double quick time.

C N U. No. 10

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, IND., MARCH 10, 1881.

JAMES A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN
EDITORS.

LET us hope that no fires will break out in Ohio while all her able-bodied voters are holding office at Washington.

ABOUT 25,000 troops were in line in the grand procession at the inaugural. It was the most gorgeous affair of the kind the country has ever seen. Truly, we are drifting a long ways from the primitive simplicity of the fathers of the republic.

THE Porter County Vidette, is still sound on some of the leading features of the financial question, and some of its arguments are unassailable. We believe that, if these questions could be separated from politics, nine-tenths of the people would prefer greenbacks to national bank bills.

THE train on which Hayes left Washington on his return to his home in Ohio, collided with another train at Severn, Maryland, on the B. & O. road. Several were killed, and a large number injured, but of the Hayes party none were hurt, as they occupied a car nearer the rear end of the train. The accident was caused by the engineer on the east-bound train, running contrary to orders. He was among the severely injured.

WHILE the refunding bill was before congress and likely to pass and become a law, the leading bankers of New York, and some from other places, commenced returning their securities, preparatory to taking up their circulation. The intention was to frighten congress into obedience to their dictates, by creating a panic in financial circles. The trouble lasted but a few days, but it is a disgraceful and dangerous precedent when the money kings combine to control the legislation of the country, and to force such laws as favor them, at the expense of the people.

CONGRESS had at last succeeded in passing the refunding bill when it was at once vetoed by Mr. Hayes. The bill made it obligatory on national banks to use three per cent bonds to secure their circulation, instead of those bearing a higher rate, and now coming due. This would have saved the tax-payers of the country about twenty-five millions of dollars, but of course did not suit the banks. Hayes, in common with his party, cares more for a few thousand wealthy bank owners than he does for the other fifty millions of tax-payers. Hence the veto.

IN a recent communication published in the Ft. Wayne Gazette, Mr. Trammell, of Huntington, tells his republican brethren some ugly facts in regard to their course on the temperance question. He claims that his party secured the temperance vote last fall by its abundant professions of friendship for the cause, and by promises to do something in the legislature to abate the evil. Now, the republican caucuses in the senate and house at Indianapolis have refused to fulfill their pledges and entered into an agreement to vote down any and all temperance measures introduced. Their reason for this course is that, as the vote of the state is rather close it will not do to antagonize the whisky element, or the republican party may lose its hold on the state altogether. So the great moral party gets down on its knees for the sake of the loaves and fishes. The strangest thing in the whole matter is that any one should be deceived by these republican professions of temperance. They are not the temperance party and never have been. But with an amount of assurance and self-righteousness that is eminently characteristic of the party, they have always claimed to be the only advocates of the cause. The fact is, and no one can deny it, that there are real temperance men and real anti-temperance men in both parties. The great difference in the two parties is this: If a democrat likes his bitters he don't profess temperance; but the republican party is full of men who daily soak themselves full, and even while in that condition, shout for temperance from the house-tops and street corners. With one hand they put a temperance tract into the hands of the temperance voter, and with the other stick a bottle of whisky into some susceptible voter's coat-tail pocket. If Mr. Trammel is as clear-headed as his communication shows him to be, he ought to have discovered all this before being so completely sold out.

Neighborhood Nippings.

Elkhart has two knitting factories running on good time.

It is reported that F. M. Bacon will return to Garrett soon.

Noble county farmers are again contesting the drive-well rights.

Building promises to be extensive in Ft. Wayne the coming summer.

They have the small-pox in Monroeville. At most other points it appears to be abating.

Eight large buildings will be added to the normal school at Valparaiso the coming summer.

The Michigan Central road is making a reduction of 12 1-2 per cent. on all its passenger rates.

South Bend has 170 factories, employing more than 3,000 hands. These factories yield $7,000,000 annually.

The Goshen Democrat tearfully advises its delinquent subscribers to read up mother Shipton's prophecies about the world coming to an end in 1881.

David Bower, of Whitley county, was struck by a falling limb while felling timber, March 1, and instantly killed. The deceased has relatives in Waterloo.

Hon. D. D. Moody made a most sensible speech in the legislature the other day on the amendment, raising the appropriation of the state normal school from $8,000 to $11,000.

The vote on woman's suffrage in the Indiana legislature stood 43 for and 46 against it, a vote so close as to indicate that the day is not distant when their rights will be conceded to them.

A petition has been sent to the legislature asking that a new county be made out of portions of St. Joseph, Marshall, Laporte and Stark counties. All of which is necessary to make Walkertown a county seat.

Representative Cotton wants a juryman to have $2 per day. He says a farmer is frequently taken away from his harvest-field to serve on a jury for $1,65 a day, and boards himself. He hires a substitute, whom he is obliged to pay $2 per day and board him besides.

Rev. Blakemore, of Middlebury, wants to be consul to Hong Kong, China. He is one of the pious frauds who made political speeches with Bob Ingersoll last fall. Give him a consulate in a warm climate, by all means. The churches do not need such pastors.

Angola is going through the usual experience with patent heaters. By the time these contrivances freeze out a few more schools and church congregations, and burn down a few more public buildings, our neighbors can compare experience with towns in this county.

The Ft. Wayne News has a sensational item to the effect that Jay Gould, and not the new railroad company, has bought up the canal. This, if true, would give the Wabash road possession of a portion of the old canal to prevent any railroad from using it as a road bed.

The Indianapolis Sentinel, of March 3, has this: In the case of the state against Wahjow, the "heathen Chinee," for assault and battery on his almond-eyed friend, Pon Yim, he was fined by 'Squire Woodward $1 and cost, amounting to $17,30. Wahjow thought the 'Squire "too hardee and charges too muchee for fightee Chinaman."

The Garrett Herald announces the death of Mrs. Minnie Kelley, at her home in Chicago. Mrs. Kelley will be remembered by the people of this county as Miss Minnie Sargent, daughter of E. E. Sargent, of the Sargent house in Garrett, and a former resident of Butler. Mrs. Kelley was married in this place last April, and leaves a husband and babe to mourn her loss.

An Italian ship was driven ashore on Coney island, New York harbor, March 4, in the dreadful storm then raging. The crew were seized by a panic when they saw the vessel must go to pieces, and despairing of getting ashore in the heavy surf, four of the men committed suicide by cutting their throats. Of a crew of fifteen men, only one survived to tell the dreadful tale.

Most of our readers will remember the remarkable suicide of James Moon, at Lafayette, a few years ago. Now comes the news of the suicide at Indianapolis of his brother, John C. Moon, who killed himself with a revolver a few days ago. The Journal adds the following: There is a touch of insanity in the family, apparently, for it was his brother James who, at Lafayette, in 1876, constructed a guillotine that worked effectively. All his preparations were made with the greatest care and deliberation. The knife was made to descend with a sweeping motion, and was held up by a string, arranged to snap at a given time by the burning of a candle-flame. When his arrangements were fully completed, he lay down underneath this instrument, spread a handkerchief saturated with chloroform over his face, and while asleep under the effect of the drug, the candle-flame broke the string, the knife curved downward, and his head rolled into a convenient basket.

HOW would a law something like this do in Indiana: Section 1. "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Indiana, That any person having the qualifications to vote under the existing laws of this state shall, when he offers to vote, exhibit to the inspector of the election his tax receipt for his last installment of taxes due from him next preceeding such election, and on his failure to do so, shall not be entitled to vote; Provided, however, that if he shall have become of age since the last assessment was made, so that no taxes are due from him, he shall, if he has the other legal qualifications of a voter, be entitled to vote by his establishing that fact before such board by some satisfactory evidence." We believe that a law of this kind would have several good effects, first, if a man is a tax-payer, it is very good proof that he is a bona fide resident; second, it would have a tendency to insure the prompt payment of taxes, and thus save trouble to the officers and penalty and interest to the payers. Besides, a man who does not even pay a poll tax, certainly has but little interest in how the law is administered or who administers it.

THE Plymouth Democrat has changed hands, Mr. Peed retiring and Mr. McDonald, late democratic candidate for congress, assuming control. The Democrat is an excellent paper, and will lose nothing by the change. The Democrat says: "After fattening on the treasury for years the national banks have entered into a conspiracy to wreck the business of the country rather than submit to what they consider unfavorable legislation. The people will remember this against them, and the day of reckoning is not as far off as they imagine."

THE loss to the country by Hayes' last veto, that vetoing the refunding bill, caused a loss to the country of more than fourteen millions of dollars. But it saved the banks a little something, perhaps, and Hayes thinks that the main thing. But he didn't veto the River and Harbor bill. That would have saved the people eleven millions. But as the banks were not interested, there was no veto.

WHERE are those mechanics who were to have higher wages if Garfield was elected? The tariff was to be kept high enough to give them all steady employment, and a better price for work The tariff isn't in such demand as it was before the election, and yet it is the same old tariff, in substance that it was fifteen years ago.

The Illustrted Scientific News.

One of the handsomest of publications is the Illustrated Scientific News, published by Munn & Co., New York. Every number contains thirty-two pages, full of engravings of novelties in science and the useful arts. Ornamental wood work, pottery, vases and objects of modern and ancient art are finely shown.

The March number contains, among various other subjects illustrated, a full description of the manufacture of paper hangings, with engravings; how the deceptive curve is produced in casting the ball by the baseball pitcher, his attitude, how he holds and handles the ball, all fully illustrated. The number before us also contains engravings of Capt. Eads' proposed ship railway across the Isthmus, and a novel hydraulic railway locomotive.

In addition to all this it contains many valuable recipes for artisans and housekeepers.

This publication will be found instructive and entertaining to all classes but will be best appreciated by the most intelligent. Published by Munn & Co., 37 Park Row, New York, at $1.50 a year, and sold by all news dealers.

Special Examination.

There will be a special examination of teachers at Waterloo, on Saturday, March 19th, and at Butler, Saturday April 2nd.

Northeast of Court House, Auburn, Ind.

Auburn Courier.

Local and Miscellaneous.

All Sing.

—Beautiful strains of music attracted the attention of the passers-by, along the court square on Sunday afternoon. No one could imagine where it came from, but a COURIER reporter, who is always on the look-out, after wasting time and patience, found that it was the glee club practising in H. C. Peterson's office. Only that, and nothing more.

—A lady and gentleman from Ohio, came to Auburn Junction last Monday evening, and having a sick child, put up at the S'amets House. The little sufferer gradually grew worse, in spite of the best medical treatment, and died on Thursday, and was buried in the Auburn cemetery. The afflicted parents have the sympathy of all who have been acquainted with the sad facts here stated. They think of remaining here, to be near the remains of their little one.

Another Concert.

The concert fever seems to be still raging, and to keep the entertainment warm, our boys have concluded to give another, one week from Friday night, at Ensley's hall. The object of this is to keep Mr. Calkin as their teacher, and without some public benefit, they can not do so. It is only a trifling sum on the part of each individual, but when taken altogether it amounts to a nice little sum. We hope they will be encouraged.

Mad Dogs.

We hear, from a reliable source, that a mad dog was chased and killed on Saturday evening, near Concord township, in this county. The dog belonged to Mr. McCoy, a couple of miles south of town, and has been running here and there for several days, not known by any one that he was in this condition until the latter part of the week. It is said that several canines have been bitten by this animal, and the owner of each one should be very careful and keep a close eye upon these unfortunate victims. They should be killed immediately after the slightest symptoms are discovered.

—We take the following from a Grand Haven paper of recent date. It will be of interest to our readers and the many friends of Rev. Mr. Johnson generally:

"The meetings in the Presbyterian church during this week have been very interesting, and remarkably well attended. There is unmistable evidence of an increasing interest in those who attend this church. Ever since the Rev. Johnson became pastor of this church the attendance at the services has been steadily on the increase. On sabbath evenings especially the church is completely filled by an attentive and appreciative audience. Our Presbyterian friends will either have to build a larger church, or get a less interesting preacher than they have at present.

—We clip the following from the Ottumwa (Iowa) Times: Mr. J. A. McKay, the gentlemanly construction superintendent, has been laboring under great difficulties, on account of the tardy arrivals of material. We think the bridge company has been fortunate in the selection of a superintendent, as he has shown himself, not only a skillful mechanic, but devoted and faithful to the interest to the company. Mr. McKay's straightforward business ways are appreciated by our citizens and all who have dealings with him. His course here has been such as to gain the respect of all our citizens.

—T. J. Cuppy and Miss France Stahl were married last evening. We have no time to spare this morning, and can only wish them a happy future.

—G. H. Gugerli, merchant-tailor, has the best assortment of fancy suitings and dress goods, to be found in the county.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co., have the finest stock of spring clothing, hats and gent's furnishing goods, in the market.

—"Love," says a writer, "lightens the heart." It has been known to have precisely the same effect upon the pocket book.

—The Presbyterian society will give a maple sugar social, in the basement rooms of the church, on Friday evening, March 18.

—Those who contemplate building will do well to call on Kiblinger & Co. before buying hardware, doors, sash and glass. 9tf —Spencerville boys must not be so premature when they come to see our girls. Wait until that other fellow gets the bounce.

—Several of our young ladies will teach their first term of school this summer. Sixteen dollars a month and board 'round.

—Horsemen must remember that we have the material for executing the best style of horse bills of any shop in the county.

—Who knows anything about the election on the subject of the constitutional amendments? It must be a still hunt this time.

—And now "they say" that another of our fair maidens will go to Fort Wayne and throw herself into the matrimonial noose.

—The Fort Wayne log men, who have been working here all winter, packed up their traps and left for Avilla Monday.

—Major Sprott, who has been under the weather for a couple of weeks, is out again. We are glad to see the old major out again.

—J. W. Squires, of Corunna, is reading medicine with Dr. Mercer. We prophesy for J. W. a successful career in his chosen profession.

—We extend a cordial invitation to everybody to call and see the COURIER office. Ladies should call on Thursday while the presses are running.

—Sherm. Hollister started on a run for Fort Wayne Tuesday, but abandoned the idea when he reached the corner of Jackson and Seventh streets.

—George Foster was the only man in town who was not up before the grand jury, but then George don't drink, and the grand jury had no use for him.

—McQuiston & Ralston will sell you best white granite unhandled tea cups and saucers for 45c a set. Look at their dishes and glassware before you buy.

—The next regular meeting of the Auburn Historical Society will be held at the art gallery next Thusday evening, March 15.

D. J. SWARTS, Pres. MRS. WILLIS, Sec'y.

—While Sherm. Hollister was cleaning off his portico last Sunday, a shovelful of snow got in John Bear's way, and he gracefully bunted it to one side.

—A good many of the boys are on the anxious seat just now on account of being invited by the grand jury to come in and uncork themselves and tell what they know.

—Joe Beugnot came over from Hicksville Saturday, to see the b'hoys, and, on being told that the grand jury excitement was a-bilin', made his exit in a hurried manner.

—The band boys are determined to have Mr. Calkins become a resident of Auburn, and are using every endeavor to secure for him a permanent "posish" at some paying job.

—The saloon-keepers did a "moral" business last week. What a wonderful commotion six men can scare up, while they are locked in a little room at the court-house.

—In the language of the Republican, we neglected to mention last week, that Mr. Hollopeter received a bad sprain about his ankle, and is compelled to use crutches.

—The most pleasant and prompt cough remedy is Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. Children cry for it. Call on your druggist and try a bottle of it. Price only 25 and 50 cents.

—W. C. McGonigal is home temporarily, from the far west. Of course he called on the COURIER to chat of old times. Mac. looks well, evidently the mountain air agrees with him.

—John Bunch and French Pete had a fight last Saturday night, and the former came out victorious. Pete only got in one lick, and that was accomplished by using a step-ladder.

—People who are choice in their language will please not say hereafter that this is a "cold snap" or a "cold spell." The proper English for the occasion, is that we are experiencing a polar wave.

—We are always pleased to recommend a good article. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup never fails to cure a cold or cough in a short time. Try it. Only 25 and 50 cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

—Fred. April says that the democratic papers down south are solid goods, but those published here are sugar-coated. Bah! Who is Fred. April, and what does he know about democratic papers?

—Several horse buyers have been in town this week, making some light bids on our horses. DeKalb county is getting a good stock of steeds, and buyers will find out that it takes money to "let the mare go."

—Jim. Hazzard was released from jail Tuesday. It is certainly wonderfull how man will end. Instead of the high-toned, aristocratic Jim., as he used to be, his general appearance looks more like that of a boot-black.

—It will pay you to call on us, and see those cheap sets of the library of universal knowledge, from the American Book Exchange, as well as many other books that are offered at a bargain, including Knight's History of England, in two volumes cloth, at only three dollars, at M. B. Willis & Co's. 10-2w.

—Last Saturday was a beautiful day to sleigh ride, and it seemed as though everybody was enjoying what is supposed to be the last run. Old Sol came out in full costume toward evening and Sunday morning, and mud took the place of the beautiful.

—We have received the Evening Star, published by Pecks & Mays, at Hot Springs, Arkansas. There is a good display of talent in the editorial line, but the general make-up of the paper does not appear as bright as some other stars we have seen.

—Jim Rodenbaugh got sick one day last week, and was unable to go home in his every day way of going to his meals. The hacks were all spoken for, and Jim procured a couple of experienced drivers and landed safely at his destination with his own conveyance.

—We notice material for a new dwelling house on the corner of Jackson and Second streets. Ike Jones is going to have it erected, and just as likely as not, he intends following in the footsteps of his brother hardware clerk across the way—the cage before the bird.

DIED.—At Danville Hendricks county Ind., on March 5, of typhoid fever, Miss Florida Jackman, aged 22 years.

Miss Jackman has been a teacher and is well known in this county, her people being among the prominent citizens of Smithfield township. Her untimely death casts a gloom over a large circle of friends.

—Rev. A. D. Rowe, a missionary from India, will lecture at the Lutheran church, on Friday evening, of this week. He has with him, a number of idols and other articles belonging to idol worship. Also native women's dresses and fancy embroidery work, done by Hindoos. These will be shown. All are cordially invited. Lecture free.

—List of unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice, at Auburn, Indiana, March 5, 1881: Della Brooks, Samuel Chickering, H. Crookes, John Gockley, Vie Henderson, John Harkey, Benjamin Hurraw, Ettie Lochmer, Frank McKinley, James Monroe, Will. A. Place, Mary Raub, J. L. Smith and Rebecca Thomas.

JOS. RAINIER, Postmaster.

—There was a bad mash up on the B. & O., a short distance west of Milford junction, Monday night. A broken rail threw a freight train off the track, and the second section ran into it, badly smashing seventeen cars, mostly empties. Blackburn, a brakeman was slightly injured, and fireman Wm. A. Dock was badly scalded, but with good care may recover. One of the engines was a 40-ton mogul.

Court.

Thursday—Mrs. Susannah Delamar was granted a divorce from her truant Joseph and both parties are happy.

Mrs. Valera Spurgin was duly unmarried from Abraham, for reasons which were deemed sufficient by the court.

Jonathan Fair and Francis Powell were each charged $10 and costs for disturbing a lawful meeting. The remainder of the day was consumed in arguing motions, discharging rules, etc., etc.

Friday—Jas. V. Hazzard, ex-cashier of First National Bank of Auburn, was tried for embezzlement before Judge Carpenter and was acquitted. Prosecutor Peterson and P. V. Hoffman for the state, Ross & Hartman for defendant.

Frank Emerson who has been in jail for six months was discharged on swearing that he had no property.

A Mrs. Rogers from Waterloo, made application to have her three boys sent to the House of Refuge at Plainfield, (14 miles from Indianapolis) which was ordered by the court, and Sheriff Leas took them there the fore part of the week.

Saturday no court.

Monday was taken up in arguing demurrers and settling issues.

Tuesday—Divorce in case of Jacob Marks vs. Adeline, granted to plaintiff.

Chas. Hoopingarner, of Butler, plead guilty to four indictments for violation of liquor law, and was fined $20 and costs in each case. "Gee whiz."

Wm. Rainier, of Auburn, plead guilty to three indictments for allowing minors to play billiards in his saloon and was fined $5 and costs in each case. "Ouch."

Wm. Groscop plead guilty to two indictments for allowing minors to play pool in his saloon, and was fined $5 and costs in each case, and one of $10 and costs for violating the liquor law, and the end is not yet.

Sunday Happenings.

No funerals.

The Baptists are holding a protracted meeting.

The Sunday schools flourished more than ordinarily.

Fred. Yesbera did not sing in the Presbyterian choir.

There were no services at the Methodist in the evening.

The congregation was very large at the Presbyterian in the evening.

The hats were passed around and received their usual contributions—nickels and buttons.

The average high toned youth took back seats. They will go forward after the spring styles of clothing arrive.

Pleasure riding was not indulged in very extensively, although several of our rural chaps, with a Cincinnati buggy and the fattest horse in the place, were making the mud fly, regardless of expenses, down Main and up Jackson streets, the better part of the day.

The day was beautiful overhead and a large number of pedestrians were walking to and fro, from early morn till night. The prominent corners on Main street were crowded with old men, the middle aged and the youth, and the hearty welcome of the spring-like day was generally enjoyed and appreciated.

The sermon delivered at the Presbyterian church, by the Rev. Thos. Doggett, of Bryan, Ohio, was well received, being in the popular opinion of the audience, one of the best that has been listened to from this pulpit for a long time. The reverend gentleman commanded an easy flow of language, a graceful motion in his gestures, and talked decidedly to the point and with the exception of the affectation used in words of more than one syllable, he has certainly chosen his natural avocation.

Waterloo.

—Frank Gerber of Ligonier, was in town Friday.

—For the best nickel cigars, go to Brand & Duncan.

—Miss Jennie Ryerson, of Ft. Wayne is visiting with Mrs. Barns this week.

—Ira J. Shook is now employed as night watch at the Lake Shore depot.

—Wilson Shull left last Sunday night, to take a position as musician in a circus.

—H. J. Myers, the baker, has moved into his new quarters in the old post-office building.

—Bassett, the jeweler, talks of trading his residence for property in the west part of town.

—A certain young man threatens to thrash like Mannheimer, for squeezing his girl's hand at a dance.

—A bible agent, who boarded with Charlie Gillett's folks a short time, left the other day, and forgot to settle up.

—The M. E. social will be entertained by Mrs. Ezra Patterson, on Wednesday afternoon and evening of next week. All are invited.

—Miss Florida Jackman, daughter of Wesley Jackman of Smithfield township, died last week at Danville, Ind., where she was attending school.

—Some sneak thief broke into Mr. Morell's shop last Thursday night and stole three pairs of boots and a pair of shoes. It will be lively, if Phil. gets his eye on him.

—The teachers' meeting on Saturday, was well attended. Interesting papers were read by Mr. Coe, Mr. Grubb, Miss Kester, Miss Clark, Mrs. Lamport and the Superintendent.

—The young people of the Presbyterian church, took in $31.71 at the oyster supper. It was a great success, and reflects much credit on the management. Try again.

—We admire the judgment of the rascal who broke into Phil. Morell's shoe shop. He knew where good work was to be found, which proves that even a thief likes a good pair of boots.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A New York dispatch says that Feb 25, 1881, will be a memorable day in the history of Wall street. The lull that followed Sherman's announcement to purchase bonds was followed by a fall that bordered on a panic. All through the afternoon stocks fell. The excitement was intense. On Wall, Broad and New streets small groups of excited men gathered discussing the situation. On almost every face there was anxious expression, and many a hand that took tape trembled with excitement. The conflict between the banks and the Government seemed to favor the former, for accordingly as the banks received their checks for bonds that they sold to the Government, just so soon were they deposited with the Sub-Treasurer to retire circulation. Meantime the market continued to fall, and the minutes to the closing of the day were anxiously counted. Money was 1 per cent. bonus over night. The banks refused all loans, and were calling in their loans as rapidly as human industry could. In addition to the call for $25,000,000 of bonds made the previous day, Secretary Sherman authorized the Sub-Treasurer at New York to disburse $10,000,000 for 5 and 6 per cents., at par and accrued interest. This caused a temporary buoyancy, and prices recovered 1 to 4¼ per cent., but during the afternoon there were reactions and rallies until the last hour, when the trading was enormous, and the downward movement so rapid as to amount almost to a panic. The decline for the day ranged from 1 to 14½ per cent. Money was stringent, the rate for call loans being 6 per cent., ¾ to 1½ per cent. per diem added; even at this figure solid mercantile houses were unable to obtain the amounts they required. Exchange fell so low that foreign transactions were virtually suspended. The losses were enormous, and that no failures occurred is strong evidence of the soundness of business and the solvency of dealers.

E. C. Hayden was hanged at Windsor, Vt., for murdering his wife. He requested permission to examine the gallows, and instructed the hangman how to pinion his arms. In the calmest manner possible he declared himself innocent.... Lottery and policy dealers in New York have actually been forced to suspend business. Robert Dunn was fined $1,000 and sentenced to the penitentiary for six months for selling lottery tickets.

The threatened panic in New York has been averted. The purchase of bonds, by order of Secretary Sherman, threw $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 on the street and loosened the money market, and the arrival of several millions more from outside cities almost completely restored confidence.

Charles Merrill, of China Village, near Augusta, Me., killed his mother and concealed her body in a haymow until it was frozen, when he cut it into pieces. Part he burned and the rest he buried in the snow. On being arrested he confessed his crime, coolly relating the circumstances....Fire destroyed the car-shops at Laconia, N. H. The loss is $60,000, and 250 men are thrown out of employment.

Two tramps were burned to death on the cinder dump of the rolling mill at Paterson, N. J., where they had gone to sleep.

THE WEST.

Bartley Campbell's greatest work, "My Partner," is the feature during the present week at Haverly's Chicago Theater. The cast is almost the same as that engaged in the last presentation of the play there. Louis Aldrich appears as Joe Saunders, and the remainder of the cast is first-rate, including several names well known to Western amusement lovers.

Vigilantes at Albuquerque, New Mexico, took from jail and hanged to a tree Faustino Guittero, implicated in the murder of Col. Potter. This is the fourth lynching for participation in this crime....P. W. Strader, who formerly represented the First Ohio district in Congress, died at Ashtabula. He was for many years ticket agent of the Little Miami railroad..... The eighteenth annual report of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company shows that the company has 1,061 miles of road in operation, and that the common stock has been increased 11,160 shares in the last year. The gross earnings from all sources amount to $7,687,225, an increase over the previous year of $1,931,548. The net earnings were $3,625,402, an increase over the previous year of $919,245.

The St. Paul Pioneer-Press had an interview with a prominent furrier from Michigan, at Miles City, who says that the buffalo are becoming extinct at a rapid rate, and gives it as his opinion that of the 31,000 killed near Miles City this season only 20,000 were slaughtered for their hides.... A new company, under the Presidency of James F. Joy, has purchased the Detroit Post and Tribune, paying therefor $150,000.....Jordan Thomas, a mulatto barber, has eloped from Lancaster, Ohio, with Lucretia Watts, said to be a very handsome white girl.....Eleven spans of the bridge across the Arkansas river at Kinsley, Kan., were cut away by floating ice. ....On the ground that a Chinaman is not a white man, Judge Moran, of the Criminal Court of Chicago, has refused naturalization papers to a native of the Celestial empire.

At St. Paul, on the evening of the 1st inst., while both houses of the Minnesota Legislature were in session, fire was discovered in the dome of the Capitol, and in two hours nothing remained of the building but the walls and smoking ruins. The alarm was given in the Assembly and Senate none too soon. When the doors of the former were thrown open, and the cry "Fire!" raised, it was followed by a blinding cloud of smoke, and many members rushed for the windows, while the occupants of the gallery stampeded out through the halls. Owing to the fire burning downward, the contents of the executive offices on the lower floor, which were not in the vaults, were saved. The records of the Supreme Court are all saved, although the valuable and extensive law library is lost. The library and relics of the State Historical Society were also destroyed. ....A train on the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad was derailed near Macon, Mo., and about a dozen passengers received slight injuries. A wrecking train en route to the scene of the accident, with thirty-six persons on board, was thrown through a bridge into a creek, a distance of twenty feet. Dr. Wood, one of the physicians on the train, was killed instantly, and George Sewick, Frank Lock, Walter Jury and Walter Hallet died soon after of the injuries received. John Connor will hardly survive, and the thirty other persons who were on board the train were more or less injured.

It has developed that Frank J. Wright, a reputable lawyer of Westminster, Md., was recently hanged in the mountains of Colorado by a band of vigilantes, for the alleged theft of mules which he had purchased from a stranger....At Bisbee, Arizona, James Jourdan, a saloon keeper, shot and mortally wounded Ben Hogan, a noted prize fighter.

The depot and hotel of the Burlington road, at Galesburg, Ill., caught fire from a defective flue and were totally consumed, the loss aggregating $30,000. The guests of the hotel barely had time to escape.

THE SOUTH.

John Vonderheide was hanged at Shelbyville, Ky., recently, for the murder of Rebecca Johnson, a colored girl, near Brownsboro, Oldham county, Ky., on the 21st of July of last year.

Thomas Skelton, the jailer at Hartwell, Ga., was murdered by the only prisoner in his charge, Henry Hill, a negro....In the trial of Col. Cash, the South Carolina duelist, for the murder of William Shannon, the jury failed to agree.

The tug Minnie Hunt exploded her boiler at Baltimore, killing Charles Hunt, the engineer, and James Moore, the fireman....A fire at Franklin, Va., burned $150,000 worth of property.

The death is announced of ex-Gov. Bradford, of Maryland. He was one of the City electors in 1844, represented Maryland in the peace congress in 1861, and was called to the Gubernatorial chair by the Union party. His residence near Baltimore was burned by the Confederate forces. He was Surveyor of the port of Baltimore under President Johnson. —A cabin on the farm of Dudley Hunter, near Shelbyville, Ky., burned, and three children, who had been locked in the house by the mother while absent at a neighbor's, met with a horrible death in the flames....A negro, while attempting to drink water out of a bucket, at Bradwell, Ky., got his head fastened in the vessel and drowned before assistance could reach him.

WASHINGTON.

The funeral of Senator Carpenter took place at his late residence, all the prominent officials in Washington being present. The Rev. Dr. Paret read the burial service. The pall-bearers were Senators Logan, Conkling, Cameron and Cockrell, and Representatives Tucker, Lapham, Page and Hazelton. Mrs. Carpenter and her son and daughter were escorted to the carriage by Gen. Sherman, and following them was the aged mother of the dead Senator. The remains were laid temporarily in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Between Feb. 19 and March 2, the deposits of legal tenders for the purpose of retiring circulation amounted to $18,069,970.

Judge Folger's claim for $185,296 as commission for the sale of revenue stamps while he was Assistant Treasurer at New York, has been disallowed by the United States Supreme Court, to which he had appealed from the Court of Claims. This finally disposes of the case.

POLITICAL.

A Washington telegram says: "Representative Hurd, the leading spirit of the new free-trade organizations, says the purpose is to push forward vigorously and organize Democratic free-trade clubs all through Ohio for a State election this year. Mr. Hurd says free trade will be the Democratic issue in Ohio, supplemented by opposition to the concentrated power of national banks."

Gen. Garfield arrived at Washington on the morning of the 1st inst., accompanied by his mother, his wife, his daughter Mollie and his sons Irvin and Abram, and was welcomed by Col. Bob Ingersoll, Chairman of the Committee on Inauguration Ceremonies. President Hayes, after an interview with Gen. Garfield, issued a proclamation convening the Senate in special session March 4. The new President, after mature deliberation, thought it would not be wise to advocate a departure from the established precedent, and delay the session until the election of a successor to the late Senator Carpenter.

GENERAL.

Mrs. J. J. Astor has sent from New York to the West, through the Children's Aid Society, 813 homeless ones, at a cost of $11,000.

Archbishop Cazeau, of Quebec, is dead. He greatly distinguished himself in the Irish famine of 1847 by aid to immigrants and the protection of orphans....The loss of the brigantine Isabel is reported from St. Johns, N. B. All hands are supposed to have perished.

A dispatch from St. Johns, N. F., says that coast has been visited by the severest gale known in sixty years. Many vessels were wrecked and considerable loss of life is reported.

FOREIGN.

Edmund Yates, the journalist and novelist, is about to start a new afternoon paper in London. Henry Labouchere has purchased an interest in the Pall Mall Gazette.....Parnell is suffering from nervous prostration, and has gone to Paris to recuperate.... News comes by way of London that peace has been concluded between Chili and Peru.

Gen. Colley's forces have suffered another crushing defeat at the hands of the Boers. The engagement took place at Spitzkop, a high position near Laingsnek which the British had occupied, and the fighting was desperate. The Boers charged up hill four times, and were about to abandon their effort to dislodge the British when the latter were forced to retire because their ammunition had not been taken to the extreme summit. There were heavy losses on both sides, but only 100 British escaped. Gen. Colley is reported killed.... Princess Augusta Victoria, bride-elect of the eldest son of the Crown Prince of Germany, arrived in Berlin Feb. 26, and the following day the religious ceremony of the marriage was performed in the chapel of the Royal Castle. A grand court reception was held afterward in Whitehall, followed by a state banquet, at which the Emperor toasted the bride and bridegroom....In the ceremonies connected with the celebration of the birthday of Victor Hugo, at Paris, a procession estimated to number 300,000 marched past the residence of the author and were saluted from the window.

At the request of a large number of Irish landlords, who are about to evict defaulting tenants, the Orange Emergency Committee will endeavor to supply Protestant tenants from Ulster and elsewhere. Evictions of a most distressing character are in progress all over the Green Isle. In one case the furniture of the parish priest of Kilkeman was thrown into the street; in another instance a woman struck the bailiffs and cursed the landlord, while the aged and sick were laid on the roadside..... Fifty armed men visited several houses in Kerry, Ireland, and compelled the farmers to swear that they would pay only Griffith's valuation for their land. They also stole forty guns and some money. Two members of the Land League have been arrested in connection with this raid....Later advices from South Africa are to the effect that a lack of ammunition was not the cause of the British defeat. Gen. Colley overestimated the strength of his position, and left a vital point poorly defended. The Boers, with consummate military tact, discovered his mistake and took advantage of it.... It is reported that preparations have been made by the British Government to evacuate Candahar at the end of March....Tokio, Japan, has been visited by another terrible conflagration. Eleven thousand houses were burned and 30,000 people rendered homeless.

The Arms bill was introduced in the British House of Commons by the Home Secretary on the 1st inst. It prohibits the possession of arms without license, authorizes the search of houses from sunrise to sunset, and empowers the authorities to regulate the importation and sale of arms, dynamite and nitro-glycerine. The act is to remain in force five years. It was declared urgent by a vote of 395 to 37, and passed....Childers, the British Secretary of War, stated in the House of Commons that in Gen. Colley's battle with the Boers he had 88 killed, 122 wounded, and 50 taken prisoners.

Gen. Roberts, who is to succeed to the command of the British troops in South Africa, has left London for the seat of war. The troops under orders for the Cape will increase the force there by 5,000. The body of Gen. Colley has been delivered to the British..... A Paris cablegram announces the death of Drouyn de L'Huys, who was Minister of Foreign Affairs in the first Cabinet of President Louis Napoleon, and afterward under the empire. He served as Ambassador to London, and represented France in the conference of Vienna.

In the course of the debate on the Arms bill in the British House of Commons, Dillon said that if the tenants were to be disarmed the landlords should be treated in the same manner. If he were an Irish farmer he would keep a rifle with which to shoot his landlord: He wished the Irish had proclaimed civil war. Dillon was called to order for his language, and Lord Harcourt, replying to him, said he had uttered sentiments that would bring horror and disgust to the mind of every honest man. Healy interrupted Lord Harcourt repeatedly, charging him with uttering untruths, and was finally named by the Chair and suspended by a vote of 233 to 15.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

In the United States Senate, on Friday, Feb. 25, bills were passed constituting Atlanta, Chattanooga and Indianapolis ports of delivery. The bills for assay offices at Deadwood and in Arizona were reported favorably. Mr. Beck presented as a substitute a measure authorizing the issue of $20 notes of the United States in exchange for gold coin, the latter to be used for no purpose but the redemption of the notes. Bills for the erection of Government buildings at Clarksburg, W. Va., and Minneapolis, were passed. The Agricultural bill, as amended by the Senate committee, was taken up and passed. There was some discussion of Voorhees' bill to protect innocent purchasers of fraudulent patent rights, but no action was taken. The Committee on Commerce added $835,000 to the amount appropriated by the River and Harbor bill as it passed the House. Of the increase Wisconsin gets $100,000, Michigan $31,000, Minnesota $25,000, Indiana $40,000; $25,000 goes to improve the harbor of Vicksburg, and $35,000 to improve the Missouri river from Kansas City to its mouth. The bill as amended was reported to the Senate. The greater part of the executive session of the Senate was consumed in debate concerning the Alabama Attorneyship. It was reported adversely by the Judiciary Committee, but was finally confirmed by a small majority. The House of Representatives remained in session all Thursday night without coming to an understanding on the Apportionment bill. Several propositions were made by one side or the other, but all were rejected. Finally, about daylight, a compromise committee was appointed, and a recess taken until 10:30 o'clock. After recess, resolutions of respect to the memory of Senator Carpenter were adopted, and the House adjourned. The session of Friday began at 11 o'clock. Two or three unimportant measures were passed, and the House went into committee of the whole on the Sundry Civil bill. Mr. Goode moved to insert an item of $200,000 to establish coaling stations on the Isthmus of Panama, and the debate on this subject occupied the remainder of the session.

In the Senate, on Saturday, Feb. 26, Mr. Burnside made a strong speech in support of the Monroe-doctrine resolution recently reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. No action was taken. The River and Harbor bill was considered in committee of the whole, all the amendments proposed by the Committee on Commerce being agreed to. Among these was one raising the appropriation for South Chicago to $50,000, at the request of Mr. Logan. The bill was reported to the Senate, and, after a long debate, passed by a vote of 32 to 12. Messrs. Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Logan, Pendleton and Cockrell were constituted a committee in relation to the obsequies of the late Senator Carpenter. Bills for the relief of settlers upon absentee Shawnee lands in Kansas, etc., and to authorize a charge for melting or refining bullion when at or above the standard, were passed. The House of Representatives went into committee of the whole on the Sundry Civil bill, debate on the pending amendment to appropriate $200,000 for coaling stations on the isthmus being limited to twenty minutes. The amendment was agreed to. On motion of Mr. Springer, an amendment was adopted appropriating $8,000 for the purchase of Ingalls' portrait of the late Thomas Ewing. The remainder of the session was occupied in consideration of the bill, which was finally reported to the House, the previous question seconded, and the main question ordered. No vote was taken. The services in honor of the late Fernando Wood were postponed until 8 o'clock Monday evening. A recess was then taken until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

The Monroe doctrine resolution was referred to in the Senate on Wednesday, Feb. 28, Mr. Eaton announcing that he would press the resolution to a vote. The bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell worthless vessels and place the proceeds to the credit of a naval construction fund was recommitted. A bill giving any medical, pay, or engineer officer who has served, or may serve a term as chief of a bureau of the navy, and whose name has been on the navy register thirty years, the relative rank and pay of a Commodore on the retired list, was passed. After some further business, Mr. Windom obtained the floor and, anticipating his intention by twenty-four hours, addressed the Senate in support of the Monroe doctrine resolution. A bill was passed appropriating $70,739 as payment of the claim of Capt. Samuel C. Reid, of the privateer Gen. Armstrong, which was sunk by the British fleet in a neutral harbor during the war of 1812. President Hayes sent a message to Congress accompanied by a report from Collector Merritt, of New York, in reply to Senator Conkling's resolution as to the enforcement of the civil-service rules in the New York Custom House and postoffice. Collector Merritt's report sets forth that all permanent appointments have been conferred in accordance with the civil-service rules, adopted by him when he took charge of the office; that promotions have been made on the ground of length of service and efficiency alone and that the efficiency of the office has been increased. The Senate adopted the conference reports on the Legislative, Postoffice and Indian Appropriation bills, and passed a bill for the survey of public lands in Lucas and Ottawa counties, Ohio. The House of Representatives met in continuation of Saturday's session, and proceeded to vote on the amendments to the Sundry Civil bill. That striking out the provision for the purchase of the private papers of Gens. Bragg and Polk, and that appropriating $200,000 for coaling stations on the Isthmus of Panama, were agreed to. The House then went through the motions of adjourning and reassembling for Monday's session, and proceeded with the consideration of the bill. The amendment requiring our representatives to the monetary conference to insist upon the recognition of silver was rejected. The bill finally passed. Mr. Reagan moved non-concurrence in the Senate amendments to the River and Harbor bill and the appointment of a conference committee. This was agreed to. An attempt was made to call up the Funding bill, but it failed. Mr. White proposed a constitutional amendment prohibiting the payment of claims for property injured or destroyed in the late war. Eulogies upon Fernando Wood were delivered at the evening session. There are 1,664 bills and resolutions pending in Congress.

In the United States Senate, on Tuesday, March 1, the Committee on Foreign Relations was discharged from the consideration of bills for railways or ship canals across the isthmus. Bills were passed: To establish a life-saving station at Louisville; to dispose of Osage Indian lands in Kansas, and to open a portion of the Fort Ridgely reservation to Minnesota to homestead and timber-culture entry The Japanese Indemnity bill, directing the payment of $1,463,224 to Japan, came up and was discussed, but no action was taken. There was a bare quorum present at the evening session. The conference report on the Fortifications bill was agreed to, and several House bills were taken up and passed. In the House, the General Deficiency bill, the last of the appropriations, was reported. The Senate amendments to the Agricultural appropriation were concurred in, one of which gives $10,000 for the investigation of pleuro-pneumonia. The Senate amendments to the River and Harbor bill were agreed to, making the appropriation $11,141,800. Mr. Acklen's title to the seat from the Third Louisiana district was confirmed. A struggle then ensued over the Funding and Apportionment bills. The House refused to consider the latter, but the Funding bill was finally taken up. Mr. Conger raised the point of order that the Senate amendments must be considered in committee of the whole, but the chair overruled it. Without acting upon the measure, the House took a recess. On reassembling the consideration of the bill was resumed, and Mr. Conger raised more points of order, which were regularly overruled. Mr. Tucker demanded the previous question upon all but four of the Senate amendments, and it was carried by a vote of 109 to 60. The amendments were concurred in. Attempts were made to modify the remaining amendments, but they failed, and, after a struggle which lasted until 12:45 a. m., the House took a recess, leaving three of the Senate amendments to be disposed of.

The Senate took up the Sundry Civil bill, on Wednesday, March 2, to which the Senate committee had added $2,119,000. Most of the amendments were agreed to without important debate. Mr. Bayard offered a new amendment, authorizing the Secretary to use surplus money for the purchase or redemption of bonds. It was adopted without objection. An amendment offered to the bill to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to reimburse President Hayes for the amount he paid out of his own private purse ($3,350) to meet the expenses of the Wayne MacVeagh Commission to Louisiana in 1877 gave rise to a lively discussion, participated in by Beck, Bailey, Conkling, Jones and Thurman. Beck and Bailey favored the amendment, and the latter took occasion to say of President Hayes' administration that there had been no better or purer one for fifty years. Conkling made the amendment the occasion to give the President a hit, sneered at the Commissioners as tourists, and ridiculed the item. Thurman humorously requested that the amendment be allowed to go over till the next Senate could act on it, and then John Sherman, who was one of the promoters of the commission, could defend it against the ridicule of Conkling, and Wayne MacVeagh, the prospective Attorney General, could give his opinion on the legality of the item. After some more discussion the amendment was tabled by a unanimous vote. A vote on the amendment appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of the papers of Confederate Gens. Bragg and Polk resulted in its defeat. The bill was finally passed. The Funding bill was received from the House and signed by the Vice President. An attempt was made to go into executive session to act upon the contested cases, but the Republicans, in view of the fact that many of their number were absent, opposed and finally defeated it. The House of Representatives met in continuation of Tuesday's session, and the struggle over the Funding bill was resumed. Mr. Tucker demanded the previous question on the Senate amendment authorizing public subscriptions for the new bonds and certificates, but there was no quorum voting. Under a suspension of the rules, the Deficiency bill was taken up and passed. Mr. Tucker then returned to the attack, and after a good deal of filibustering on the part of the Republicans, succeeded in obtaining concurrence in the remaining Senate amendments. All other amendments proposed were rejected, and the bill passed. Mr. Carlisle then moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill amending the Funding act so as to conform with the amendments proposed by the Ways and Means Committee. After some debate the motion prevailed and the bill passed. The Speaker then signed the enrolled Funding bill, and the House adjourned.

An attempt was made in the Senate on Thursday, March 3, to replace the Funding bill, adding to the Deficiency Appropriation bill an amendment embodying all the main features of the vetoed act, but leaving out the objectionable fifth section. Objection was made to the addition as not being germane to the bill, and it was ruled out. The Senate, after an animated discussion, passed the amendment appropriating $165,000 for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to indemnify the Ponca tribe of Indians for losses sustained by them in consequence of their removal to the Indian Territory, to secure to them lands in severalty on either the old or new reservation, in accordance with their wishes, and to settle all matters of difference with these Indians. The Japanese Indemnity bill passed the Senate by a vote of 46 to 6. The bill directs the payment to the Government of Japan of $1,463,224. Of this sum $248,000 is to go as a prize to the crews and officers of the United States ship Wyoming and the steamer Takiang. In the House, the Apportionment bill introduced by Mr. Cox, amended by the insertion of 319 members instead of 307, passed by a vote of 145 to 113. Several Democrats voted with the Republicans for the number inserted. The veto message on the Refunding bill was received from the President and read by the Clerk. Mr. Tucker moved that the message be printed and laid on the table for future consideration. Carried. The Sundry Civil bill, which appropriates $21,579,000, passed the House in the form in which it was reported from the conference committee. Mr. Singleton, at midnight, made the point of order that the 4th of March had arrived, and all legislation after that hour was illegal. Nothing of importance was done after that hour, a general good time being indulged in, and the floor of the House being given over to a scene of the utmost confusion. A recess till 10 o'clock was carried about 3 a. m.

The Agitation in Ireland.

A recent cable dispatch from London says: "Private letters show considerable improvement in Ireland. 'Boycotting' fails, the reign of terror is reduced to narrower limits, tenants are beginning to pay rents long withheld, while the hold of the League on the people is already loosened."—A Dublin dispatch states that "Lord Annerly's threat to evict all tenants on his Longford estates, and take into his own hands about one-third the entire county, has directed attention to the black shadow of eviction which is looming over a vast number of farmers in Ireland. The tenants may at present be divided into three classes: First, those who are willing to pay, but are afraid to; second, those who can pay, but will not; third, those neither able nor willing to pay. The first class are very numerous. They already show signs, as Dillon says, of giving way. The second class, it is presumed, will follow the example of the first, but in respect to the third class it is feared great difficulty will arise with those who cannot pay. Under the Coercion bill it will be impossible to resist eviction. The tactics which have worked so successfully heretofore will be utterly useless now, because every person resisting a process-server or bailiff will be liable to arrest on the spot and imprisonment for eighteen months without trial."—A late Paris cablegram says, Mr. Parnell and Mr. O'Kelly had a long interview with the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris at the Episcopal Palace. They were received with great courtesy. The Archbishop appeared to take a lively interest in the state of Ireland. He earnestly counseled moderation, and deprecated any departure from legal agitation. Mr. Parnell seemed satisfied with the result of the interview.—Mr. Parnell has addressed the following letter to Victor Hugo:

PARIS, Feb. 24.

ILLUSTRIOUS SIR: The nobility of heart, the deep sympathy with human suffering, and the exertions in favor of oppressed nationalities which have distinguished you throughout life encourage me to invoke your powerful advocacy in behalf of the suffering Irish people. The question is not a sectarian question in its present aspect. It is a purely social question. It is the cause of 5,000,000 of workingmen struggling for justice and for the right to live by their labor in their own land, against a small and privileged class, foreign in their origin, foreign in their aspirations, and supported in their injustices and tyranny by the force of a foreign nation. What have been the results of the domination of this class? They are written in the history of recurring famines, decimating generation after generation. No human words can paint the miseries and sufferings which have been witnessed even by the youngest among us. Millions have been driven from their homes in despair. Hundreds of thousands have perished miserably of hunger in a land teeming with food. Half of our population exist constantly on the verge of famine, while 10,000 landlords, many of whom have never seen Ireland, riot in extravagance and luxury on the confiscated product of the people's labor. It is against the system which has produced the evils that we struggle. It is to put an end once and forever to this detestable state of society that we appeal to the conscience of all good men, without distinction of creeds, of party, or of nationality, to aid us in shaming the Government of England to do justice to our people. To you, honored sir, who have known how to awaken the sympathy of mankind for "Les Miserables," we feel that we shall not appeal in vain when we ask that your voice shall be raised in behalf of a brave but unfortunate nation. Accept, illustrious sir, the assurances of my high esteem. CHARLES STEWART PARNELL.

If all seconds were as averse to duels as their principals, very little blood would be shed in that way.

THE FUNDING BILL.

President Hayes' Reasons for Vetoing It.

The following is the message of President Hayes vetoing the Funding bill:

To the House of Representatives:

Having considered the bill entitled "An act to facilitate the funding of the national debt," I am constrained to return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with the following statement of my objections to its passage: The imperative necessity for prompt action, and the pressure of public duties in this, the closing week of my term of office, compel me to refrain from any attempt to make any fully satisfactory presentation of my objections to the bill. The importance of the passage at the present session of Congress of a suitable measure for refunding the national debt which is about to mature is generally recognized. It has been urged upon the attention of Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in my last annual message. If successfully accomplished, it will secure a large decrease in the annual interest payments of the nation, and I earnestly recommend, if the bill before me shall fail, that another measure for the purpose be adopted before the present Congress adjourns. While, in my opinion, it would be wise to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to offer to the public bonds bearing 3½ per cent. interest in aid of refunding, I should not deem it my duty to interpose my constitutional objections to the passage of the present bill if it did not contain in its fifth section provisions which, in my judgment, seriously impair the value and tend to the destruction of the present national-banking system of the country. This system has now been in operation almost twenty years. No safer nor more beneficial banking system was ever established. Its advantages as a business are free to all who have the necessary capital. It furnishes a currency to the public which, for convenience and security of the bill-holder, has probably never been equaled by that of any other banking system. Its notes are secured by deposit with the Government of interest-bearing bonds of the United States. The section of the bill before me which relates to the national-banking system, and to which objection is made, is not an essential part of a refunding measure. It is as follows:

SECTION 5. From and after the first day of July, 1881, the 3-per-cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for the safe keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with such banks, but when any such bonds, deposited for the purposes aforesaid, shall be designated for purchase or redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, the banking association depositing the same shall have the right to substitute other issues of the bonds of the United States in lieu thereof; provided that no bond upon which interest has ceased shall be accepted or continued on deposit as security for circulation or for the safe keeping of the public money, and in case the bonds so deposited shall not be withdrawn, as provided by law, within thirty days after interest has ceased thereon, the banking association depositing the same shall be subject to liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller provided for in section 5,234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and provided further, that section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes and providing for the redistribution of national-bank currency, and for other purposes," be and the same is hereby repealed, and sections 5,159 and 5,160 of the Revised Statutes be and the same are hereby re-enacted.

Under this section it is obvious that no additional banks will hereafter be organized, except, possibly, in a few cities or localities where the prevailing rates of interest in ordinary business are extremely low. No new banks can be organized, and no increase of the capital of existing banks can be obtained, except by the purchase and deposit of 3-per-cent. bonds. No other bonds of the United States can be used for that purpose. The $1,000,000,000 of other bonds recently issued by the United States, and bearing a higher rate of interest than 3 per cent., and, therefore, a better security for the bill-holder, cannot, after July 1 next, be received as security for bank circulation. This is a radical change in the banking law. It takes from the banks the right they have heretofore had under the law to purchase and deposit as security for their circulation any of the bonds issued by the United States, and deprives the bond-holder of the best security which the banks are able to give, by requiring them to deposit bonds having the least value of any bonds issued by the Government. The average rate of taxation of capital employed in banking is more than double the rate of taxation upon capital employed in other legitimate business. Under these circumstances, to amend the banking law so as to deprive the banks of the advantage of securing their notes by the most valuable bonds issued by the Government will, it is believed, in a large part of the country be a practical prohibition of the organizing of new banks, and prevent existing banks from enlarging their capital. The national-banking system, if continued at all, will be a monopoly in the hands of those already engaged in it, who may purchase Government bonds bearing a more favorable interest than the 3-per-cent. bonds prior to next July. To prevent the further organization of banks is to put in jeopardy the whole system by taking from it that feature that makes it as it now is, a banking system free, upon the same terms, to all who wish to engage in it. Even the existing banks will be in danger of being driven from business by the additional disadvantages to which they will be subjected by this bill.

In short, I cannot but regard the fifth section of the bill as a step in the direction of the destruction of the national banking system of our country, which, after a long period of business depression, has just entered upon a career of unexampled prosperity. The withdrawal of currency from circulation by the national banks and the enforced winding up of the banks in consequence would inevitably bring serious embarrassments and disaster to the business of the country. Banks of issue are essential instruments of modern commerce. If the present efficient and admirable system of banking is broken down, it will inevitably be followed by a recurrence to other and inferior methods of banking. Any measure looking to such a result will be a disturbing element in our financial system. It will destroy confidence and surely check the growing prosperity of the country.

Believing that the measure for refunding the national debt is not necessarily connected with the National Banking law, and that any refunding act will defeat its own object if it imperiled the national-banking system or seriously impaired its usefulness, and convinced that section 5 of the bill before me would, if it should become a law, work a great harm, I herewith return the bill to the House of Representatives for that further consideration which is provided for in the constitution.

(Signed) RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 3, 1881.

A Yankee in England.

At Liverpool, when I landed, I wanted to get on to Cardiff, so I asked my way of a gentleman in the street, and he says, "by Birkenhead;" but another comes up and he says, "That track is blocked with snow," and he gives me another direction, and in a civil, nice way. I shall have funny things to tell them home. I see a notice about tickets, and I asked for one to Cardiff, and he says, "It's a pound and two." I gave him two, and he hands me the change. When I got into the depot I says, "Where's the train?" "Here," says a sort of policeman, pointing to a row of things like second-hand coffins. "The cars, I mean," I answers, and he says, "Them's them." I says, "Which for Cardiff?" And he says, "This; are you booked?" And I says "No." "Then you can't go in unless you're booked," he says; and I began to think that I had neglected something in the way of papers, and would have to go to the American Consul about it. "That's very awkward," I says. "It would be very awkward for you if you got in and went on without being booked," he answered in a way that made me feel timid; and I began to think of the high-handed style Britishers have of dealing with foreigners, and so I thought I would make a clean breast of the affair, and tell him that I did not know what he meant; and he says, "Come this way and I'll show you," which, he being a big fellow and me a little one, and a stranger, rather increased my trepidation, and the weather so bad and all; but he only took me to the place where I had bought my ticket, and he says, "There, that's the booking-office," and I says, "What shall I do?" "Why, take your ticket," he says; and I answered that I had bought a ticket. "Why didn't you say so before?" and he says, "I did ask you if you was booked and you said 'No;'" and then I laughed, and told him I was an American and didn't understand, and then he laughed, and we had a drink.—*Cor. BURNED TO DEATH.

Frightful Fate of Children Locked Up in a Seminary at Scranton, Pa.

SCRANTON, Pa., Feb. 28.

Seventeen inmates of St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum, of Hyde Park, comprising fourteen boys and three girls, ranging in age from 6 to 12 years, were suffocated last night by an unexplained fire that broke out at 9 o'clock. The number of children under the care of the Sisters was forty—eighteen boys and twenty-two girls. The institution is in charge of several Sisters of Charity, and is situated at the corner of Jackson street and Lincoln avenue. It is four stories in height. On the third floor are two dormitories, separated by a partition, one for the boys and the other for the girls. The children were taken to the third floor to-night by one of the Sisters, who assigned them to their respective rooms. The Sister locked the door and started for the lower floor. When about half way down her attention was attracted to smoke issuing from one of the rooms. It was discovered that a brisk fire was in progress, and the Sister, alarmed for the safety of her charges, hurried back to the girls' dormitory. The inmates were frightened by the smoke that was entering their room from the lower floor, and rushed to the landing. In a short time the Sister led the way down stairs, and all the girls followed her. They were sent to a place of safety. The smoke was now pouring through the hallway in a dense volume. The Sister again started for the third floor to rescue the boys, but she had gone only a short distance when she met a strange man, who told her that the boys had all been removed from the dormitory. She persisted that they were still in their rooms, but the stranger asserted that they were not, and quieted her fears. By this time the firemen had arrived. The fire burned strongly on the second and third floors, and streams were soon being thrown upon the flames. Doubt being expressed about the boys having escaped, the firemen worked toward the dormitory. In a short time they succeeded in clearing a passage. The door of the boys' room was broken open. The surmises of the doubting ones were found to be correct. The children were found huddled together beneath their cots, all having been suffocated. Two of them were slightly scarred by the flames. The calamity has caused excitement such as has never been experienced in this city. At the date of this dispatch (1 a. m.) the streets are filled with people who visited the scene of the horrible occurrence. The terrible result has cast a gloom throughout the city that is positively painful. It cannot be ascertained to-night how the fire originated.

The Lunar Weather Theory.

The general principles of the lunar theory as to the weather are thus stated by Claudius Ptolemy, as quoted by Mr. A. J. Pearce in his "Weather Guide Book," according to Astro-Meteorology:

"The moon's course is to be carefully observed at the third day before or after her conjunction with the sun (new moon), her opposition (full moon), and her intermediate quarters; for if she then shines thin and clear, with no other phenomena about her, she indicates serenity; but if she appears thin and red, and have her whole illuminated part visible, and in a state of vibration, she portends winds from the quarter of her latitude and declination; and if she appear dark or pale and thick, she threatens storms and showers. All halos formed around the moon should also be observed, for if there appears one only, bright and clear, and decaying by degrees, it promises serene weather; but if two or three appear, tempests are indicated; and if they seem reddish and broken they threaten tempests, with violent and boisterous winds; if dark and thick they foreshow storms and snow; if pale, or black and broken, tempests with winds and snow, both; and whenever a great number appear, storms of greater fury are portended."

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1881.

WHAT RILED LORD ROSCOE.

Scathing Speech by Senator Butler, of South Carolina.

[From the Congressional Record.]

Senator Butler called for the reading of Gen. Walker's report on the alleged frauds in South Carolina. Mr. Butler then said:

This full and complete reply to the imputations of unfairness and fraud ought to satisfy the minds of all men and put to shame the authors of the baseless calumnies; but I am not content to stop here. A certain Republican stump orator on a certain occasion in New York city, where there was evidently an uncontrollable desire to "fire the hearts" of his audience, concluded that a just and honest recital of the truth would fail of that purpose, and, therefore, chose the following language of insult and misrepresentation as a more potent appliance for the occasion:

"Perhaps this point will seem to you to challenge some attention. For the population of Southern States we must go back to the census of 1870. That count of the people was made by enumerators not selected by Southern Senators and members of the House as 'non-partisans' and professional reformers. It was made by the regular Marshals and their deputies, and the compensation was so adjusted as to induce thorough visitation and at the same time to guard against exaggeration of numbers. No imputation of fraud was ever cast upon the work. Such a thing as a plot to fabricate a monstrous increase of population in one section in order to baffle the course of nature and the logic of events in another—a plot to change the balance of power and population in order to aggrandize one section by establishing a false basis of representation and apportionment, thus robbing other sections of their share in governing the country, in levying taxes and appropriating money, had not at that time occurred to the conservative foes of radicalism. That particular spoke in the wheel of devilitry had not turned up to the shifty patriot of that day. Now such schemes seem to wax apace. We read of producing false heirs to thrones and estates, but to multiply false heirs without any one to personate them on a scale so grand as seems now in process would stupefy the ingenuity of a French novelist, or anybody else except a thoroughgoing, non-partisan conservative disciple of the Democratic persuasion, wanting nothing for himself, but ready to do and to suffer for a white man's government with 'reform' and 'a change.'"

The same orator makes also the following gratuitous fling:

"This is the ordinance of higher power than a South Carolina census-taker."

And, in the course of the harangue of the aforesaid stump-orator, broadside after broadside of figures, problem after problem in arithmetic, ingeniously ciphered out, were hurled at the South; plausible and delusive, calculated to deceive, but as disingenuous and unfair as the intellect that fabricated them, and malignant in their purpose as the heart that inspired their utterance.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that Gen. Walker states his side of the case in the best possible temper, and with entire impartiality, giving to every ground of suspicion the fullest consideration.

To any fair-minded, honorable man it would seem that this candid explanation should have disarmed adverse criticism, and deserved an honorable withdrawal of every charge of fraud against his work; but such is not the case, and the Government has been subjected to the expense, and Gen. Walker to the trouble and annoyance, of dispatching Col. Butterfield for further investigation and report.

In regard to the census of 1870, and the machinery under which it was taken, Gen. Walker is not content with his own testimony, but brings his predecessors to court, and he characterizes the whole business "as clumsy, antiquated, and barbarous;" that "the machinery it provides is as unfit for use in the census of the United States in this day of advanced statistical science as the smooth-bore, muzzle-loading queen's arm of the Revolution would be for service against the repeating rifle of the present time." It answered its purpose at the time it was put in operation, as did the "smooth-bore," but it belongs to a bygone age. The world has moved, and had moved in 1870, and yet some of the Republican Senators and stump orators of that time permitted a fraud to be perpetrated upon the country under "its clumsy, antiquated, and barbarous" "machinery," and now in advance, and without investigation or a hearing, denounce the work of the tenth census because, forsooth, "Southern Senators and members of the House selected the enumerators." I am prepared to take my share of the responsibility for the selections. The Superintendent of the Census will bear me out in the assertion that as far as I could control it I would consent to the confirmation of no man, Democrat or Republican, whose character was not a guarantee to a faithful, honest performance of his duty. I asked for the appointment of no friend or partisan. I tried to secure the appointment of those only who would do their duty irrespective of party or party interests, and I believe I know only such were appointed and confirmed for South Carolina. And, Mr. President, it will require something more than the sneers and snarls of charlatans, and carpings of disappointed malcontents, to drive me from the good opinion I have of the work on the tenth census in that State. Those intrusted with the work do not belong to that breed of cormorants foisted upon her and sustained by the malevolence and hatred of some of those Republican patriots of 1870 who now challenge the efforts and misrepresent the motives of those of us who strive to rescue her from the palsying, paralyzing touch of their vulgar henchman.

No, Mr. President, there has been no fraud in the enumeration of the inhabitants of South Carolina. The census has been taken with fidelity, and the proof is conclusive, overwhelming, and yet the author of the charge has not the sense of justice to withdraw it, to make honorable amends for a gross misrepresentation. A Presidential election was pending, and perversion, prejudice and injustice were more efficacious for the purposes in hand than truth and justice, and right recklessly were they wielded. They served their purpose, but the traducer of my State and her people shall not escape exposure. The result of that enumeration has converted many confident predictions of partisan politicians as to the drift of political power into dismal fallacies. It has baffled the calculations and clouded the hopes of so many who hate the South and foretold her decadence, that perhaps some allowances should be made for their bad temper and reckless accusations. Not content with criminal participation in despoiling the South by commissioning for that special service a band of greedy vampires, and sustaining them while they plied their insatiate avocation, after she is plundered and bled to depletion the chief reiler of that band of spoliators depreciates her because of her poverty, and upbraids her for her humiliated attitude. Why, Mr. President, when the professional highwayman or outlaw overcomes and robs the helpless wayfarer he, even, is too magnanimous to insult his victim by hurling at him vulgar anathemas and bitter curses.

Let this political highwayman go learn humanity and magnanimity from the reckless outcast, and shelter his ignominy from the hissing storm of scorn and contumely. The lesson, Mr. President, which this last census teaches is an instructive one. It deserves to be prayerfully studied by those who have spent anxious hours "arguing out" the "steady decline" and "stagnation" of the South.

A Soldier of Fortune.

Mr. Thurlow Weed has added another to his thousand and one reminiscences. The last one is designed to reflect glory upon Gen. Grant, whereas it but represents him as a soldier of fortune in politics, ready to accept the nomination of either party. Mr. Weed says that he saw that the cunning Democratic leaders were preparing to give Grant their nomination in 1868, and that he headed them off by getting a lot of Republicans together and committing them to Grant as a candidate, and then hurrying to Grant to commit him to the Republicans. Says Mr. Weed: "As I had known Gen. Grant at Willard's Hotel during the Rebellion, the canvass and its results were freely and frankly talked over for an hour. I informed the General with what astonishment and incredulity Gen. Taylor listened to the first suggestion of his name for President. I also reminded him that a grateful country had rewarded Washington, Jackson, Harrison and Taylor for distinguished services rendered in our several wars, and that history was about to repeat itself in his case. I added that, happily, he need not personally trouble himself about the election; that he had done his work with the bayonet, and the people would do their work with the ballot, concluding with the remark that he could take the Presidential chair unincumbered, free to discharge its responsible duties with an eye single to the prosperity and welfare of the people and country." It has been the opinion of well-informed persons for many years that Grant was in the attitude, in 1868, toward the great parties, of first come, first served. Mr. Weed's explanation shows his appreciation of the situation, and how he advantaged by it for his party.

Hancock's Popular Majority Over Garfield 8,106.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The exact popular result of the Presidential election has been long in dispute, our system of electing President and Vice President not requiring official consolidation of the popular vote. The Enquirer has placed itself in communication with the proper officials of every State in the Union, and has obtained from the Secretaries of State or Returning Boards the full official returns of the whole vote. The following table has been prepared with great care, and the proof diligently compared with the letters of the officials above indicated. It will be noted that Gen. Hancock's popular majority over Gen. Garfield is 8,106, and that, in a total vote of 9,169,213, Gen. Garfield is in a minority of 336,045.

Following is the table, which is official:

Impudence.

It is barefaced effrontery to ask that Gen. Grant be restored to the rank of General of the Army on the ground that he sacrificed a life office and a life salary by consenting to serve the country in the White House.

Nobody questions the historical fact that he did give up a life appointment when he resigned as General to become President. He was only too glad to have the chance.

The talk about a sacrifice is impudent. There was no sacrifice, either of honor or dignity or of dollars and cents. Gen. Grant relinquished the inferior office and took the superior simply because his ambition profited by the exchange. He was much more eager to get into the White House than he was to get out of it, after serving two full terms of four years each.

The relinquishment of the life salary was an equally profitable operation to Gen. Grant. As President he received in eight years the sum of $300,000 in salary alone, leaving out of consideration all the White House allowances and extra appropriations which go to swell the emoluments of the office. What he surrendered was an annuity of $13,500. Had he declined the alleged sacrifice and gone on drawing his salary as General, he would have received up to date from the national treasury $162,000 instead of $300,000. It would have taken him twenty-two years as General to earn the money which eight years in the White House brought him.

If the Democratic Congress is led to bilk the treasury for Gen. Grant's pecuniary benefit, let it not be upon false pretences.—New York Sun.

Amusing Each Other.

At a large dinner party in New York a gentleman was requested to take in a lady between whose family and his own a quarrel and lawsuit had been pending for several years. The gentleman complied, with a bow and a smile, and conversation between him and the lady seemed to be more than usually brisk and lively during the sixteen courses that go to make up a fashionable dinner. At the close of the evening the host, who had been enlightened, in the meantime, as to the existing relations between his guests, apologized to the gentleman for the blunder he had made. "It is of no sort of consequence, my dear fellow," was the reply; "I have taken that lady into dinner five times this winter, and we pass each other the next day without even a bow of recognition. In all probability the breach will never be healed, but we shall continue to amuse each other at dinner parties as long as our friends persist in seating us side by side."

CANAL SCHEMES.

The Various Projects for Uniting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Since the earliest days of ocean navigation the great problem of commerce has been, how to pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific and Indian oceans by the shortest route, and in the least time. It was in order to get to India without passing through the Mediterranean sea that Columbus set out on his voyage that resulted in the discovery of this continent.

The motive behind all the early voyages to the Arctic regions was to find a northwest passage between the Atlantic and Pacific, and thus to avoid the tempestuous passage around Cape Horn. The great enterprise of the Suez canal was carried through for the benefit of commerce, to save the time, expense and danger of doubling the Cape of Good Hope.

The idea of a passage through the united continents of America was conceived for a similar purpose. The advantages of such a canal anywhere between the Mexican line and the point where the connecting Isthmus broadens into the Continent of South America, are evident to anybody who glances at a map of the world. The saving of distance to be traversed by a vessel sailing from Europe, or from any one of our Eastern ports, bound for any port on the Pacific ocean, is measured by thousands of miles.

The Government of the United States has not been backward in considering this matter and in making the necessary explorations. Numerous expeditions have been sent out, and various routes have been at one time or another pronounced feasible. We will mention some of them, and our readers can see where they are by the aid of a map.

Beginning with the northernmost, two routes have been surveyed across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, southward from the Gulf of Campeachy, through two passes in the mountains. As there has never been any question that these were too long and expensive to be constructed, they need not be described.

Next, a route from the Bay of Honduras, southwest through Guatemala. This has likewise been abandoned as impracticable, although at one time it was a favorite scheme.

Then comes the Nicaragua route, which is one of the two most prominently discussed, and likely to be constructed. It leaves the Caribbean sea at the mouth of the river San Juan de Nicaragua, passes up that river to Lake Nicaragua, traverses the lake, and passes thence by an artificial canal to Salinas bay.

The next one worth noticing is the canal through the Isthmus of Panama, which the Lesseps Company is proposing to construct, very nearly by the site of the Panama railroad. This is the shortest of all, and its projectors believe it to be the best of all.

There is one more, which would have been the second choice of M. De Lesseps. It is through the Isthmus of Darien. It passes up the magnificent River Atrato, and also up its branch, the Napipi, to the head of navigation, and thence by a short canal, with a tunnel six miles long, and a few locks, it enters the Pacific at Cupica bay.

There are various opinions about these several projects, all of which, except the Nicaragua and the Panama lines, are now abandoned. The promoters of the Panama canal object to the Nicaragua scheme that the line is too long, and to the locks that will be necessary on both sides of the lake. They also point to the fact that there is no good harbor at either end of the line, making the construction of an artificial harbor necessary.

On the other hand, the advocates of the Nicaragua route object that the Panama line will be vastly more costly, and that it runs through a deadly climate, rendering it certain that the work can only be done at an enormous sacrifice of life, and that the passage through it will be a constant peril to the crews and passengers of vessels taking that route.

They say, also, that while the Nicaragua line is longer, the time to be occupied in making the passage will be more than offset by the greater saving of distance made by vessels choosing it.

That is, while a steamship from Liverpool or New York can reach either Aspinwall or Greytown in about the same time, it will be 1,000 miles or more nearer to California if it enters the Pacific ocean at Salinas bay than if it emerges at Panama.

An Unfortunate Answer.

Says the Richmond (Ky.) Register: Lucien Young's noble action a few years ago, in saving several lives from a wrecked vessel, will be remembered; also, the action of the Kentucky Legislature in publicly recognizing his services. Last winter he was in Frankfort, and while there visited the penitentiary, where he met Sam Holmes, confined for the murder of Col. Napier. Young and Holmes were boys together at school, and fast friends. Young was greatly moved by Holmes' unfortunate condition, and determined to make an effort for his release. To this end he called on the Governor, and made an earnest appeal for a pardon. Gov. Blackburn relented, and the pardon was made out and signed. With the document in his pocket, Young hastened back to the prison to tell the good news to his friend. Before telling him, however, that he had come to make him a free man, Young quietly commenced a conversation, and, after talking a while upon other subjects, finally said:

"Sam, if you were turned loose and fully pardoned, what would be the first thing you would do?"

The convict very quickly responded: "I would go to Lancaster, and kill Judge Owsley and another scoundrel who was a witness against me."

Young uttered not a word, but turned mournfully away, went outside the prison walls, took the pardon from his pocket, and tore it into fragments.

Henry Wilson.

The late Henry Wilson was a consistent teetotaler, and once gave at Washington a dinner without wine to W. E. Forster, now Chief Secretary for Ireland, and another member of Parliament who was also visiting this country. Among the other guests were one or two members of the Cabinet and several foreign Ministers, Senators, Representatives, and journalists. Mr. Z. L. White records that he was among the early arrivals, and that Mr. Wilson drew him aside and told him that he had ordered that no wine should be served. "I have told Mr. Wormley," said the Vice President, "to prepare as good a dinner as he could—to spare no expense—and to furnish the finest brands of cigars, for I don't want my English guests to think that parsimony has caused me to omit the wines," and then he asked his guest if he did not think he had done rightly. During this dinner it was remarked that there were thirteen at the table; and Mr. White adds: "Before the next winter Mr. Wilson himself lay dead in the Capitol."

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, Feb. 25.—SENATE.—The Senate engrossed the Coal Oil bill after striking out the section offering rewards to informers and providing that all adulterated oils shall be sold for the benefit of the State. The Woman's Suffrage bill came up on special order, and, under an amendment offered by Senator Hebron, relieving women of foreign birth from the restrictions of naturalization, the discussion assumed a scope wider than the provisions of the bill, consuming the remainder of the morning and nearly all of the afternoon before a vote was reached. The bill was defeated on final passage—18 to 25. The appointment of Mrs. Rhoda E. Coffin, of Richmond, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Female Reformatory was confirmed.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced: To license druggists by payment of $5 annually, but prohibiting them from selling intoxicants except upon physicians' orders; empowering Circuit Courts to make allowances to Grand Juries in cases where presentments have been made the subject of action for damages. The Committee on Education reported the Common School Education bill, and, after a spirited debate, the word "white" in section 5 was stricken out, so that in effect Trustees will be compelled to furnish educational facilities for all children in the townships, irrespective of color. The bill then passed. The committee also reported approving the management of the Purdue University at Lafayette, the State Normal School at Terre Haute, and the State University at Bloomington, and recommended an appropriation of $60,000 for the mutual benefit of these institutions. The Criminal Code came up for consideration, and some time was fruitlessly spent in trying to change the present method of challenging jurors. The General Appropriation bill was introduced by Mr. Kenner as agreed upon by the Committee of Ways and Means. The State House Tax bill was called up in committee of the whole, but went over indefinitely. The bill providing for a 10-cent levy on the general tax was approved, so also were bills providing for the payment of the war-loan bonds of 1861, and ordering a 1-cent tax for the payment of the temporary-loan debt. After the committee arose, Mr. Hilton introduced a bill dissolving the Provisional Board of Commissioners of the Insane Asylum, and adjournment followed.

SATURDAY, Feb. 26.—SENATE.—The Senate spent the morning in a call of the counties and committees for the introduction of new bills and reports. Between eighteen and twenty new bills were presented, going over pretty much the same ground that has already been traversed time and again. In the afternoon the new Tax bill was considered, but the body adjourned before putting it upon its passage.

HOUSE.—The House completed the consideration of the Criminal Code and passed the bill. There are 335 sections in the act, one of them taking the punishment to which criminals may be sentenced out of the hands of the jury and putting it in the hands of the Judge, except in capital cases. Under the new Criminal Code executions also will be private, shutting out the press, all spectators, and all persons except the officers appointed by the Sheriff, the jury and the relatives of the condemned.

MONDAY, Feb. 28.—SENATE.—The Senate completed reading the civil code. During the afternoon bills were passed amending the law providing for the inspection of mines, changing the time of holding municipal elections in Indianapolis from May until October, and providing for a State Commissioner of Fisheries. The Coal Oil bill and the bill increasing the compensation of the Speaker of the House to $10 per day failed to pass. The Governor submitted for confirmation the name of George I. Reed, editor of the Peru Republican, as Trustee of the State Normal School at Terre Haute, to succeed Alexander C. Hopkins, and that of Barnabas C. Hobbs, of Parke county, to succeed Mr. Nicholson, of Wayne county, who declined reappointment. The terms of the new Trustees will begin Dec. 21, 1881. The Seymour Reform Club petitioned for permission to establish a gift concert on the lottery plan, in order to raise $30,000 for a concert hall.

HOUSE.—At the opening of the House session, Gregory, of Benton, introduced a Local Option Temperance bill, and attempted to secure its reference to a special committee named by himself. The bill increasing the pay of jurors to $2 per day was engrossed. Several hours were exhausted in considering the Codification bill on public offenses, and the provision was stricken out making reporters of the press amenable if they knew of an impending prize fight for failure to acquaint the authorities therewith. A joint resolution passed asking Congress to establish a port of entry at New Albany. The bill making keepers of houses of ill-fame subject to prosecutions for felony was indefinitely postponed by a standing vote. Resolutions in memoriam of the late W. D. Lindsay, of Lawrenceburg, were adopted. The deceased was a brother of Judge Lindsay, of Kokomo, and at the time of his death one of the assistant doorkeepers of the House.

TUESDAY, March 1.—SENATE.—The work of the Senate to-day was marked by a spirited discussion of the Local Option Temperance bill, and its final defeat by a vote of 25 to 23. The voluminous bill relating to officers and offices, coming from the Codification and Revision Committee, was introduced. Among the bills passed was one providing for the purchase of toll-roads by County Boards, appropriating $6,000 to remove a sandbar in the Calumet river, and giving guardians power to mortgage their wards' property under certain contingencies. The Coal-Oil bill was revived and referred to a committee. The Drainage bill, as prepared by the Codification Committee, was passed, together with bills legalizing the acts of the Trustees of Monroeville, Allen county, authorizing the issue of military stores to colleges, and concerning procedure in civil cases as compiled by the Codification Committee. The Civil Code bill passed with but five negative votes, and there was practically no opposition to the measure relieving endowment funds of universities from taxation. The act regulating the working of coal mines was amended so as to exempt mines with a working force of not over ten men from inspection, and requiring the Inspector to be a practical miner. The bill authorizing cities to guarantee part payment of bridge bonds also passed.

HOUSE.—The House during the morning session passed Senate bills relative to free gravel roads, and for the relief of Madison county from the result of the burning of the Court House; also, providing against loss by destruction of records. Considerable time was wasted in forcing the consideration in committee of the whole of the General Appropriation bill, and the afternoon came and went without material progress. The State University appropriation was increased to $25,000 and the Purdue University to $20,000, and a determined effort was made to reduce the salary of the Governor's private secretary to $800 from $2,000, but without success. An amendment was introduced to the State-House bill creating a tax of 2 cents on each $100 for building-purposes, and forbidding the borrowing of money on the credit of State for the erection of the new buildings. Under its provisions $831,000 is furnished with which to float the board until the next meeting of the General Assembly. The bill was introduced and advanced to a third reading repealing the December, 1872, enactment and providing for the payment of the old bonds issued prior to 1841. Bills were introduced making stockholders individually liable in specific cases and permitting railways to enter on and appropriate land.

WEDNESDAY, March 2.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the bill amending the Election law by providing that in towns of 3,000 population and less the voting shall be done at one precinct. The bill also passed protecting the literary property of public libraries from mutilation and defacement, and making the offense in this direction a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. During the afternoon the Drainage bill, being a codification of all the laws on that subject, was passed, and so was the bill increasing the per diem of the Speaker and Lieutenant Governor to $10. The Committee on Education reported on the condition and needs of the State educational institutions. Objectionable features having been found in the bill repealing the whistling act of 1879, the vote by which it passed was reconsidered, after which reference was had to a committee.

HOUSE.—The House favorably considered a recommendation from the Ways and Means Committee appropriating $4,000 annually to the State Board of Agriculture for the payment of interest and debt, and authorizing the board to make a new loan in relief of the present $60,000 mortgage. The Tipton county swamp-land claimants were ordered paid their total claim, aggregating $5,185.92. The Temperance Committee made a favorable report upon a License bill, which was made the special order for to-morrow. The minority report favoring more stringent legislation was indefinitely postponed by a test vote of 48 to 42. The House then took up the General Appropriation bill, and ordered it engrossed. It cuts down the salary of the Governor's Private Secretary to $1,500, and that of Deputy Attorney General from $1,200 to $600. Some progress was made in considering the bill defining public offenses. A bill was introduced exempting private libraries from taxation to the amount of $200.

THURSDAY, March 3.—SENATE.—Bills were passed: Regulating the practice of medicine by requiring practitioners to secure a certificate from the board of examiners prior to pursuing the practice; enabling manufacturing and mining companies of other States to purchase and hold real estate within Indiana to be used in manufacturing and mining, what is known as the Coal-Oil bill; appropriating real estate for school purposes; authorizing succeeding Judges to sign court records which the preceding Judge, from death or other causes, has left unsigned; Two or three judicial circuits were modified and the usual number of legalizing bills passed. Among the half-dozen new bills introduced, the only important one provides that County Auditors shall be paid $1,200 annually for their services in counties having a population of 15,000, and $125 for each 1,000 between 15,000 and 20,000, $100 for each 1,000 between 20,000 and 35,000, $25 for each 1,000 over 35,000. The Auditor is allowed $100 for making reports. The bill making township Trustees Supervisors of highways failed to pass after a lengthy discussion, owing to want of a constitutional majority. The House Tax bill was made the special order for to-morrow, and the House Appropriation bill was ordered printed. A resolution was adopted asking the House to return the bill appropriating $6,000 for removing the Calumet river sand-bars.

HOUSE.—In the House, bills were passed: Fixing certain fees and salaries, and amending the law of descents and county prisoners; the bill authorizing the people of Floyd county to contribute toward another Ohio river bridge passed unanimously, and the bill permitting cities to guarantee bridge or road construction bonds reached the third reading. A bill was introduced to forfeit the charter of gravel roads neglecting repairs. The committee appointed to investigate the House of Refuge reported that it was not advisable to proceed with the inquiry because nothing but anonymous charges had been made. The House passed the General Appropriation bill by a vote of 64 to 27; also, the bill increasing jury fees to $2 per day. A political contest developed in calling up the bill creating a Superior Court in Vigo county. By a strict party vote the bill passed—52 to 37. Consideration of the bill reported by the Temperance Committee amending the Liquor License act occupied the remainder of the day. The principal change upon the present law is an increase to $125 per year for license and removing the right to a change of venue from the county on an appeal from the County Commissioner to the Circuit Court.

Meteors and Aerolites.

A comparison of all the facts which are known respecting shooting-stars, detonating meteors and aerolites leads to the conclusion that they are all minute bodies revolving like the comets in orbits about the sun, and are encountered by the earth in its orbital motion. The visible path of aerolites is somewhat nearer to the earth's surface than that of ordinary shooting-stars, a result which may be ascribed to their greater density, which causes, therefore, greater resistance.

These three classes of bodies exhibit alternate periods of maximum and minimum abundance, and the times of maximum for the several classes correspond somewhat with each other, indicating that these bodies are collected in groups, and the three classes of bodies are grouped in a somewhat similar manner. The August meteors move in orbits which require more than a century to complete, and comprehend bodies differing greatly in size and probably also in density. Their magnitudes range from comets whose diameter is perhaps 100,000 miles to minute atoms, which, in a single second, are dissipated by the heat resulting from their collision with our atmosphere. Their density ranges from that of metallic iron to earthy bodies having but feeble cohesion, which are dissipated into fine dust by the heat of collision with our atmosphere; and it is possible that the rarest of them may consist of solid or liquid matter in a state of minute subdivision, like a cloud of dust or smoke.

The periodic meteors of November probably comprehend bodies having an equal range of magnitude, and perhaps also of density.—Prof. Loomis.

"SAL says you can't come to see her any more," remarked a boy to the admirer of the youth's sister. "Why not?" "Because you come seven nights in a week now, and how could you come any more without spreading the week like blazes?" A stillness as big as a St. Louis girl's foot then spread itself all around the room.

MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS

A Compound Tincture of the most valuable remedies known to the medical profession, prepared upon strictly pharmaceutical principles.

An experience of twenty-five years proves it to be the greatest Antidote to Malaria and all other Ague influences known to the world.

The only absolute cure for all Affections of the Kidneys, in Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, all Disorders of the Bowels, and all Affections of the Throat and Lungs, it is equally efficacious, while as a remedy for complaints peculiar to the female sex it has no equal.

NOT A BEVERAGE,

But an old reliable Household Remedy, thoroughly adapted to assist nature.

It supplies tone to the stomach, reinvigorates the digestive organs, stimulates the secretions, and promoting a regular action of the bowels, enables every organ of the body to perform its allotted work regularly and without interruption.

Its highest commendations come from those who have used it longest and known it best.

Nowhere so popular as in Lancaster, Pa., where it has been in use for more than a quarter of a century. Highly commended as a General Tonic and Appetizer. Sold by Druggists everywhere.

☞ We strongly recommend to mothers Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup. It never fails, is easy to take, and no after-physic is required. Price, 25 cents.

THE SYMPTOMS

of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

AS AN UNFAILING SPECIFIC

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, etc., etc.,

Take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

This justly-celebrated medicine Regulates the Liver, promotes digestion and fortifies the system against malaria.

The Popular Demand

So great has been the popular demand for the popular remedy Kidney Wort, that it is having an immense sale from Maine to California. Some have found it inconvenient to prepare it from the dry compound. For such, the proprietors now prepare it in liquid form. This can be procured at the druggists. It has precisely the same effect as the dry, but is very concentrated so that the dose is smaller.—Lowell Mail

Petroleum

The proof that petroleum sources are almost world-wide appears to be abundant, and its use would also seem well-nigh coeval with civilization. In one of the Ionian islands there is a spring which has yielded petroleum more than 2,000 years. The wells of Armenia, on the banks of Jaro, were formerly used for lighting the city of Genoa. In Persia, too, near the Caspian sea at Baku, numerous springs of petroleum have been known from the earliest times; and those of Rangoon, on the Irawaddy, are said to have yielded, before the general introduction of petroleum among civilized nations, some 400,000 hogsheads of oil per annum.

A Knotty Problem.

We received from a correspondent the following somewhat incoherent account of a duel which was fought in his neighborhood. Some way or other, we are half in the dark about the result of the duel in question, but we shall leave the decision to our readers: A duel was lately fought in Texas by Alexander Shott and John S. Nott. Nott was shot and Shott was not. In this case it is better to be Shott than Nott. There was a rumor that Nott was not shot, and Shott avows that he shot Nott, which proves either that the shot Shott shot at Nott was not shot, or that Nott was shot notwithstanding. It may be made to appear on trial that the shot Shott shot Nott, or, as accidents with fire-arms are frequent, it may be possible that the shot Shott shot shot Shott himself, when the whole affair would resolve itself into its original elements, and Shott would be shot, and Nott would be not. We think, however, that the shot Shott shot shot not Shott, but not; anyway, it is hard to tell who was shot.—Harper's Weekly.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a powerful remedy, which can be taken internally as well as externally by the tenderest infant. It cures almost instantly, is pleasant, acting directly upon the nervous system causing a sudden bouyancy of the mind. In short, the wonderful effects of the most wonderful remedy cannot be explained in written language. A single dose inhaled and taken according to directions will convince any one that it is all that is claimed for it. Warranted to cure the following diseases: Rheumatism or Kidney Disease in any form, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Sprains, Bruises, Flesh Wounds, Bunions, Burns, Corns, Spinal Affection, Colic, Cramping Pains, Cholera Morbus, Flux, Diarrhœa, Coughs, Colds, Bronchial Affection, Catarrh, and all aches and pains, external or internal. Full directions with each bottle. For sale by Casbeer & Metheny. 34-eow-1y.

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES
KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS,
CONSTIPATION and PILES.

Dr. R. H. Clark, South Hero, Vt., says, "In cases of Kidney Troubles it has acted like a charm. It has cured many very bad cases of Piles, and has never failed to act efficiently."

Nelson Fairchild, of St. Albans, Vt., says, "It is of priceless value. After sixteen years of great suffering from Piles and Costiveness it completely cured me."

C. S. Hogabon, of Berkshire says, "One package has done wonders for me in completely curing a severe Liver and Kidney Complaint."

IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM

IT HAS WONDERFUL POWER. WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.

☞ Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for the convenience of those that cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

THE DAUGHTER'S DESERTED ROOM.

WRITTEN FOR THE COURIER, BY MRS. R. A. DAVIS.

NOTE.—We think that any mother whose daughter has married and left her, will appreciate the sentiment of the following lines:

Oh! the emptiness and gloom,
Of that lone, deserted room;
Oh! the feet that never come
Back to stay.

Yes, the feet have gone to-day,
Gone from mother far away.
God, protect my child, I pray,
From all harm.

Oh, the busy hand and feet,
That each day we used to meet,
And the ever empty seat,
In our home.

Oh the silence, deathly still,
All that lonely room doth fill,
And our hearts with anguish fill,
As we think,

Of the voice we used to hear,
Of the one we loved so dear,
Now we drop the silent tear,
All alone.

And those eyes that shone so bright,
Like the diamond's liquid light,
Sorrow cannot dim them quite,
With its cloud.

Other ties we yet may know;
Other friends may come and go,
Heedless of the load of woe,
On our hearts.

Once this little room was gay,
With my little child at play,
Happy all the livelong day.
What a change!

Now each dark and lonesome wall
Seems more like a funeral pall,
With no lighting up at all
Of its gloom.

Oh! the silence and the gloom
Reign supreme in that lone room.
Oh! the feet that never come
Back to stay.

Correspondence.

The following letter from William Boots, San Jose, California, to his brother, John S. Boots, of Spencerville, this county, will be read with interest by our people who are just shaking off the icy fetters of a hard winter:

SAN JOSE, CAL., Feb. 13, 1881.

DEAR BROTHER: Your letter of February 1 received yesterday, and I hasten to reply. It is very true that it has been a very long time since we have written to each other, but we have not forgotten each other. Such is the result of the cares that naturally rest upon us, and without cares what would we be good for?

You again tell me of your severe winters. Snow has never fallen on me since I came to California, unless I have been away from home. Three or four times during these twenty-nine years past, I have been where the snow fell. Last July I was where the snow fell to the depth of five or six feet all over the country. Last June I fitted out two teams, one four-horse team and one two-horse team, took my family and started for the great Yosemite valley and falls, distant from here about 330 miles, and located on the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains where the Merced river makes a perpendicular fall of 2,600 feet. For me to undertake a description, would be useless. The valley is just a box cut out in the solid rocks of the mountain about 6,000 feet deep, and there are six small rivers coming from different directions and dropping over the walls, varying from 400 to 2,600 feet in heigth, and all I can say is, grand, sublime. It was flood time when we were there, from melting snow, and sometimes a great pine tree 200 feet long would come over with a crash, and strike the rocks below, when there would hardly be a piece left a yard long. We camped one week about a mile and a half from the foot of Yosemite falls. It falls 2,600 feet, and the report was like that of 1,000 cannons. The heigth is so great that the water when it drops over detaches and comes over in great drops of perhaps a half a million tons, or at least drops larger than any barn you ever saw, and seems to be perfectly detached, and comes one drop at a time, and at the bottom the water has worn out a great round hole in the rock like a great kettle, and these great drops will flatten as they fall and gather air much as you would take a saucer and strike it upside down on the water. In striking the whole mass explodes, which keeps the mountains shivering as though they were afflicted with ague. The valley is about twelve miles long by three or four miles wide, and the walls in many places are perpendicular to the heigth of 4,000 feet. I have taken a stone and thrown it over and watched it go down, down, until it would go out of sight, but could never hear it strike bottom. I have also sat down on the edge of the cliff and dangled my feet over the edge where the heigth was 4,000 feet, and men at the bottom looked like ants at work.

It was a hard journey on our teams. I lost one horse by careless watering. The water was running out of the snow beds all the time, in many places the snow was 15 or 20 feet deep at the time we were there, these however, were snow drifts on the sides of the mountain. The trip ought not to be made in less than two months, but we had to go on time, as it was the children's college vacation, which was only of five week's duration. I think some of spending this year's vacation at the seashore near Monterey, which is distant from here 80 or 90 miles, but circumstances will determine.

You have told me about your winter. I will tell you something about our winter, and will send enclosed a stamp of its severity in the shape of a few flowers which my little boy has just brought in for this purpose. There is no day in the year but that we can pick flowers in the open air. This has been an unusually cold winter here in the early part of the winter, but strawberries were in bloom all the time, and most of the time ripe fruit. We are now shipping asparagus to market, and have been for about three weeks. Almonds, apricots and many other kinds of fruit are now showing blossoms, and the grass in many places is six or eight inches high. We are now busy with our plows, and will be until about the middle of March. We have had plenty of rain, and the indications are that we may expect another good crop. I don't know how it will result should such be the case, for the country is flooded with grain, and European markets seem to be full. Good wheat is worth only $1.35 per 100 pounds, barley 80 cents per 100 pounds; all is a grand clog, but we will surely have enough to eat. The floods have been very destructive in the northern part of California and Oregon, rains unprecedently severe, and waters never known so high here before.

We are all quite well. I have been breaking colts for the past week. I have broken three the past week; one a year old that has never been haltered before. I have on hand over 60 head of horses and colts, and some very fine, the like of which you never saw in your county. I have the best four miler in the state. You know I always had a weakness for a good horse, and at last I have my hands full of them, but they will never break me. I have owned $5,000 horses, but that is a little too much horse, you say.

With love to all, I am your brother,
WILLIAM BOOTS.

Our Dying Commerce.

Twenty four years ago our exports and imports in American ships were double what they are to-day. During the last five years Britain has built 1,800,000 tons of iron ships. Since 1859 we have built in that time 100,000 tons. British tonage in our ports has increased 7,000,000 tons. In 1850 foreigners had 33 per cent. of our commerce; in 1880, they have 83 per cent. We pay $100,000,000 every year to foreign shipowners for transportation, all of which cash, goes out of this country. Every year we have fewer ships, and the foreigners take an increased percentage of our traffic.

The Two Professors.

Some years ago professors at Gotsingen, Michaelis and Kastner, were noted for learning and power in lecturing. They were rivals in popularity, and always at sword's points in personal intercourse. Michaelis was selfish and niggardly, Kastner liberal and full of sympathy, but eccentric in his methods. Their treatment of a poor student, which is one of the traditions of the university, illustrates their different characters.

The student went to Michaelis, and, stating his extreme poverty, begged the privilege of attending lectures without the regular fee. The professor hesitated, and noticing that the young man wore silver buckles on his shoes, said it was unbecoming a poor man to wear such ornaments, and he would accept them in place of the fee.

The young man took them off with a heavy heart, and went with unstrapped shoes to Kastner. He told of his experience with Michaelis, and begged a free admission to Kastner's lectures. Kastner went out a moment, and returned with an old pair of leathern breeches, saying:

"You must be in need of clothes, and you shall have these cheap."

The student protested that he needed no clothes, but the professor insisted and exacted a half-dollar. The student went to his room, angry at the new insult, and throwing the breeches on the floor, heard a sound as of money clinking, and found a purse of gold in the pocket. He carried it to the professor, who refused to receive it, saying: "A bargain is a bargain. The breeches are yours, with everything belonging to them." The student was in funds for the rest of the term.

'SQUIRE McCLELLAN'S SLED.

How the Newly Converted Miser was Overreached.

Probably the largest wood-sled ever built in —— county, says an exchange, was one devised by 'Squire John McClellan, a great-uncle of General Geo. B. McClellan.

For a number of years it was one of the local curiosities of the town of Woodstock, Conn., the early home of the McClellan family.

The narrator's father, who saw it frequently when a boy, said it was nigh thirty-two feet in length by three in breadth. The beams were of squared eight-inch timber, with studs to match, and the shoes, or runners, were over a foot in width. For drawing it, there were two tongues or poles in the forward end.

It was never used, save on one special occasion, when the team consisted of fifty yokes of oxen.

The story of its origin is as follows: In the parish, where 'Squire McClellan resided, it was the custom every winter for such of the men who had wood-lots, to give the parson a cord of hickory wood each, and thus make up to him a winter's supply of fuel. The 'Squire in particular, was always punctual in December with his cord of nicely prepared hickory.

In the parish there was a man who had the reputation of being "snug niggardly," and apt to shirk his due share of the burden of paying the minister. Indeed, his remissness in the matter had been a standing grievance in the place for many years.

One autumn, there was a revival of religious interest in the place, and many members of the church were stimulated to earnest labor, and to live more strictly. Among these, was the penurious man above alluded to, whom we can conveniently design as Brother Z.

Not a little to the astonishment of his neighbors, who had had ample experience of his miserable dealing, he arose in prayer meeting one night, and exhorted to liberal giving, not only to the parson, but to all benevolent objects. Waxing exceedingly earnest in manner and tone, he declared among other things, that he would, that winter, give the minister a load of wood. "Yea, brethren," he exclaimed, "the Lord has opened my heart! I will give him a load of wood, and a big one. I will give him the biggest load you can draw from my woods to his yard."

This unexpected outburst, from so drouthy a source, was the parish wonder for a week. Many thought that Brother Z—— must be near his end.

"Truly," said 'Squire McClellan, at the deacon's meeting, "the lord must have opened up Brother Z——'s heart; but," he added with characteristic Scotch shrewdness, "it may soon close, and may never open again. It behooves us in the parson's interest, to avail ourselves of it. Let us build a sled that will carry ten cords, and do it at once."

So thought the others. The monster sled was privately, but expeditiously framed in a back yard, and early one snowy morning in December, Brother Z—— was amazed to see driven to his door, apparently all the ox teams in town, drawing the titanic sled, accompanied by a shouting throng of teamsters, and all the small boys in the parish.

The 'squire was riding on the sled. "We've come for the parson's load of wood, Brother Z——!" he called out. "You bade us haul the biggest load of wood we could, and I am glad to hear that you have lately had a fine lot of hickory chopped."

Brother Z——, however, seeing the magnitude of the sled, tried to explain and to demur, but in vain. The crowd roared him into acquiescence, and with a wry face, he finally led the way across the snowy fields to his freshly corded tiers of hickory in the lot.

It is said that fully ten cords of wood were loaded upon the big sled under the 'squire's supervision, and then, to the tune of a most vociferous gee-hawing, the enormous load was successfully sledded to to the parson's doorway.

The worthy minister, equally amazed, but more agreeably so, issued forth to learn the cause of the uproar.

"Good people, good people!" he cried rubbing his hands, "what meaneth this? Have the windows of heaven opened?"

"Nay, nay, parson!" exclaimed the 'squire, "but the Lord has opened Brother Z——'s heart, and that so great a gift could have issued from so small a receptacle is one of the wonders of saving grace. Question not, but take it and keep ye warm."

The minister had roaring fires that winter, but it was long before Brother Z—— recovered his equanimity.

HIS BATH,

And Something About the Garments that He Wore.

[Bob. Burdette.]

"There is the honest immigrant," said the tall, thin passenger, "I believe he is going to wash his face."

And really it did look as though that was the man's mad intention. He had gone to a clear pool of water beside the track, and was apparently getting ready for his ablutions.

"See him peel off his raiment," said the man on the wood-box.

"He hasn't very much to peel off," the fat passenger said.

"Wait," said the tall, thin passenger, "he hasn't got started yet."

The immigrant first unwrapped a comforter from his neck, and slowly took off a gray overcoat, with a short waist and long skirts, reaching to his heels. Then he unwound a red wool'n comforter from his neck, and then took off a short pea-jacket of a heavy blue cloth. Then he unwrapped a gray comforter from his neck, and took off a leather jacket, very tight fitting and very greasy. He then unwound a long flannel scarf from his neck and took off a black vest, and he released his neck from the folds of a gray woolen comforter and then he took off a red vest and unwound another comforter, and then he took off another vest and a flannel scarf that was tied around his neck, and another vest and another comforter, and another flannel scarf and another vest and another scarf, and another vest and another comforter and another vest.

"That man has robbed a clothing house," said the cross passenger.

The immigrant calmly unwrapped from his neck, a long, red, woolen comforter—

"I wonder," said the fat passenger, "if he goes through the custom house that way?"

And then took off another vest,

"Why!" exclaimed the tall, thin passenger, "he is no bigger than I am."

And then he unrolled another comforter from his neck—

"By George!" exclaimed the man on the wood-box, "he'll get down to his bones in two more 'peels.'"

And the immigrant calmly unbuttoned another vest—

Suddenly the whistle of the train was heard in the distance, and another of the party of immigrants shrieked to the would-be bather;

"Jarliche Jans Krund Bjorneke Bjornekessen! Hoffickeulenen ldgakrominick thorlik jd sounden do smockerick ach es da trainege ansegekoummek!"

And then the race began. The train came along, waited three minutes, and sped away, and long, long after we left the station we could look back and see that rash immigrant, from the land Njordvaldsen, shooting himself into a job lot of party colored vests, and hauling upon himself an avalanche of comforters, in the vain hope of snowing himself under in time to catch the next train.

"I have often wondered," the jester said, musing, "why the immigrants never bathe until they get to their homesteads in the far west, I understand it now. That man, in his laudable desire to wash up, will lose a whole week before he can dress himself. And even then, he hadn't got undressed far enough down to wash his neck."

"Wauseon!" shouted the brakeman.

"Was he on?" He wasn't on the train by twenty miles, but he was on to a whole Chatham street bankrupt stock of vests and comforters.

The Puritan Maiden's Conscience

[Boston Traveler.]

The following story is told of a two-story brick house in the suburbs of Boston, whose doors and windows are nailed up, and which has never been occupied: "Nearly thirty years ago, a young man built it for his bride, intending to mortgage it and pay for it gradually, as his worldly goods increased, to all of which she agreed. When the wedding day was appointed, the trousseau ready and the house finished, he took the lady out from Boston to inspect it. After going over the house, he presented her with a deed of it for a wedding gift. Knowing his circumstances, she was astonished that he had actually paid for it. He explained, that investing in a lottery, he had drawn the first prize, which just covered the cost of the house. The Puritan maiden protested she would not take a home obtained by gambling, and refused the deed. His arguments were of no avail. She remained obdurate. When they left the house, he locked the door and threw the key into the brook near by. The next day he boarded up the windows, and only the spiders and mice have ever occupied it. The man never married. He became rich, but is a wanderer on the face of the earth The woman never married. She is still living, poor and invalid."

The Last American Empire.

The general opinion in Brazil is that the empire will not long outlive the reign of the present emperor, the good Dom Pedro. The imperial form of government does not flourish on the soil of the American continent, and the emperor's personal popularity, which is very great, has kept in check the democratic tendencies of the country, which cannot always be controlled even by wholesome laws and wise, liberal and progressive government. Dom Pedro will probably be the last American emperor, and the vast country which he rules with so much intelligence and moderation will be numbered, for good or ill, among the republican experiments of the continent. The transition from the aristocracy to the democratic form of government need not necessarily be attended by violence or danger to the public peace. The people are educated to self-government to a certain extent, and the change will be one rather of form than of fact or principle. It will be rendered more easy to the public mind, as the successor to Dom Pedro is a mere child, who has not sufficient following to control the public sentiment or to keep him on his throne by force. He is the son of the emperor's eldest daughter, and is but six years of age. The mother is under control of the Jesuits and is intensely unpopular. Were the emperor to die during the boy's minority the constitution makes the mother regent, an authority she could not long sustain. The emperor wishes to have the constitution changed so that the crown may be given to his favorite grandchild, the son of his second daughter, whose husband is a German prince. This boy is twelve years old, and exhibits decided talent. But royalty is unpopular in the country, notwithstanding the rare excellencies which have graced it during the present reign. Republicanism is the breath of American political life. Surrounded by republics on all sides, the empire has caught the infection, and liberal ideas permeate the entire political fabric. A constitutional president will soon displace the monarch, the simplicities of republican life succeed the pomp and splendor of imperialism, and the last American empire will be known only in history.—Panama Star and Herald.

THE EAST.

SAMUEL J. TILDEN predicts for Gen. Garfield the stormiest Presidential term on record....L. B. Boomer the famous bridge-builder of Chicago, died at the Windsor Hotel, of apoplexy.

THE managers of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia adopted a resolution denying the report emanating from the British Consul in that city in regard to the death of hogs by cholera, and referring the matter to a committee for investigation. Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister at Washington, will be asked to correct the report....A German Socialist mass meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, was attended by about 4,000 persons.

ANOTHER Mexican railway scheme has been matured in Boston, and a charter has been granted to a company with $30,000,000 of stock. Among the incorporators are Mayor Prince, Ben Butler, U. S. Grant, Jr., and two Mexicans. The main line is to run from Piedras Negras, on the Rio Grande, to the Bay of Topolo Bampo, on the Gulf of California.... During the first week of March, 5,323 immigrants arrived at New York, being 2,479 more than for the corresponding week of last year.

MAHONING PLANE, PA., has been so undermined by the collieries that the houses rest on a thin crust of earth. Every few weeks this crust settles, and occasionally drops entirely out of sight....The people are just now experiencing their periodical excitement from this cause....Erysipelas, resulting from recent vaccination, caused the death of Chief Engineer James W. Whittaker, of the United States navy....A bill to establish the whipping post for wife beaters is before the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

THE WEST.

AN explosion of gas in the Central Pacific coal mine, at Almy, Wyo. Ter., killed thirty-five Chinamen and three whites. Fire has raged in the mine for five years, but it has been isolated by stone walls.

EX-SHERIFF O'HAIR, of Edgar county, Ill., shot a Chinaman at Paris. The Chinaman's offense consisted in suspecting O'Hair of having robbed him....There was an exciting scene at the funeral of C. E. Freeze, the young man who committed suicide in Fort Wayne, Ind. His mother arrived during the service and wanted to take the body home for interment, which the widow would not allow. The mother then rushed into the street, summoned a crowd, and asked them to take the corpse by force. They refused. She then demanded that a second inquest be held, alleging that her son had been murdered. She was finally quieted and induced to return to her hotel, and the funeral proceeded without further interruption.

A CRAZY man attempted to burn the insane asylum at Topeka, Kan., with its 190 inmates, but was unsuccessful....A bill was introduced in the Illinois House, making it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to elope with any woman, married or single.

THE Southern Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroads were united at Deming, New Mexico, on the 8th of March....Ex-President Hayes arrived at his home in Fremont, Ohio, on the 8th inst., and was given a royal welcome by his old friends. He was met at the depot and escorted to his residence by a large procession.

Two engines were wrecked, fourteen cars ditched, and a conductor and engineer injured by a collision of freight trains at Crestline, on the Cleveland and Columbus track.

A DISPATCH from Walnut Grove, Red wood county, Minn., says that there is much suffering there on account of a scarcity of fuel, as the Winona and St. Peter road has been blocked for two months. All out-buildings, hog-pens, railroad fences, etc., have been used up, and now many are trying to keep warm by burning straw and hay, which is poor consolation, as none have suitable stoves.... Flames appeared in the wholesale drug-house, of Woodward, Faxon & Co., in Kansas City a few nights ago. No less than seventy-five distinct explosions followed, caused by cans of gunpowder in the adjoining store of Ogleboy & Co., wholesale grocers. The fire extended to the hardware house of Kelly, Willis & Co. The force of the waterworks was very light, and all three stores were destroyed. The loss is estimated at $420,000, on which the insurance is $260,000....At Eldorado, Nev., Hank Parish shot two men over a game of cards. When the Coroner came to sit upon the remains, Parish compelled him to take the money from the dead men's pockets and return it to him....Moody and Sankey gospel meetings are being very largely attended in San Francisco.... Thirty-one women of Palestine, Ohio, have been arrested for outrages committed upon a saloonkeeper named Long, the last of his kind left in that place. Six of the women were discharged, and twenty-two gave bail. They claim that the arrests were made in revenge for their having secured sixteen indictments against Long for selling liquor to minors. Long charges that the women sent him word to leave or he would be killed.

THE SOUTH.

THE cotton-seed oil-mills at Hickman, Ky., were destroyed by fire, causing $60,000 damage. Mrs. Pearsons, who lived in a frame house adjoining, was burned to death.

THE National Board of Health has awarded contracts for floating hospitals to be stationed off Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg and Bayou Sara. The boats will be eighty feet long, and accommodate twelve patients each.

FEDERAL detectives have tracked a band of counterfeiters from Pennsylvania to Texas, and assert that these notorious dealers are operating in the vicinity of Dallas, having $16,000 of spurious notes in their possession.

WASHINGTON.

OVER 1,500 bills which were not acted upon remain upon the calendar of the last Congress....Don Piatt has withdrawn from the Washington Capital, and proposes to retire to a hermitage in Ohio.

NATHANIEL GOFF, ex-Secretary of the Navy, has been nominated by President Garfield for United States District Attorney of West Virginia, the position he held previous to his accepting the Naval Secretaryship some weeks ago....It is said that Fred Douglass will not be reappointed Marshal of the District of Columbia, but that the place will be given to Mr. Henry, of Cleveland, the Adjutant of Gen. Garfield's old regiment.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, of Evanston, Ill., on behalf of fifty ladies who subscribed for a memorial oil painting of Mrs. Hayes, as a recognition of her advocacy of the temperance cause, presented the painting to President Garfield. In accepting the gift the President responded as follows: "I have observed the significance which you have given to this portrait from the standpoint you occupy, and in connection with the work in which you are engaged. What you have said concerning the evils of intemperance meets my most hearty concurrence. I have been in my way, and in accordance with my own convictions, an earnest advocate of temperance, not in so narrow a sense as some, but in a very definite and practical sense. These convictions are deep, and will be maintained. Whether I shall be able to meet the views of all people in regard to all phases of that question remains to be seen, but I shall do what I can to abate the great evils of intemperance. I shall be glad to have this picture upon these walls, and shall be glad to remember your kind expressions to me and my family, and, in your efforts to better mankind by your work, I hope that you will be guided by wisdom, and that you will achieve a worthy success. Thanking you for this meeting and greeting, I bid you good morning.

CONGRESSMAN LEVI P. MORTON was last week nominated for Minister to France by the President. The Senate promptly confirmed the nomination. Ex-Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, has been the Minister to France for the last four years....Secretary Blaine has addressed a note to the British Legation fully and emphatically denying the reports sent to England by the acting British Consul at Philadelphia in regard to the prevalence of hog cholera in Illinois and Ohio. He says the most searching inquiry leads irresistibly to the conclusion that her Majesty's representative was imposed upon by designing speculators, and he looks to the Legation to undo, as far as possible, the mischief that has been done.

CHARLES D. GILMORE, an attorney and claim agent, of Washington, has sued Carl Schurz for $200,000 damages. He alleges that Schurz, without any just cause, debarred him from practice in the Interior Department, and thus broke up a legal business worth $40,000 per annum.

POLITICAL.

THE Democrats of Michigan met in convention at Lansing, on the 8th inst., and nominated G. V. N. Lathrop, of Detroit, and Henry Fralick, of Grand Rapids, for Regents of the University. Augustus C. Baldwin, of Detroit, was placed in the field for Justice of the Supreme Court....William P. Frye was nominated by acclamation, at the Republican Senatorial caucus at Augusta, Me., to succeed James G. Blaine....Judge J. W. McDill, one of the Iowa Railroad Commissioners, has been appointed to the vacancy in the United States Senate, caused by the resignation of Senator Kirkwood. Judge McDill was a member of the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses, and also of the Electoral Commission.....James Russell Lowell, American Minister at London, has received a letter from President Garfield, expressing the hope that he will continue to serve the United States.

SEVEN persons were drowned off Queenstown by the capsizing of a whale-boat.... Michael P. Boyton, a Land League organizer and one of the traversers, was arrested at Kildare, Ireland, under the Coercion act. He is charged with inciting to murder and other acts of violence. He protested, in the name of the American republic, against being taken into custody.

THE office-seekers have formed the impression that there is to be a grand upheaval of the organization of the departments, but there has been no intimation from President Garfield that such would be the case. On the contrary, he has said he would not consider any proposition to remove any man from continuous office except for cause....Abram S. Hewitt has addressed a letter to ex-Gov. Jewell, inclosing $100 to defray the expenses of "hunting down the rascal who forged the Morey letter," and promising more if necessary. Gov. Jewell, it is said, intends to push the investigation.

GENERAL.

THE insane asylum at Danville, Pa. has been destroyed by fire. There were 500 patients in the institution, all of whom were removed without confusion or loss of life. The building had been in process of erection for eleven years, and $600,000 had been expended upon it.... Ex-President Hayes and party had a narrow escape from death on the trip from Washington to Ohio. The train carrying himself and family collided with another while running at forty miles an hour. Several persons were killed and many maimed by the collision, but, fortunately, all the Presidential party escaped uninjured.

ROBERT A. COBY, of Chicago, convicted of robbing the mails, was pardoned by President Hayes....William Wylie, a prominent business man of East Saginaw, Mich., committed suicide by blowing out his brains.... The revised New Testament will be published in May....Edward Young, son of a prominent attorney of Georgetown, Ohio, shot and killed George Ashmore, and seriously wounded James Ashmore and Clinton Campbell.

THE Pennsylvania Railroad Company has consolidated its railroad lines west of Pittsburgh under one management, with the view of giving the Gould interests battle for supremacy.....The Union Pacific road reports its gross earnings for the year at $22,455,134, and a surplus of $13,294,416. A dividend of 1¾ per cent. was declared, and the old board of officers re-elected.....Ex-Secretary Evarts, ex-Senator Thurman, and ex-Senator Howe will represent the United States at the International Monetary Conference.

FOREIGN.

THE Privy Council has proclaimed the counties of Clare, Galway, Kerry, Leitrim, Limerick, Mayo, Roscommon and Sligo, and eleven baronies in Cork, Ireland, to be in a disturbed state. This is done in accordance with the provisions of the Coercion act....The Darlington Iron Company, of London, has failed, its liabilities being enormous.

A CABLE dispatch from Rome says: "The loss of life by the earthquake on the island of Ischia is appalling. One hundred and two bodies have been found at Cassamaciati up to the present. It is stated that 300 houses have fallen at Cassamaciati. One hundred and ten corpses have been recovered, and sixty-seven wounded sent to the hospital. The fissures in the streets were fifty centimetres wide, and the people fled from town and encamped in the fields."..... The British Ministry has settled upon terms of peace with the Boers, which were telegraphed Gen. Wood last week....It has been snowing steadily in Scotland for seventy hours. Traffic is blocked, and many shipwrecks are reported on the coast.... Harris, Boyton and Sheridan, the Irish traversers, have reappeared.....About twenty Americans in the counties of Cork, Limerick and Kerry, Ireland, have applied to the United States Consul at Queenstown for protection. They fear arrest under the Coercion act.

THE dreaded plague has made its appearance in Mesopotamia....The Ameer Abdur Rahman Khan is preparing to occupy Candahar when the British garrison is wholly withdrawn, and Ayoob Khan's adherents are preparing to resist, so that there is an excellent prospect of lively times in Afghanistan during the spring and summer. It seems to be the settled policy of the Gladstone Ministry to let Abdur Rahman Khan and Ayoob Khan settle their own disputes. ....The French Government has resolved to recall its representative in Venezuela. The cause assigned for this action is the bad faith of the Venezuelan Government to French creditors..... The latest dispatches state that twenty vessels were lost on the Scottish coast during the recent storm and 200 persons drowned.... Notwithstanding the reports to the contrary, it does not appear that the Irish Land-Leaguers are much scared at the passage of the Coercion act. Those agitators who were in Ireland before the measure became law have stood their ground, and others, like Dillon and Brennan, who were in England or France, are returning to the Green Isle.

THE British defeat in South Africa has greatly stimulated the movement in favor of the Boers, which was started in New York about a month ago, and liberal subscriptions are being received by the Treasurer of the organization, and large sums have been sent to the Red Cross Society of Holland. Several Dutchmen of New York and a number of American physicians have volunteered to go to South Africa. The Irish are also in deep sympathy with the cause, and it is reported that a bark carrying over 500 well-armed Irishmen and four Gatling guns secretly sailed from Key West, Fla., not long ago, bound for South Africa.... Capt. Eads has three parties of engineers at work at the isthmus on his ship-railway scheme....At a meeting held in the Cooper Institute, New York, it was decided to organize the United States Cremation Company, with a capital of $50,000, and to form a society to educate the public to a proper appreciation of the virtues and beauties of incineration.... There was an immense demonstration by the Irish-American Land and Industrial League at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. A circular distributed among the people gave utterance to the sentiment that "What is good for Ireland is good for America. Rent is robbery; landlordism is despotism. Down with both of them. Just rent must not amount to more than taxes and repairs will cost." Mayor Howell presided, and many prominent men were present. A dispatch was sent to Parnell, signed by Mayor Howell, urging him to "never surrender."

GREAT BRITAIN objects to the words of the invitation to the momentary conference, being unwilling to commit herself absolutely to a bi-metallic standard. Germany has accepted the invitation to the conference, with the reservation that she will not be bound by its decisions....The order for the withdrawal of the British troops from Candahar has been given.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The Senate met at 10:30 on the 4th of March, but transacted no business. A joint resolution was offered for an extra month's pay to the Senate's officials and employes, which was briefly debated and passed. At 12 o'clock Vice President Wheeler bade the Senate adieu in a few words, and declared the Senate adjourned sine die. Vice President Arthur then took the gavel and called the new Senate to order. The ceremony of swearing in the new Senators was then proceeded with, and all but Senator Mahone responded to the call of their names and took the oath of office. As soon as this was concluded the ceremony of inaugurating the President was carried out, the Senate adjourning to the east portico. After this ceremony the Senate adjourned for the day. In the House, the closing hours were full of confusion, and no business was transacted. Mr. Conger presented the customary resolution of thanks to Speaker Randall, and at 12 o'clock the Forty-sixth Congress adjourned without day.

Mr. Hoar offered a resolution in the Senate, on March 5, extending to Gen. Winfield S. Hancock the privileges of the floor during his stay in Washington. Adopted unanimously. Mr. Blaine, in accordance with a notice given by him some weeks ago, submitted the following resolution: "Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair to take into consideration the mode of voting for President and Vice President of the United States, and the mode of counting and certifying the same, who shall report such propositions for a change in the law and constitution as may seem expedient; that said committee have power to sit during the recess of Congress, and that they be directed to report on or before the second Wednesday in January, 1882." The resolution was temporarily laid on the table to be printed. President Garfield sent to the Senate the names of the persons he has chosen to form his Cabinet, as follows: Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, of Maine; Secretary of the Treasury, William Windom, of Minnesota; Secretary of War, Robert T. Lincoln, of Illinois; Secretary of the Navy, William H. Hunt, of Louisiana; Secretary of the Interior, Samuel J. Kirkwood, of Iowa; Postmaster General, Thomas L. James, of New York; Attorney General, Wayne MacVeagh, of Pennsylvania.

The Senate, March 7, was in session only a few minutes, and did nothing except swear in Gen. Mahone, of Virginia. It is claimed by the Democrats that he will vote with them on the organization of the committees.

At the session of the Senate on Tuesday, March 8, communications were laid before the Senate from ex-Senators Kirkwood and Blaine, announcing that they had forwarded to the Governors of their respective States their resignations as members of the Senate. The President sent in the following nominations: Nathan Goff, Jr., to be United States Attorney for West Virginia; Lewis Richmond, of Rhode Island, Consul General at Rome; United States Consuls—John L. Frisbie (Michigan), at Rheims; P. M. Eder (Nevada), at Guayaquil; Albert Rhodes (District of Columbia), at Rouen; Edward Backus (Illinois), at Para; Emilio Courtelo, at La Union; John A. Haldeman (Kansas), at Bangkok; Abbot L. Doen, at Aleppo, India; John F. June (New Jersey), at Nueva Laredo.

On the assembling of the Senate on Wednesday, March 9, a telegram from the Governor of Iowa was read, announcing the appointment of J. W. McDill to fill the unexpired term of Senator Kirkwood. The following names were sent in by the President: William M. Evarts, of New York, Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, and Timothy O. Howe, of Wisconsin, Commissioners from this Government to the International Monetary Conference; L. P. Morton, of New York, Minister to France; Lot M. Morrill, United States Collector of Customs at Portland, Me.; David D. McClung, Surveyor of Customs at Cincinnati; John W. Green, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second district of Iowa; Robert S. Taylor, of Indiana, member of the Mississippi River Improvement Commission. Postmasters—Conley E. Guilford, Wanston, Ohio; George Pfleger, South Bend, Ind.; James O. Raymond, Stevens Point, Wis.

Immediately upon the assembling of the Senate on Thursday, March 10, a message from the President was received. Mr. Pendleton offered a resolution providing for the organization of the standing committees of the Senate. The resolution was read, subject to objection raised by Mr. Anthony. After reading the resolution Mr. Anthony moved that it be printed and lie on the table, the subject to be called up to-morrow. Agreed to. Mr. Pendleton then offered a resolution providing for the organization of the select committees, which was disposed of in a similar manner. President Garfield sent in the nominations of Col. Clark E. Carr to succeed himself as Postmaster at Galesburg, and Sandford A. Hudson, of Wisconsin, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Dakota.

GARFIELD'S ADVISERS.

Brief Biographies of the Cabinet Ministers.

James G. Blaine, of Maine, Secretary of State, was born in Washington county, Pa., Jan. 31, 1830; graduated at Washington College, Pa.; adopted the editorial profession, and went to Maine, where he edited the Portland Advertiser and the Kennebec Journal. He was a member of the Maine Legislature in 1859, '60-'61 and '62, serving the last two years as Speaker of the House; was elected to the Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses (serving in the Forty-first, the Forty-second and the Forty third as Speaker); was elected to the United States Senate to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Lot M. Morrill, appointed Secretary of the Treasury, and was elected for the ensuing term, which will expire March 3, 1883. The people are familiar with his campaigns for the nomination for the Presidency.

William Windom, of Minnesota, Secretary of the Treasury was born in Belmont county, Ohio, May 10, 1827; received an academic education; studied law at Mount Vernon, Ohio; practiced his profession in that State and in Minnesota until 1859; was elected Prosecuting Attorney for Knox county, Ohio, in 1852; removed to Minnesota in 1855; was a Representative in the Thirty-sixth, Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Congresses; was appointed by the Governor of Minnesota, in July, 1870, to fill the unexpired term of the Hon. Daniel S. Norton, deceased, in the Senate of the United States; was subsequently elected as a Republican, and was reelected in 1877. His term of service will expire March 3, 1883.

Robert Todd Lincoln, of Illinois, Secretary of War, is the only surviving child of Abraham Lincoln. He was born in Springfield, Ill., Aug. 1, 1843. He prepared for college at Phillips' Academy, Exeter, N. H., and, having entered Harvard, graduated in the summer of 1864. Four months subsequently he became a member of the Harvard Law School. But before finishing the course he went into the army and was on Gen. Grant's staff with the rank of Captain, from Feb. 20 to June 10, 1865, serving until the war closed. He then returned to his law-books, and completed his studies. He located in Chicago, and was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of the State Feb. 25, 1867. He has taken very little part in politics, but has devoted his attention almost exclusively to his law practice, which has been large and lucrative.

Samuel J. Kirkwood, of Iowa, Secretary of the Interior, was born in Harford county, Md., Dec. 20, 1813; received a limited education at the academy of John McLeod in Washington city; removed to Richland county, Ohio, in 1835, and studied law there; was admitted to the bar in 1843; was elected Prosecuting Attorney in 1845 and again in 1847; was in 1850-'51 a member of the convention that formed the present constitution of the State of Ohio; removed to Johnson county, Iowa, in 1855; was elected to the State Senate in 1856; was elected Governor in 1859 and again in 1861; was in 1863 nominated by President Lincoln and confirmed as Minister to Denmark, but declined the appointment; was in 1866 elected to the United States Senate to fill the unexpired term of Hon. James Harlan; was in 1875 again elected Governor of Iowa and resigned that office Jan. 31, 1877; was elected in January, 1876, to the United States Senate as a Republican to succeed George G. Wright, Republican. His term of service will expire March 3, 1883.

Thomas L. James, of New York, Postmaster General, was born in Utica March 29, 1831, and is now in his 50th year. He was educated at the Utica Academy, but, at the age of 15, he was thought old enough to begin to work for himself, and was apprenticed to learn the printing business to Wesley Bailey, the veteran abolition editor of the Liberty Press. Young James served the full term of his apprenticeship, five years, and in the meantime wrote several articles for the Liberty Press, which were accepted and printed. In 1857, shortly after the close of his apprenticeship, he started the Journal at Hamilton, N. Y. He was also made Collector of Canal Tolls, which office he held for five years, performing at the same time his editorial duties. In 1861 he located in New York city, and from that year until 1869 he held various responsible positions in the Custom House. In 1869 he was made Deputy Collector of the Third Division, which position he held until 1873, when he was appointed Postmaster of New York city, the duties of which he has continued to discharge ever since.

William H. Hunt, of Louisiana, Secretary of the Navy, is a native of the State from which he is appointed, having been born in 1835. During the war he was a Union man, and since the war has acted with the Republican party. He was first brought into prominence in Louisiana politics when he became the counsel for Gov. Kellogg in his contest with McEnery. He subsequently became a candidate for Attorney General on the Republican ticket, was elected, and served one term; he was re-elected as Attorney General on the ticket with Packard. Curiously enough, he was thrown out of office through the influence of the MacVeagh Commission, which overturned the Packard Government and installed Nicholls while the preparations were being made to seat Hayes in Washington. MacVeagh, the head of the commission, and Hunt, the overthrown Attorney General of Louisiana, now meet on a common plane in Gen. Garfield's Cabinet. Soon after this Mr. Hunt was appointed a Judge of the Court of Claims.

Wayne MacVeagh, of Pennsylvania, Attorney General, was born at Phoenixville, Chester county, Pa., April 19, 1833. He graduated at Yale College in the famous class of 1853, and then studied law with the Hon. Joseph J. Lewis, of Westchester, and was in that borough admitted to the bar April 26, 1856. Soon after his admission to the bar he was elected District Attorney of Chester county, and served in that capacity for three years. In 1863 he was made Chairman of the Republican State Committee. In 1870 he was appointed Minister to Constantinople, but resigned in 1871. In 1872 he was a member of the State Constitutional Convention, in which he took a leading position. He was one of the organizers of the National Republican League, which worked against the nomination of Gen. Grant for the Presidency last year. Mr. MacVeagh, in an address at a public anniversary in New York, a year ago, thus set forth his political platform: "I happen, among other unpopular and impracticable things, to entertain a sincere desire for the relief of the civil service, and I would trust to your practical common sense whether or not it might be of advantage to our foreign trade in the future that that service, instead of being filled by decayed politicians seeking a temporary asylum as a reward for partisan labors, should be filled by such busy, energetic and working men as can only be secured by the attraction of that permanent tenure."

A Remarkable Memory.

A lawyer enjoys badgering a witness, but it is not so agreeable when the witness gives his answers in kind. Hunting bears is good sport, but when the bear hunts the hunter, it looks like carrying the joke too far. An old witness was asked, in an insulting tone, by an attorney, if his memory was good. "Yes," was the reply; "on some points it is extremely accurate, but on others I must confess that it is defective." "Won't you give the Court an illustration?" said the lawyer. "Well," drawled the aged witness, "I clearly remember that ten years ago you came to me and borrowed $100, but, for the life of me, I can't remember that you ever paid me."

How Happiness May Be Obtained.

There is one way of attaining what we term, if not utter, at least mortal happiness. It is this—a sincere and unrelaxing activity for the happiness of others. In that one maxim is concentrated whatever is noble in morality, sublime in religion or unanswerable in truth. In that pursuit we have all scope for whatever is excellent in our hearts, and none for the petty passions to which our nature is heir. Thus engaged, whatever be our errors, there will be nobility, not weakness, in our remorse; whatever our failures, virtue, not selfishness, in our regrets; and in success vanity itself will become holy and triumph eternal.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, March 4.—SENATE.—The Senate began passing House bills this morning under a dispensation of the constitutional rules, disposing of those relating to the duties of Justices of the Peace; preventing cruelty to animals; vacating cemeteries in corporate limits of towns and cities; admitting George Manser, the soldier whose arms were blown off by the accidental discharge of a cannon in the last political campaign, to the Soldiers', and Sailors' Orphans' Home at Knightstown; allowing property to be appropriated for school-house purposes; remodeling the act for the inspection of oil; legalizing the election and acts of the Trustees of incorporated towns; concerning fees and salaries, and amending the act concerning free gravel roads. The greater part of the afternoon session was wasted in wrangling over the House Tax bill, which finally went over until to-morrow. A joint resolution passed directing the purchase for use of the State of the collection of books known as the "Daniel Hough library," at a cost not exceeding $1,000. A bill passed establishing a Superior Court and abolishing the Criminal Court in Vanderburg county; so, also, the one concerning fees and salaries, and for the appointment of a Fish Commissioner.

HOUSE.—Bills were passed: Relieving William J. Richie as Trustee of a township in Scott county; providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes of 1881; repealing the act for the payment of Wabash and Erie canal internal improvement bonds; regulating the sale of iron, brass, and scrap metal; authorizing appeals in will cases within one year to the Supreme Court; protecting quails and pheasants for the next two years; legalizing the incorporation of Merom Christian College; concerning inclosures and trespassing animals; repealing the obnoxious features of the Whistling law, and exempting all roads from penalties which did not observe the whistling nuisance; refunding to Benton county $973.70 expenses incurred in the prosecution of John L. McCullough for murder in 1872; establishing public libraries in connection with public schools in cities of 15,000 or more. A motion to pass the bill increasing the pay of the Speaker and Lieutenant Governor from $6 to $10 a day was rejected by a vote of 57 to 30. The Gillum Prohibition bill was ordered engrossed, and the Specific Appropriation bill introduced. It appropriates $30,000. The total included in the General Appropriation bill is $1,148,000.

SATURDAY, March 5.—SENATE.—The Senate passed a number of bills of inferior importance, and spent some time in considering the House bill on taxation. A night session was held for the benefit of the Engrossment Committee and the Governor. As the formal motion to adjourn was being put, the Governor remarked: "Gentlemen, you are at liberty to state that I shall issue a proclamation on Monday morning for an extra session to begin at 9 a. m. on the following day, Tuesday."

HOUSE.—The House passed the Medical bill and frittered away several hours in idle motions and vexatious delays of the regular order. The afternoon was marked by an exhibition of the fun-making powers of the body, which was very demonstrative and noisy. At the night session there was another exhibit of lawlessness, not so pronounced, however, as marked the proceedings of the afternoon.

MONDAY, March 7.—SENATE.—The Senate worked to-day on the House bill on taxation, and a multitude of amendments were suggested, the majority with reference to the phraseology of the separate sections rather than the subject matter. An effort was made during the afternoon to pass a joint resolution condemning the contemplated improvement of Meridian street with wooden blocks, but eventually the matter was referred to the extra session. A resolution complimentary of the presiding officer was passed, after which the President declared the Senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE.—The House was in session only an hour, and did nothing beyond passing customary resolutions of thanks.

TUESDAY, March 8.—SENATE.—The General Assembly convened to-day in extra session, and an organization was effected without difficulty, but with some slight change from the caucus programme. Instead of Hearthwate, of Lake, the Senate Republicans put forward William H. Schlater, of Wayne, for Principal Secretary, and the same resolution named Robert B. Sears, of Vermillion, for Assistant, and Dick Huncheon, of Laporte, for Doorkeeper. Sears is a Greenbacker, and Huncheon a Democrat. Three Democratic Senators, Bess, Voyles, and Woods, joined in passing the resolution, while the remaining Democrats, with Poindexter and Davis, voted for the old organization. The new Doorkeeper appointed William Langstaff, of Clinton; N. M. Wilson, of Scott; Joseph Hoffman, of Lake; William H. Pfrimer, of Harrison; J. G. Campbell and J. Berz, assistants. The Secretary reported no changes for the present. The morning session of the Senate was subsequently given to propositions looking to the advancement of measures in the special session, and it was decided that the succession of business from the regular to the special should be the natural succession of unfinished business. In the afternoon the Senate resumed consideration of the Tax bill.

HOUSE.—The House reorganized by a regular ballot and strict party vote, the Republicans continuing the old organization, with the exception of the substitution of Jim Woods, of Warrick, for Doorkeeper, instead of Capt. Evans, of Henry. The Democracy voted for Hon. H. S. Cauthorne for Speaker; C. O'Brien, of Marion, for Clerk, and William Benham, of Crawford, for doorkeeper. A resolution passed requesting the retention of the employes of the regular session. Bills were introduced allowing the loan of school funds at 7 per cent., or less, and regulating toll on plank and macadamized roads ceded by the Federal Government to the State. The House committee, composed mainly of doctors, reported a substitute for Senator Young's Medical bill.

The Governor transmitted the following message to both houses: Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives: The constitution provides that the Governor shall from time to time give to the General Assembly information touching the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he shall judge to be expedient. My official duties since my inauguration, during the late regular session, have been onerous, and your opportunities to acquire a knowledge of the condition of the State through your investigating committees and through other means have been so considerable, that I do not regard myself as being possessed of any information relating to the condition of the State of which you are not in possession; also, some of the measures which I had the honor to recommend to you in my inaugural address have been adopted. An adoption of the others has been proposed in pending bills, and they are now in a condition to be considered by you. I renew my recommendations of these pending measures. I especially urge the passage of the bill, with whatever changes or additions may be deemed expedient, providing for ascertaining the best way of reclaiming the vast body of lands, the material means for the drainage of which is through the Kankakee river. The important bill concerning taxation ought also to receive your early attention, so that there may be no failure to pass the clauses providing for taxing the receipts of telegraph, telephone, express and fast-freight companies, etc., instead of taxing merely their visible property. The exigency which has rendered it necessary for me to call you together in special session could not well have been avoided. The extraordinary labor imposed upon you by your undertaking critically to consider the vast body of legislation proposed to you for adoption by the commission appointed by the act of 1879 to compile and revise existing statutes has required you to occupy much time in the committee-room and upon the floor on that work, which otherwise would have been spent in considering ordinary legislation. Many important changes of existing laws have been proposed by the commission. It is proper that these shall receive careful attention, in order that they may, so far as they shall be adopted, not represent what is deemed best by the committee merely, but reflect the deliberate judgment of each house. In the progress of the further consideration of these proposed enactments, amendments doubtless will from time to time be found necessary. I venture to suggest, with the most respectful deference, that hasty amendments will be not less likely to work harm than a too [illegible] consideration of the enactments proposed. Even the commissioners will not always be able to perceive at the moment their entire scope and effect, nor how far they may introduce inconsistencies and ambiguity, which will leave the meaning of the law uncertain until it shall be determined by the Supreme Court. There is a subject which at first view may be deemed of little comparative importance, to which I wish to invite your serious attention. In referring in bills to the title of acts meant to be amended there have been frequent instances during the regular session in which these titles have been recited incorrectly, and at some stages of not a few bills passages or words have been omitted, or words have been changed, the effect of which has been in some cases to alter or to obscure the sense, and in others will be to convey the idea to uninformed readers that the measure has been imperfectly considered. Such faults in laws are ever a fruitful source of legislation and of consequent expense. The way of avoiding them is easy, and is familiar to such of you as have had previous experience in legislative bodies. It is earnestly hoped that a diligent effort will be made to guard against those faults in the passage of bills at the present session. It is hoped that every proper effort will be made to finish the work which you have in hand in less than the forty days allowed by the constitution for a special session, and that a constant desire will be felt to restrain expense where it is not obviously proper. While not withholding appropriations where they may be necessary for the public welfare, it should be your constant effort to make the burden of taxation as light as it can be made consistently with the wise administration of the affairs of the State.

WEDNESDAY, March 9.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the day in discussing and amending the House Tax bill, and agreed to meet to-morrow in joint convention to receive from the State Treasurer the paid bonds issued prior to 1841. The Secretary appointed George W. Campbell, of Rush county, Registry Clerk; Burt P. Davidson, of Tippecanoe, Bill Clerk; Alfred Thornburg, of Morgan, Enrolling Clerk; and Martin L. Bundy, Jr., of Henry, Engrossing Clerk.

HOUSE.—The House finally finished the Public Offenses bill and passed it. The bill is an elaborate one of 294 sections, and makes some important changes in the criminal law, some of which are the following: The jury, except in capital cases, cannot prescribe the sentence, but this is left to the Judge; fraudulent voting is punished more vigorously; druggists must have proper qualifications; public officers may be punished for drunkenness and removed for the second offense; a house cannot be let for purposes of prostitution, and every person visiting such a house is made subject to arrest; advertisements for procuring abortions are prohibited; and members of Council may be fined for intentional absence. A bill appropriating $75,000 for expenses of the special session was passed. The House instructed the Judiciary Committee to propose a bill removing the necessity of organizing the Legislature under the Presidency of the Auditor and Secretary of State. Concurrence was had in the committee report favoring the passage of the Edwin McDowell Compromise bill, and the measure was subsequently engrossed. The Senate joint resolution was adopted to adjourn from Friday until Thursday afternoon, to give the members opportunity to return home, and vote on the constitutional amendment. The Common School bill was under consideration at the time of adjournment. The Clerk named as assistants: W. L. Taylor, of Lagrange, reading clerk; W. H. Hay, of Marion, file clerk; O. H. Ahern, of Kosciusko, Registry Clerk; W. G. Bratton, of Huntington, and C. H. Young, of Lake, Enrolling Clerks; J. F. Wilson of Harrison, A. R. Copeland, of Fulton, and G. A. Teale, of Noble, Engrossing Clerks.

THURSDAY, March 10.—SENATE.—The Senate passed the House bill appropriating money to defray the expense of the special session, and a bill was introduced relating to the re-location of county seats. The remainder of the day was occupied with the House Tax bill, and the sections imposing a tax upon foreign companies doing business in this State was whipped into shape. The amendment to the Common school bill, giving the people the right to elect County Superintendents, was made the special order for Tuesday, at which time will be considered the proposition to abolish them altogether. An amendment to the Tax bill was passed empowering a bank to pay tax due from any of its shareholders and retain the amount, with interest, from the dividend. It was also ordered that foreign insurance companies shall pay taxes semi-annually on receipts. The tax on express companies was fixed at 1 per cent.

HOUSE.—A resolution recommending the passage of an act forbidding the letting of convict labor for less than 70 cents per day was adopted. The following bills were passed: Requiring minors who have sold property to return the consideration therefor upon reclaiming the property after coming of age; requiring railroads to remove and destroy rubbish and other combustible matter along their lines; abolishing the offices of Town and City Assessors, and transferring the duties thereof to County Assessors; also the bill providing for the employment of short-hand reporters in County Courts in the discretion of the Judge. The bill requiring theaters to pay a county license failed for want of a constitutional majority. The House wrangled for several hours over the mode of electing County Superintendents—whether by Township Trustees or popular vote—and the discussion finally turned upon the advisability of abolishing the office altogether, and return to the old method of County Examiners. An amendment to that effect was offered, and, together with the other proposition, was made the special order for Wednesday.

The joint convention of the two houses, called for the purpose of destroying the old Wabash and Erie bonds, adjourned without action, it developing that the destruction of the bonds was not intended to be done in the presence of the Legislature, but by the State officers.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

Inauguration of the Twentieth Chief Magistrate.

Interesting Scenes and Incidents Attending the Ceremonies.

FAREWELL TO MENTOR.

James A. Garfield, twentieth President of the United States, left his quiet home at Mentor, Ohio, for the National Capital on the last day of February. Almost the entire population of Mentor and the neighboring villages, reinforced by friends of the family and politicians from distant cities, assembled to bid the President-elect good-by. After an uncomfortably-long and tedious address made to him by Mayor Tinker, of Painesville, Ohio, Gen. Garfield spoke as follows:

FELLOW-CITIZENS AND NEIGHBORS OF LAKE COUNTY: I thank you for the cordial and kindly greeting and farewell. You have come from your homes, than which no happier are known in this country, from this beautiful lakeside, full of all that makes country life happy, to give me your blessing and farewell. You do not know how much I leave behind me of friendship, and confidence and homelike happiness; but I know I am indebted to this people for acts of kindness, of neighborly friendship, of political confidence, of public support that few men have ever enjoyed at the hands of any people. You are a part of this great community of Northern Ohio, which for so many years has had no political desire but the good of your country, and now wish but the promotion of liberty and justice; have had no scheme but the building up of all that was worthy and true in our republic. If I were to search over all the world, I could not find a better model of political spirit, of aspirations for the truth and the right, than I have found in this community during the eighteen years its people have honored me with their confidence. I thank the citizens of this county for their kindness, and especially my neighbors of Mentor, who have demanded so little of me and have done so much to make my home a refuge and a joy. What awaits me I cannot speak of, but I shall carry to the discharge of the duties that lie before me, to the problems and dangers I may meet, a sense of your confidence and your love, which will always be answered by my gratitude. Neighbors, friends, constituents, farewell.

THE JOURNEY TO WASHINGTON.

The distinguished party—consisting of Gen. Garfield and wife, his mother, Mrs. Eliza Garfield, his two sons, Irvin and Abram, and his daughter, Miss Mollie, with four servants, Gen. D. G. Swaim, Col. L. A. Sheldon and wife, Capt. C. E. Henry, O. L. Judd, and J. D. Brown, Secretary—then boarded the train and began their Eastward journey. The entire trip by rail to Washington was a remarkably quiet one. Stops were few and short, and everything was in keeping, as much as possible, with the General's desire that the journey might be free from display. Only three speeches were made on the way, and they were all confined to towns in his old Congressional district—Ashtabula, Warren and Youngstown.

AT THE CAPITAL.

Gen. Garfield arrived at Washington on the morning of the 1st of March. There was a disposition to receive him with various military and civic formalities, but he requested that this should not be done. A few gentlemen were at the depot, and there was a large crowd outside. Two rows of policemen kept the throng back, and between these rows Gen. Garfield and his family passed. The aged mother of the President-elect was supported by her son to the carriage. She was driven directly to the White House. Gen. Garfield and his family were driven to the Riggs House, where apartments had been secured for them so high up as to be out of the reach of curious people.

During the three following days the General found himself overrun with visitors. Almost all who called were invited to go to his rooms, but the crowds constantly waiting were so great that many left, contented with simply sending their cards.

On Wednesday, the 2d inst., an elegant reception was given by Congressman Chittenden, of New York, in honor of the President-elect, which was mainly confined to gentlemen guests. The supper is described as a very elaborate one, and champagne, we are told, followed in abundance.

On Thursday, the 3d, the last entertainment of the out-going administration was given at the Executive Mansion, the occasion being a state dinner in honor of the President-elect and Mrs. Garfield. The guests were principally from Ohio. We are informed by the ever-present Jenkins that on this occasion—and we record it here for the benefit of our lady readers—Mrs. Hayes wore a superb white satin, brocaded in clusters of rosebuds and leaves wrought with threads of gold; that Mrs. Garfield wore black velvet, with point-lace collar and ruffles at the sleeves; that Mrs. G., like Mrs. H., eschews jewelry; that Mrs. H. was radiant, and the life of the party; and that Mrs. G. appeared quiet, but self-possessed.

Among the vast crowds of visitors reaching the capital on the evening of the 30th, was Gen. Hancock. Large numbers of his admirers met the great defeated at the depot, took the horses from the carriage after he had entered it, and drew him up Pennsylvania avenue in triumph.

THE INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

The weather on the morning of the 4th looked decidedly gloomy. It was snowing and the streets were covered with water that stood in tremendous pools to the disgust of the eager pedestrians. To add to the discomfort under foot, the wind was cold and blustering, and after the snow ceased to fall, except by fits and starts, dark clouds floated across the sky in a threatening, dismal manner. At about 10:30 o'clock, however, the sun crept out with a weak, sickly smile that, while not very comforting, was a little encouraging. The day continued to improve until, at 1 o'clock, the sun shone brightly, but could not do much to soften the cold west wind that chilled the watching multitude upon the streets.

At 10 o'clock President Hayes, accompanied by Senators Anthony, Bayard and Pendleton, called at the Riggs House for Gen. Garfield and drove to the White House, the place of starting on the journey to the Capitol.

At 10:30 a chorus of bugles announced the arrival of President Hayes and President-elect Garfield from the hotel, who were received in the ante-room by Mr. Pendleton, and for a brief moment the ladies and gentlemen and their invited friends in the house greeted each other with a hasty good morning in the Red Room. Col. Casey then announced that everything was ready, and assigned the party to carriages in the following order:

First—Gen. Garfield's mother and wife; Mrs. Hayes, Mollie Garfield and Fanny Hayes.

Second—Mrs. Dr. Davis, Mrs. Herron, Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. Andrews and Miss Bullard, Cleveland.

Third—Mrs. Mason and three daughters, Cleveland.

Fourth—Harry, Jimmy and Irvin Garfield and Scott Hayes.

Fifth—Messrs. Swaim and Rockwell, Mrs. Deschler and Mrs. Green, of Cleveland.

Sixth—Miss Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Noble, of Columbus.

A magnificent four-in-hand of bays drove up, drawing an open barouche, into which stepped President Hayes and Gen. Garfield, accompanied by Senators Anthony and Bayard, who were driven off a short distance, and were followed by a carriage containing Vice President-elect Arthur and Senator Pendleton, drawn by a beautiful four-in-hand of grays.

The Presidential party were halted an instant while the Cleveland troops filed in ahead, and the Cleveland Grays fell in immediately in the rear.

At the gate Gen. Sherman as Grand Marshal took charge of the procession, arranging the Presidential escort in the following order:

Two platoons of city police, mounted.

Grand Marshal Gen. Wm. T. Sherman and the following his aides: Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall, of New York; Col. L. M. Dayton, of Ohio; Lieut. F. V. Greene, of Washington.

The following members of the staff of the General of the Army: Col. R. T. Dodge, Col. J. C. Tidball, Col. A. P. Morrow, Col. J. M. Bacon, Gen. O. M. Poe.

Brevet Maj. Gen. R. B. Ayres, U. S. A., and staff.

Maj. Gen. John Hammond, member of Congress from New York, Chief of Staff.

First Lieut. George Mitchell, Adjutant Second Artillery, Assistant Adjutant General.

First Lieut. Selden Smith, Regimental Quartermaster Second Artillery, Assistant Quartermaster General.

Second Lieut. C. G. Ayres, Tenth Cavalry, Aide-de-Camp.

Second Lieut. E. M. Weaver, Jr., Second Artillery, Aide-de-Camp.

Second Lieut. McKnight, Aide-de-Camp.

Lieut. Charles McConnor, Eighth Cavalry, Aide-de-Camp.

Maj. Anderson, Aide-de-Camp.

Mr. Francis, Knights Templar, Aide-de-Camp.

Mr. Fenton, Washington, D. C., Aide-de-Camp.

Mr. Fred P. Wright, Washington, D. C., Aide-de-Camp.

Mr. Duhamel, Washington, D. C., Aide-de-Camp.

These followed three four-horse carriages, containing President R. B. Hayes, President-elect James A. Garfield, Vice President W. A. Wheeler, Vice President-elect C. A. Arthur, and an escort committee of Senators, consisting of Senator George H. Pendleton, Senator H. B. Anthony, and Senator Thomas F. Bayard. Then followed: Twelve companies of regular artillery, four companies of the marine battalion, and the Cleveland (Ohio) Cavalry troop, escorting President Garfield, consisting of forty men, officered as follows: Captain, W. H. Harris; First Lieutenant, G. A. Garretson; Second Lieutenant, H. H. Baxter; Surgeon, N. Schneider; Chaplain, C. Collins; First Sergeant, H. E. Meyers; Third Sergeant, H. G. Rouse.

Columbia Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, Sir Wm. H. Brown, Generalissimo.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION.

As the two Presidential carriages came out of the White House grounds, a shout, long and loud, went up. President Garfield, Vice President Arthur and ex-President Hayes uncovered as they rode down the avenue, and the shoutings and hurrahs were almost incessant.

Bodies of armed and unarmed men marched and countermarched on the avenue and at almost every approach to it, getting into position for the procession on the return from the Capitol.

The procession was formed in accordance with the programme, and marched in order to the east front of the Capitol, where a large platform had been erected for the accommodation of the Presidential party, Senators, Representatives and members of the press.

As Gen. Garfield passed through the east door of the Capitol building to the portico, he looked upon the most extraordinary spectacle that has ever met the eyes of a President in making the journey from the Senate Chamber to the spot associated with the beginning of so many memorable administrations.

In front was a solid mass of people, principally men, covering all the space between the Capitol steps and the Washington statue. Standing through the masses of people in black was a line of bright uniforms, and fringing the edges of the crowd were picturesque groupings of color in guidon, plume and flag. Beyond, branching out on the circling roadways of Capitol hill, like the lines of a waiting army, were masses of troops, the bright red facings of the light-blue overcoats and the trappings of the men in black or dark blue shining out in sharp-cut splendor in contrast with the heavy masses nearer.

On the terraces to the right and left; on the roof of the Capitol; in the windows and on the balconies and other prominences were crowds of people struggling for place or foothold.

As the procession debouched upon the terrace the head moved steadily to the front, but the main part of the column, composed of grave Senators and Representatives and ladies who are leaders of society, broke into fragments and deployed to the right and left, as if preparing for an impetuous charge on the crowd in front. There was a good-humored scramble that threw even the staid diplomatic corps into a sort of a panic, and the gold lace picturesque costumes went to the front in the spirit of impulse that seemed to control the entire crowd admitted to the platform.

The Britishers and the suites of the German, French, Spanish, and Japanese Ministers looked on with amusement at first, and then, breaking ranks, proceeded to skip over the chairs and scramble forward after the manner of the distinguished Americans.

For a few minutes the scene was an exciting one, but in a short space of time the people had settled down to a dignified repose of manner, and stood expectantly waiting for the ceremonies to begin.

The space on the platform had been very carefully mapped out, but the scramble had broken up the geography of the arrangement, and newspaper men found themselves where the diplomatic corps ought to have been, and Senators and their ladies looked serenely down from the place where the plans and specifications said the reporters were to be.

President Hayes, Gen. Garfield, Chief Justice Waite, and others of the Presidential party, arrived at the appointed place without being subjected to the pressure prevailing on either side, and were received with tremendous cheering.

Gen. Garfield was seated with the Chief Justice on his right and the President on his left. Behind him sat his mother, wife and daughter, Mrs. Hayes and daughter, and Vice President Arthur; and, to his left, Senators Pendleton, Bayard and Anthony, of the special committee of escort.

Gen. Garfield, when introduced, threw off his overcoat, and, waiting until the cheering subsided, began his address. He read from manuscript, and spoke with unusual deliberation, but the first ringing sentence was in its diction and delivery so like Garfield that it met the expectancy and fixed the interest of all within hearing.

The day, which had been dreary and stormy, brightened about this time, and the sun came out from its hiding place. There was a strong, cold wind blowing from the south, taking up with a western impulse as it swept round the corner of the Capitol building, and Gen. Garfield spoke against this. Yet his voice was, during the first start of his long address, clear and strong. He faced the greater part of the time to the southeast and received repeated invitations from the crowd below to face the other way.

There was less freedom of gesture than is usual with Gen. Garfield, but at times he caught the hampering manuscript in his clenched hand and flung it aloft in an emphatic forceful sweep. Again he brought his closed hand down with fierce fervor on the rail in front, but for the most part contented himself with making his points effective by the extraordinary plan of emphasis and modulation at his command. As an oratorical display the effort did not come up to his famous Chicago speech, and not once did he lean back in the old familiar way, and swing his arms, as is h... wont when he gives free rein to his impetuous oratory.

Following is Gen. Garfield's inaugural address in full:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: We stand to-day upon an eminence which overlooks a hundred years of national life—a century crowded with perils, but crowned with the triumphs of liberty and love. Before continuing our onward march, let us pause on this height for a moment, to strengthen our faith and renew our hope by a glance at the pathway along which our people have traveled. It is now three days more than 100 years since the adoption of the first written constitution of the United States, the articles of confederation and of perpetual union. The new republic was then beset with danger on every hand. It had not conquered a place in the family of nations. The decisive battle of the war for independence, whose centennial anniversary will soon be gratefully celebrated at Yorktown, had not yet been fought. The colonists were struggling not only against the armies of Great Britain, but against the settled opinions of mankind, for the world did not believe that the supreme authority of government could be safely intrusted to the guardianship of the people themselves. We cannot overestimate the fervent love of liberty, the intelligent courage and saving common sense with which our fathers made the great experiment of self-government. When they found after a short time that the confederacy of States was too weak to meet the necessities of a vigorous and expanding republic, they boldly set it aside, and in its stead established a national Union, founded directly upon the will of the people, and endowed it with future powers of self-preservation and with ample authority for the accomplishment of its great objects. Under this constitution the boundaries of freedom have been enlarged, the foundations of order and peace have been strengthened, and the growth in all the better elements of national life has vindicated the wisdom of the founders and given new hope to their descendants. Under this constitution, our people long ago made themselves safe against danger from without, and secured for their marines and flag an equality of rights on all the seas. Under this constitution twenty-five States have been added to the Union, with constitutions and laws framed and enforced by their own citizens, to secure the manifold blessings of local and self government. The jurisdiction of this constitution now covers an area fifty times greater than that of the original thirteen States, and a population twenty times greater than that of 1780. The supreme trial of the constitution came at last under the tremendous pressure of civil war. We ourselves are witnesses that the Union emerged from the blood and fire of that conflict, purified and made stronger for all the beneficent purposes of good government, and now, at the close of this first century of growth, with inspirations of its history in their hearts, our people have lately reviewed the condition of the nation, passed judgment upon the conduct and opinions of the political parties, and have registered their will concerning the future administration of Government. To interpret and execute that will, in accordance with the constitution, is the paramount duty of the Executive.

Even from this brief review, it is manifest that the nation is resolutely facing to the front, resolved to employ its best energies in developing the great possibilities of the future. Sacredly preserving whatever has been gained to liberty and good government during the century, our people are determined to leave behind them all those bitter controversies concerning things which have been irrevocably settled, and the further discussion of which can only stir up strife and delay the onward march. The supremacy of the nation and its laws should be no longer a subject of debate. That discussion, which for half a century threatened the existence of the Union, was closed at last in the high court of war, by a decree from which "there is no appeal, that the constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof shall continue to be the supreme law of the land, binding alike upon the States and upon the people. This decree does not disturb the autonomy of the States nor interfere with any of their necessary rules of local self-government, but it does fix and establish the permanent supremacy of the Union. The will of the nation, speaking with the voice of battle, and through the amended constitution, has fulfilled the great promise of 1776, by proclaiming "Liberty throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof."

The elevation of the negro race from slavery to the full rights of citizenship is the most important political change we have known since the adoption of the constitution of 1787. No thoughtful man can fail to appreciate its beneficent effect upon our institutions and people. It has freed us from the perpetual danger of war and dissolution. It has added immensely to the moral and industrial forces of our people. It has liberated the master as well as the slave from the relation which wronged and enfeebled both. It has surrendered to their own guardianship the manhood of more than 5,000,000 people, and has opened to each one of them a career of freedom and usefulness; it has given new inspiration to the power of self-help in both races by making labor more honorable to one and more necessary to the other. The influence of this force will grow greater and bear richer fruit with coming years. No doubt the great change has caused serious disturbance to our Southern community. This is to be deplored, though it was unavoidable; but those who resisted the change should remember that under our institutions there was no middle ground for the negro race between slavery and equal citizenship. There can be no permanent disfranchised peasantry in the United States. Freedom can never yield its fullness of blessings as long as law or its administration places the smallest obstacle in the pathway of any virtuous citizen. The emancipated race has already made remarkable progress. With unquestioning devotion to the Union, with a patience and gentleness not born of fear, they have "followed the light as God gave them to see the light." They are rapidly laying the material foundations of self-support, widening the circle of intelligence, and beginning to enjoy the blessings that gather around the homes of the industrious poor. They deserve the generous encouragement of all good men. So far as my authority can lawfully extend, they shall enjoy the full and equal protection of the constitution and laws.

The free enjoyment of equal suffrage is still in question, and a frank statement of the issue may aid its solution. It is alleged that in many communities negro citizens are practically denied the freedom of the ballot. In so far as the truth of this allegation is admitted, it is answered that in many places honest local government is impossible if the mass of uneducated negroes are allowed to vote. These are grave allegations. So far as the latter is true it is the only palliation that can be offered for opposing the freedom of the ballot. A bad local government is certainly a great evil which ought to be prevented, but to violate the freedom and sanctity of suffrage is more than an evil; it is a crime which, if persisted in, will destroy the Government itself. Suicide is not a remedy. If in other lands it be high treason to compass the death of the King, it should be counted no less a crime here to strangle our sovereign power and stifle its voice. It has been said that unsettled questions have no pity for the repose of nations; it should be said, with the utmost emphasis, that this question of suffrage will never give repose or safety to the States or to the nation until each, within its own jurisdiction, makes and keeps the ballot free and pure by the strong sanctions of law.

But the danger which arises from ignorance in the voter cannot be denied. It covers a field far wider than that of negro suffrage and the present condition of that race. It is a danger that lurks and hides in the courses and fountains of power in every State. We have no standard by which to measure the disaster that may be brought upon us by ignorance and vice in citizens when joined to corruption and fraud in suffrage. The voters of the Union who make and unmake constitutions, and upon whose will hangs the destiny of our governments, can transmit their supreme authority to no successor save the coming generation of voters, who are sole heirs of our sovereign powers. If that generation comes to its inheritance blinded by ignorance and corrupted by vice, the fall of the republic will be certain and remediless. The census has already sounded the alarm in appalling figures which mark how dangerously high the tide of illiteracy has risen among our voters and their children. To the South the question is of supreme importance, but the responsibility for the existence of slavery did not rest on the South alone. The nation itself is responsible for the extension of suffrage, and is under special obligations to aid in removing the illiteracy which it has added to the voting population of the North and South alike. There is but one remedy. All the constitutional power of the nation and of the States, and all the volunteer forces of the people should be summoned to meet this danger by the saving influence of universal education.

It is a high privilege and sacred duty of those now living to educate their successors, and fit them by intelligence and virtue for the inheritance which awaits them in this beneficent work. Sections and races should be forgotten, and partisanship should be unknown. Let our people find a new meaning in the divine oracle which declares that "a little child shall lead them." For our little children will soon control the destinies of the republic.

My countrymen, we do not now differ in our judgment concerning the controversies of past generations, and fifty years hence our children will not be divided in their opinions concerning our controversies. They will surely bless their fathers and their fathers' God that the Union was preserved; that slavery was overthrown, and that both races were made equal before the law. We may hasten or we may retard, but we cannot prevent the final reconciliation. Is it not possible for us now to make a truce with time by anticipating and accepting its inevitable verdicts? Enterprises of the highest importance to our moral and material well-being invite us, and offer ample scope for the employment of our best powers. Let all our people, leaving behind them the battle-fields of dead issues, move forward, and, in the strength of liberty and a restored Union, win the grander victories of peace.

The prosperity which now prevails is without parallel in our history. Fruitful seasons have done much to secure it, but they have not done all.

The preservation of the public credit, and the resumption of specie payments, so successfully attained by the administration of my predecessors, has enabled our people to secure the blessings which the seasons brought. By the experience of commercial nations in all ages, it has been found that gold and silver afford the only safe foundation for a monetary system. Confusion has recently been created by variations in the relative value of the two metals, but I confidently believe that arrangements can be made between the leading commercial nations which will secure the general use of both metals. Congress should provide that compulsory coinage of silver now required by law may not disturb our monetary system by driving either metal out of circulation. If possible, such adjustment should be made that the purchasing power of every coined dollar will be exactly equal to its debt-paying power in the markets of the world. The chief duty of the National Government in connection with the currency of the country, is to coin and declare its value. Grave doubts have been entertained whether Congress is authorized by the constitution to make any form of paper money legal tender. The present issue of United States notes has been sustained by the necessities of war, but such paper should depend for its value and currency upon its convenience in use and its prompt redemption in coin at the will of a holder, and not upon its compulsory circulation. These notes are not money, but promises to pay money. If holders demand it, the promise should be kept.

The refunding of the national debt at a lower rate of interest should be accomplished without compelling the withdrawal of the national bank notes, and thus disturbing the business of the country. I venture to refer to the position I have occupied on financial questions during my long service in Congress, and to say that time and experience have strengthened the opinions I have so often expressed on these subjects. The finances of the Government shall suffer no detriment which it may be possible for my administration to prevent.

The interests of agriculture deserve more attention from the Government than they have yet received. The farms of the United States afford homes and employment for more than one-half the people, and furnish much the largest part of all our exports. As the Government lights our coasts for the protection of mariners and for the benefit of commerce, so it should give to the tillers of the soil the lights of practical science and experience.

Our manufacturers are rapidly making us industrially independent, and are opening to capital and labor new and profitable fields of employment. This steady and healthy growth should still be maintained.

Our facilities for transportation should be promoted by the continued improvement of our harbors and great interior water-ways, and by the increase of our tonnage on the ocean. The development of the world's commerce has led to an urgent demand for shortening the great sea voyage around Cape Horn, by constructing ship canals or railways across the isthmus which unites the two continents. Various plans to this end have been suggested, but none of them have been sufficiently matured to warrant the United States extending pecuniary aid. The subject is one which will immediately engage the attention of the Government, with a view to thorough protection to American interests. We will urge no narrow policy, nor seek peculiar or exclusive privileges in any commercial route, but in the language of my predecessors, I believe it is to be "the right and duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any interoceanic canal across the isthmus that connects North and South America, as will protect our national interests."

The constitution guarantees absolute religious freedom. Congress is also prohibited from making any law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Territories of the United States are subject to the direct legislative authority of Congress, and hence the General Government is responsible for any violation of the constitution in any of them. It is, therefore, a reproach to the Government that in the most populous of the Territories the constitutional guarantee is not enjoyed by the people, and the authority of Congress is set at naught. The Mormon church not only offends the moral sense of mankind by sanctioning polygamy, but prevents the administration of justice through the ordinary instrumentalities of law. In my judgment it is the duty of Congress, while respecting to the utmost the conscientious convictions and religious scruples of every citizen, to prohibit, within its jurisdiction, all criminal practices, especially of that class which destroy family relations and endanger social order, nor can any ecclesiastical organization be safely permitted to usurp in the smallest degree the functions and powers of the national Government.

The civil service can never be placed on a satisfactory basis until it is regulated by law. For the good of the service itself, for the protection of those who are intrusted with the appointing power against the waste of time and the obstruction to public business caused by inordinate pressure for place, and for the protection of incumbents against intrigue and wrong, I shall at the proper time ask Congress to fix the tenure of minor offices of the several executive departments, and prescribe the grounds upon which removals shall be made during the terms for which the incumbents have been appointed.

Finally, acting always within the authority and limitations of the constitution, invading neither the rights of States nor the reserved rights of the people, it will be the purpose of my administration to maintain authority, and, in all places within its jurisdiction, to enforce obedience to all the laws of the Union, in the interest of the people; to demand a rigid economy in all the expenditures of the Government, and to require honest and faithful services of all the executive officers, remembering that offices were created not for the benefit of incumbents or their supporters, but for the service of the Government.

And now, fellow-citizens, I am about to assume the great trust which you have commited to my hands. I appeal to you for that earnest and thoughtful support which makes this Government in fact as it is in law—a Government of the people. I shall greatly rely upon the wisdom and patriotism of Congress and of those who may share with me the responsibilities and duties of the administration; and, above all, upon our efforts to promote the welfare of this great people and their Government, I reverently invoke the support and blessing of Almighty God.

As soon as the oath was administered, he turned impulsively to his mother and kissed her, and then kissed his wife. The little incident was very touching because of the overpowering impulse that controlled President Garfield at the moment, and it called out a tremendous cheer. The crowd from first to last were disposed to license the General's motions, and would probably not have forgiven him had he not stooped and crowned his mother's supreme happiness in this day by a kiss.

Ex-President Hayes was the first to greet and congratulate Gen. Garfield as President, and was followed by Vice President Arthur and Senators Pendleton, Bayard and Anthony, of the committee.

The President and party were then escorted to the carriages in waiting, and took their places in the procession, which was formed ready for marching.

The crowd in front included every grade of people, as well as men of all parties and from all sections of the country. There was a fair sprinkling of colored persons present, all of whom were greatly pleased at Gen. Garfield's reference to their race.

When the time came the crowd scattered with the suddenness of an explosion, and, as Gen. Garfield's carriage turned into the avenue, he looked in one direction upon 50,000 people moving in diverging lines, and in the other upon an orderly mass that covered the breadth of Pennsylvania avenue, from house to house, as far as his eye could reach.

It was a magnificent spectacle seen from a fine point of observation, and through this mass of cheering, shouting people the new President moved toward his new home.

IN THE SENATE.

In the Senate, at 11:45 the message from the President convening that body in extra session was read. Ten minutes of expectancy ensued, and there was a flutter of excitement as the minute-hand clock turned toward 12. Mr. Bassett, the veteran Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate, did what he was expected to do, and what he has done on so many previous occasions of the kind, walked forward, got on a chair, and, with the historical stick, treasured up for almost a quarter of a century, put back the hands of the clock ten minutes. This performance gave the old gentleman great satisfaction and certainly it pleased the expectant audience. The minute hand had almost regained the lost time when the Senate committee escorting President Hayes and Gen. Garfield appeared at the door. The President and President-elect came in arm and arm, both self-possessed in their movements. They were given seats in front of the Clerk's desk, facing the Senate and audience, Garfield sitting to the right of Hayes and the committee on the left. The Cabinet followed and took the front seats on the right. All the members were present, Acting Secretary French representing the Treasury Department. The Senate rose and remained standing until the party were seated, and the scene as the two men walked down the aisle was an impressive one, and to a few people more than that.

Gen. Garfield's mother looked down on this triumphant progress of her son, and, motherlike, burst into tears. The Senate arose again as Vice President-elect Arthur came in with the committee, and for a few minutes that gentleman was the center of attention. He went immediately to the chair by the side of Vice President Wheeler, was introduced in a speech of a single sentence, and proceeded to deliver his inaugural.

SENATORS: The moment which terminates my official duties as presiding officer of the Senate is at hand. These duties have been rendered of easy performance by your uniform leniency and forbearance. I am sure that in this parting hour I need no other guarantee of full amnesty for all my shortcomings. If I do, it is furnished in your very kind resolution of approval of my official action. I shall carry into my retirement grateful memories of personal kindness, alike of the Senate and its officers, and cordial wishes for future well-being of all, and now I proclaim my last official act by declaring that, the hour for the termination of the Forty-sixth Congress having arrived, the Senate stands adjourned without day.

Vice-President Arthur here assumed the chair, and delivered the usual formal address as follows:

SENATORS: I come as your presiding officer with genuine solicitude. Remembering my inexperience in parliamentary proceedings, I cannot forget how important, intricate and often embarrassing are the duties of the chair. On the threshold of our official association, I invoke that courtesy and kindness with which you have been wont to aid your presiding officer. I shall need your constant encouragement and support, and I rely with confidence on your lenient judgment of any errors into which I may fall. In return, be assured of my earnest purpose to administer your rules in the spirit of absolute fairness; to treat every Senator, at all times, with that courtesy and just consideration due to representatives of equal States, and to do my part, as assuredly each of you will do his, to maintain the order, decorum and dignity of the Senate. I trust the official and personal relations upon which we now enter will be marked with mutual confidence and regard, and that all our obligations will be so fulfilled and redeemed to our own honor, to the glory of our common country, and the prosperity of all its people. I am now ready to take the oath of office prescribed by the constitution.

This country has witnessed no military display of such proportions as was seen on this occasion since the return of Sherman's army and the grand review at the close of the war.

Gen. Sherman wisely concluded to make the escort to the Capitol and the procession separate performances. This course excited a great deal of grumbling at first, but the General adhered to his programme, maintaining that it would take too long to move such a body of men to have the main parade on the way to the Capitol, which must be reached at a certain moment. He preferred to have the escort a smaller body, so it was arranged that but a single division should participate in the first ceremony. A careful estimate places the number of men marching in the column at 20,000. Of this number there were fully 12,000 infantry, beside the batteries and several troops of cavalry.

It took over two hours for the column to pass the stand in review. President Garfield made many pleasant comments upon the appearance of the various commands as they passed.

The meeting between the President and Gen. Hancock was watched with interest. Neither gentleman showed by word or look that their relations had ever been of an extraordinary character. They met as friends who enjoy a mutual respect for each other, and they grasped hands as cordially as did any others that met on this historic scene.

After leaving the grand stand, President Garfield, with Mrs. Garfield upon his arm, walked to the Executive Mansion.

Ex-President Hayes and family left the White House in the afternoon, and went to the residence of Senator Sherman, from which four years ago they went to the White House.

The day's celebration was brought to a close in the evening by a brilliant display of fireworks at the head of Pennsylvania avenue, on the plaza in the rear of the Treasury building.

The inaugural ball, in the evening, turned out, as it was designed, to be one of the grandest affairs of the century.

Unhitching a Horse Instantaneously.

A very interesting experiment was lately made at Milan of Signor Mainetti's invention for instantaneously detaching a horse from a carriage. The horse, put at a gallop, was detached without the least shock, leaving the carriage behind, and only carrying off the harness on his back. The contrivance consists of a lever within reach of the coachman, who, with the slightest effort, withdraws two little iron pegs which fasten the traces. Now, as all the harness on the horses is fastened to two iron bolts, fixed on the shafts, and these bolts are only held in their places by the traces, it follows that the moment the latter are loosened the bolts slide out and the whole of the horse's harness is detached from the carriage, while the shafts and bars remain in their places. The experiment was repeated with success several times.

AN IMMENSE AREA OF RAILROAD AND GOVERNMENT LANDS, OF GREAT FERTILITY, WITHIN EASY REACH OF PERMANENT MARKET, AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES, is now offered for sale in EASTERN OREGON and EASTERN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

These lands form part of the great GRAIN BELT of the Pacific Slope, and are within an average distance of 250 to 300 miles from Portland, where steamships and sail vessels are directly loaded FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

GRAIN AT PORTLAND, OREGON, COMMANDS A PRICE EQUAL TO THAT OBTAINED IN CHICAGO.

The early completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. is now assured, and guarantees to settlers cheap and quick transportation and good markets both East and West. The opening of this new overland line to the Pacific, together with the construction of the network of 750 miles of railroad by the O. R. & N. Co. in the valleys of the great Columbia and its principal tributaries, renders certain a rapid increase in the value of the lands now open to purchase and pre-emption. There is every indication of an enormous movement of population to the Columbia River region in the immediate future.

LANDS SHOW an AVERAGE YIELD of 40 BUSHELS OF WHEAT PER ACRE. No Failure of Crops ever known.

RAILROAD LANDS offered at the uniform rate of $2.50 an Acre.

Assassination of the Czar of Russia.

The following is the latest statement:

The czar was returning in a covered carriage from Michael palace at 11 a. m., Sunday, March 13, with his brother, the Grand Duke Michael. His escort consisted of a quarter troop of Cossacks, and several officers of the household accompanied him in sleighs. As the carriage was passing along the banks of the Ekaterinopky canal, immediately opposite to the imperial stables, a bomb was thrown by a man who was standing behind a knot of pedestrians who had stopped to see the emperor go by. It exploded with a crash under the body of the carriage, splinters flying across the street, but doing no injury beyond tearing away the back part of the carriage. The driver, who had drawn up, descended from his box and the Cossack escort, which was a few paces in the rear, at once galloped up. At this time there were not more than twenty persons present. The czar, on hearing the crash, at once raised the window, opened the door and jumped out, and while he was drawing his fur cloak about him a second bomb was thrown from a knot of lookers-on, exploding at his feet. The smoke at the first explosion was still hanging about, and when the second bomb struck the pavement a dense cloud enveloped the carriage. There was a howl of pain and anguish from the Cossacks, some of whom were killed and more wounded by flying splinters, and three or four squads of police who were just going on duty at the imperial stables. As the smoke lifted the czar was seen lying on his back beside the wreck of the carriage, his legs torn and shattered and blood pouring from ghastly wounds in his thighs. His cloak and wearing apparel were literaly torn from his back. He was deadly pale, and his cries to the officers of his household for help were scarcely audible. Col. Sjoribky, of his suite, who was badly injured by the second explosion, which had shattered his sleigh, raised the emperor from the ground, and with the aid of Cossack officers, lifted him into the sleigh and conveyed him to the winter palace. All this did not occupy three minutes. As the assassin was thrown into a sled and driven off under a strong guard, Col. Gorjibski's sleigh, bearing the wounded emperor and two or three attendants drove rapidly through the streets to the winter palace, where a mounted messenger had previously arrived with the news. By this time the story was known through the neighborhood of the palace, and as the sleigh drove through the main gate people stood by uncovered while hundreds and thousands flocked to the scene of the tragedy.

Methods of Teaching Primary Arithmetic.

READ BY MISS LAURA E. CLARK AT TOWN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION, HELD AT WATERLOO, IND., MARCH 5, 1881.

One of the errors teachers make is, that they expect too much of their pupils. They forget that the mind of the child cannot grasp all the ideas in one year that they have worked years to obtain. They express themselves in a manner that the child cannot comprehend. I do not think because a child is small that we should use childish language, or receive childish answers. No matter how simple the question, let the answer be a complete sentence. A child should be taught to read numbers in the same manner that it is taught to read words, naming the number of objects by sight and not allowed to count them. If you wish to teach the child the word cat, you would not tell him the letters c-a and t spell cat, but would talk to him about a cat, and place the word on the board or in as many different places on the chart as you could. The child's knowledge of numbers commences with objects. He cannot learn the value of figures from one to ten, until he can count ten objects. The numeral frame is the most convenient apparatus to aid in teaching counting and in giving children first ideas of simple numbers. Hold the frame before the pupils and move the balls on the first wire one at a time while the children count from one to ten. Let this exercise be continued from day to day until each child can count from 1 to 10 alone. Afterward the counting may be extended to 20 by moving the balls on two wires, and then to thirty by moving the balls on three wires, and in the same manner until the child can count to 100. When the pupils are allowed to count in concert, care should be taken to have them use the falling inflection at each number, to prevent them from acquiring a sing-song tone.

Figures should be introduced as symbols of numbers of objects counted, but not as abstract numbers. Present them first consecutively in groups or steps as follows: from 0 to 9, from 10 to 19, from 20 to 29. No succeeding group should be presented until the preceding one has been thoroughly learned, so that the pupils can read them at sight, in order and out of order. During the exercises of counting and adding with the numeral frame, or any other object you may use, do not allow the children to count and add by rote. After a child has learned to count by ones to 100, the teacher may move two balls at a time, and then train them to count by twos, as 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, to 50. Then place a column of twos on the board, train them to add the figures in the same manner as the balls. When the pupils can add readily single columns each composed of like numbers, as all twos, all threes, fours or fives, teach them then to add single columns composed of different small numbers, as twos and threes, twos, threes and fours. The combination should be illustrated by objects first, then taught with figures on the blackboard. If you place a column composed of twos and threes let the pupil be trained from the first to name only the sums, thus: 3, 5, 8, 10, 13, 15, 18, 20, 23, 25. To make the pupils familiar with the sums produced by adding the separate number from 1 to 9, to each number below 20, arrange the figures on the blackboard thus:

1	1	1	2	2
1	2	3	2	3

Continue this arrangement until the pupils can add both on the board and slate each number from 1 to 9, to each number below 20, both in order and out of order. If you wish to know the sum of two numbers, as 4 and 6, do not allow the child to make marks on his slate, or to count his fingers. If you permit this he will carry that method through life.

Adding by decades will greatly facilitate learning to add accurately and rapidly.

5	15	7	17	9	19
4	4	7	7	7	7
—	—	—	—	—	—
9	19	14	24	16	26

By means of this and similar exercises, children can be led to observe that the same numbers always produce a like figure when added, as 9 and 7 always gives the unit 6, whether the numbers be 19 and 7, or 29 and 7, or 87 and 9. Another exercise that can be used for adding is, draw a circle on the board, place any number that you may wish to use in the center, and arrange the other numbers without the circle. Point to the figures without the circle, and the pupils add to this number the number within the center and give the amount. Blackboard exercises in subtraction, multiplication and division may be arranged in a similar manner. When a child can tell the sum of two numbers without hesitation he can be taught to subtract them. Use the numeral frame, take any two number, as 4 and 2, place 4 balls on one side of the frame, move 2 balls and the child will readily see that 2 balls remain. Do not try to teach a child the puzzle of borrowing 10, as it is called, until the fourth year. He may be able to comprehend it, but it is time that had better be employed in some other way. I have tried a great many methods of illustrating this, but the best that I ever tried was taking pieces of money. Every child of 8 or 10 years knows how many cents in one dime and how many dimes in one dollar. If I wished to take 87 from 423, I call the 4 hundreds $4, the 2 tens and 2 tens dimes, the 7 units and 3 units cents. I place them in boxes marked $ box, dime box and cent box. The child readily perceives that I cannot take 7 cents from the cent box, for it contains only 3 cents, so I must take one dime from the dime box and change to cents. Now I have 13 cents. When I take 7 cents there will 6 cents remain in the cent box. There were two dimes in the dime box, and I took away 1 dime. They see there is only 1 dime left in the box. I want to take away 8. Then I take $1 from the $ box change it to dimes, place it in the box; 8 dimes from 11 dimes leaves 3 dimes. I have taken $1 from the dollar box; there are $3 left in that box. I have tried a great many methods, but have found this the simplest and easiest understood. Subtraction by decades is a very good method to make the child familiar with the difference of any two numbers.

4	14	7	11	15	25
1	1	4	4	7	7
—	—	—	—	—	—
3	13	3	12	8	18

The multiplication table may be illustrated by means of the ball on the numeral frame, by arranging the balls in groups of twos and then threes. When the groups of twos have been illustrated by objects, the teacher may write the table of twos on the blackboard, thus: 1 times 2 is 2, 2 times 2 are 4. Second form: 3x2 equals 6; 6x2 equals 12; 9x2 equals 18, explaining the use of all the signs of arithmetic. Let the pupil copy and learn the first form so as to repeat it both forward and backward. When the tables of twos have been learned in both forms, teach the threes in the same manner. After the threes have been learned in the first and second form, review both of the tables in combinations in a third form, somewhat as follows: 4x2 equals ?, 5x3 equals ?, 9x2 equals ?, 8x2 equals ?

All the tables may be taught on the same plan. New tables should not be presented before the pupils have learned thoroughly each preceding one through the three forms. For a change in the work I would use the Grube method of teaching numbers, measuring one number by another. As soon as a child has learned a number, measure it by each one he has previously learned. When this method is used a child does not need to wait until he enters the high grade to learn to multiply and divide. As soon as he has learned the value of all numbers from 1 to 10, let him measure them. For example, measure 3 by three, first by objects, then by placing tables on the board, as 2 plus 1 equals 3; 3 minus 2 equals 1; 2 plus 1 equals 3; 3 minus 2 equals 1.

The first year the child should be expected to give only the simplest analysis of problems. The second year he should be expected to give a complete analysis of all problems. The work should be from the board. I would not have the child use a book until the third or fourth year. The second year the child has learned to write, place the work on the board with a form of analysis you wish him to follow; have him do the work on the slate. It will give him employment, which is one of the main objects in primary schools. Division can be taught most thoroughly by commencing the instruction with the long division form, and using a small number for a divisor. Four steps will indicate the method and order for teaching division. First step, give an example in which each figure of the dividend will contain the divisor without a remainder. Second step, give example with the divisor less than ten, in which remainders will occur during the partial divisions. Third step, give an example with divisors from 10 to 15, then teach the short division form and then require the pupils to use the short form for all examples when the divisor does not exceed 12. In illustrating the short division form, give the same examples that you have used in illustrating the other method, taking care to arrange the two methods so that the difference in their lengths shall readily illustrate why one form is called long and the other short division. Fourth step, give examples with divisors embracing numbers from 15 to 50. Arrange the examples so that different quotients shall contain naughts in various positions. The multiplication tables may be reviewed so as to enable the pupils to learn the division table, as 4x7 equals 28, 4 in 28 7 times. Both the reading and writing of numbers in figures can be taught most thoroughly in steps or groups. The figures should be presented in their order in connection with counting, then out of their order. Figures should be taught to 1,000 without numeration. 1st step, from 10 to 9; 2d step, 100 to 200; 300 to 900; third step, from 100 to 199; fourth step, 200 to 299. As much time will be required to teach the first and third steps as any other four steps. After a child can write any number from 1 to 199 he can readily learn to write any number to 999. Let each step be thoroughly mastered before taking up another step. On commencing numeration, the three places in units period should be taught by the order of their places and by their names. As units place, the first place on the right-hand side, tens' place the second place from the right-hand side. Hundreds' place, the third place from the right-hand side. Do not proceed to thousands period until the pupils can readily name and write any number, both in order and out of order in periods. The places in thousands period should be taught first as to the fourth fifth and sixth places. Then let the pupils be led to observe the similarity of names between the first, second and third places of units period, and the first, second and third places of thousands, as units, tens and hundreds of units, units, tens and hundreds of thousands, and so with millions period. In teaching Roman numeration after a child has learned the value of I, V, X, L, explain to him the key of Roman numbers. When letters representing equal values stand side by side, and when a letter representing a smaller number, the values of each are to be added stands on the right-hand side of a larger number. When a letter representing a smaller number stands on the left-hand side of one representing a larger number the value of the left-hand letter is to be taken from the right-hand letter, as the value of I is to be taken from the value of V in the combination IV. Training the pupils in numerous applications of this key will save much time usually spent in memorizing the Roman numbers. Do not expect the child to read or write numbers beyond 100 the first year, or 100,000 the third year. I do not think that we gain by saying anything to the little child about millions. If you don't teach anything but the "three R's" it would do; but there must be a constant change in primary work, or the child, and I may say teacher, wearies of the work. Do not try to do too much of one thing. Make haste slowly, and do not be discouraged if you must repeat, repeat, repeat.

A Card of Thanks.

EDITORS COURIER: Permit me, through your columns, to thank, publicly, the 465 voters and taxpayers of De Kalb county, for their kind efforts in petioning the Board of Commissioners to continue me as the Superintendent of the county asylum and work house. This act of these friends of mine, I consider more highly, because of its being unsolicited upon my part, and also regardless of party feeling. This assurance to me, by the people of the county, after having served them for several years in that capacity, is especially gratifying, and for which hope ever to remember them. Mrs. Rummel also, joins me in this card; and we hereby extend a cordial invitation to all our friends, and all taxpayers of the county, to call and see us at all proper hours, at the poor farm, to the end that all may see and know the workings of their own charitable institution.

I am, etc.,

DRY GOODS.

NEW YORK, March 14, 1881.

JOHN PARKER, Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR: Have been very busy since my arrival here the 11th inst., selecting my stock. I find an unusally fine assortment to select from, and will without a doubt bring the nicest and best assorted stock, with more rare bargains in than was ever before brought to Auburn. Mark all goods in stock down from 5 to 15 per cent. so as to correspond with prices which I can give on my new purchases. Do not be under sold. Regards to Joe and Simon.

Yours truly,

ISAAC OCHS.

Legal Notice.

State of Indiana, Supreme Court.

Isaac N. Cool,
Martin L. Duck,
Josiah Houck,
Eugene Cook,
vs.
The Peters Box & Lumber Compa'y } Appeal from Allen Circuit Court.

WHEREAS, it appears by affidavit duly filed that the above named Josiah Houck is a non-resident of the State of Indiana. Now, therefore, said Josiah Houck is hereby notified that on the [illegible] day of November 1880, Isaac N. Cool, Martin L. Duck, Josiah Houck and Eugene Cook filed in the Clerk's office, of said county, a transcript of the record in a certain suit appealed from the Allen Circuit Court, wherein the said Peters Box and Lumber Company was plaintiff and Isaac N. Cool, Martin L. Duck, Josiah Houck and Eugene Cook were defendants and said appellant is also notified to appear at the court rooms in Indianapolis, before said supreme court, and prosecute or decline to prosecute said appeal on the 4th Monday in May next, else the same will be proceeded upon in his absence.

And it is further ordered that the Clerk of this court cause this notice to be published in the Auburn Courier, a weekly newspaper of general circulation printed and published at Auburn, in DeKalb county, Indiana, for three weeks successively.

Witness the Clerk and seal of said court at Indianapolis this 5th day of January, 1881

DAN'L ROYSE, C. S. C.

AN ORDINANCE.

An ordinance for the issuance of bonds of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, State of Indiana, to the amount of six thousand dollars for the purpose of raising the necessary means with which to re-erect and complete the High School Building in said town.

Whereas the Board of School Trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the State of Indiana, have filed with the Board of Trustees of said incorporated town, their statement and report under oath, showing that said Board of School Trustees have not the necessary means with which to re-erect and complete the high school building of said town, recently destroyed by fire, and also showing that the estimated amount required to re-erect and complete said building, (over the amount of means now on hand) will be six thousand dollars ($6,000), therefore,

Section 1. Be it ordained by the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, that there be issued by said board of trustees bonds of said incorporate town to the amount of $6,000, said bonds to bear interest until paid at the rate of six per centum per annum payable annually after May 1, 1881, at the office of the treasurer of said town and that the denomination and maturity of said bonds shall be as follows:

One bond for $500, maturing May 1, 1882,
One bond for $500, maturing May 1, 1883,
One bond for $500 maturing May 1 1884,
One bond of $500 maturing May 1 1885,
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1 1886,
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1 1887,
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1888,
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1 1889.

Said bonds to contain a provision that they may be paid before maturity at the option of said town and each bond shall have coupons attached thereto for the payment of interest thereon. Said bonds and coupons to be signed by the president of the board and the clerk of said town, and the seal of said town be affixed to said bonds.

Section 2. Said bonds shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of said town and by him sold from time to time as the money may be required for the payment of the re-erection and completion of said high school building, but such bonds shall not be sold for a less sum than ninety-four cents on the dollar, of said bonds.

Section 3. Whereas, in the opinion of said board of trustees an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this ordinance, therefore the same shall be in force from and after its passage.

Signed: J. A. Potter, Thomas H. Sprott, Patrick Murphy, Wm. Snyder, T. G. Matheny and E. Ashley, board of trustees of said town.

Northeast of Court House, Auburn, Ind.

—We see by our exchanges, that the small-pox is becoming quite an epidemic at Webster and other towns in that vicinity. A large number of people, both old and young, have fallen victims to this dread disease, and one family after another are being afflicted daily. Although we are not by any means in danger here as yet, but it would be the better way to be cautious and use every endeavor, directly and indirectly to keep the disease from getting a start in our midst. Vaccination is claimed to be the best prevention and a suggestion of this kind would probably not be out of the way.

—The population of the Junction is gaining slowly. C. S. Clark is the happy father of a bouncing boy, and Mr. and Mrs. George Cole claim a little baby of the same persuasion, all within one week. Now, in twenty-one years from this date, they will both have a vote, and if the citizens there work their p's and q's in a scientific manner, the rising generation, who will be expected to manage the public affairs of that "town," can surely secure a post-office.

—We learn that there is a gray horse in a stable near the slaughter-house, that needs some attention through other resources than its present proprietor. The marshal might investigate the case, and if the usual remedies do not have the proper effect, perhaps a few ears of corn and a bundle of hay from the county farm would stay death a little while longer.

—Those who think the railroads do not assist the matter of taxes, will be interested in knowing the amount of taxes paid into the treasury of this county by the two leading roads. The figures, as furnished by Treasur Miller, show that the B. & O. road pays taxes amounting to $4,840.66, and the Lake Shore road pays $6,620.30.

—We learn that Miss Jennie Cowan will teach the summer term of the Junction school. Jennie has a very attractive and pleasant appearance, and we have no doubt but that she will make a good impression upon the little lads and lassies residing at that mile post.

—Here is the way they advertise in Hot Springs, where Tom Mays lingers: "Agent for the Rock river butter, Horse Head tobacco and Studebaker wagons." There is nothing very funny about it, unless it is the butter, or the tobacco, or the wagons.

—We do not wish to take advantage of any local items that have been patented or stereotyped, but it becomes our painful duty this week, to waltz in ahead of the average rural correspondent, and say, "that the sleighing has gone."

—Miss Sadie Hare went to Avilla Monday to accompany Mrs. Rev. H. Johnson, now of Grand Haven, Michigan, to her home in Auburn. Many of Mrs. Johnson's friends will be glad to see her, after so long an absence.

—Rev. H. C. Grossman, traveling missionary for the synod of northern Indiana, will preach in the English Lutheran church next sabbath morning and evening. Communion services in the morning.

—A singing school teacher in the city, has now under training, a juvenile class, and after they have succeeded in going through twelve lessons, they will come before the public in costly costumes and give a concert.

—We are under obligations to Elza Shaffer for informing us that there has been 139 deaths, sixty adults and seventy-nine children, during the past five years within the city limits.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—W. J. Austin, engineer of the Boot-on-Side-Down, will go east for goods this week.

—The B. & O. engine whistles sound louder than heretofore. Something has been did.

—Remember the band concert next Friday (to-morrow) evening. Give the boys a lift.

—A dress-maker never thinks of going to a lawyer when she wishes to commence a suit.

—And now we hear that Marshal Scott will try the race again. He suits us very well.

—J. R. Cosper desires to return his thanks to D. D. Moody for valuable papers received.

—Had we no faults ourselves, we should take less pleasure in observing those of others.

—Barney Bros., of St. Joe, are offering extra inducements in the dry-goods and grocery line.

—The weather has been a great deal like some people we know of—somewhat changeable.

—For a right good natured ticket agent, commend us to L. P. Welling, at the Jackson depot.

—The man who renovates feathers and makes two beds out of one, is constantly looked for.

—Dr. Casebeer, of the firm of Casebeer & Matheny, made a business trip to Chicago last week.

—The young hook and ladder company don't stop for mud. They have a run every night or two.

—We are informed that G. Wallace Dawson will not appear at the band concert to-morrow evening.

—Sam and Charley Pommert have made some attractive changes in their tonsorial rooms this week.

—Our painters are cleaning up the old brushes preparatory to commencing the daubing business.

—A young man who is in love is not necessarily a mathematician, but has nearly always a sigh for her.

—Rumor has it that Tom Mays is afflicted with a skin disease. Tom bathes in that spring water too much.

—Preparations are going on in all parts of the city for the erection of new buildings the coming summer.

—The ditch case, wherein Mr. Mose Brandon, living east of town, was interested, has been thrown out of court.

—The lecture given at the Lutheran church last Friday evening by the Rev. A. D. Rowe, was an interesting affair.

—We have no objections to taking the bitter with the sweet, but would rather try a little maple molasses first.

—The B. & O. railroad has overhauled a number of their engines. That ditching business has become monotonous.

—The measles are still raging at the Junction. All the little ones of Mr. and Mrs. Chris. Baker are afflicted with them.

—Pike & Ford, large boot and shoe dealers of Fort Wayne, made a voluntary assignment to C. E. Wells, of Layfayette, last week.

—The designs and specifications for the new school building are on exhibition. They are said to be a model piece of architecture.

—What a smile these backwoods republicans do have upon their countenances now. They have actually had a legal president two weeks.

—We have completed a large number of blanks this week for the county surveyor, indicating that the ditch business will be lively this summer.

—The mumps have struck the town, and we do sincerely hope that they will not strike some of our boys—their cheek is entirely too great now.

—Os. Allen makes a good deputy sheriff. If he don't bring them the first time, and misses fire the second, he makes things count on the third.

—The whole atmosphere in south Main street, was filled with music Tuesday evening. Sim. Tarney was on the front steps of his residence playing a violin.

—Hon. D. D. Moody came home Saturday and returned to Indianapolis Monday. He reports business at the capital as progressing as well as could be expected.

—We place on our exchange list, the Edgerton Herald, a lively little sheet published by H. A. Granbery. Edgerton is a live town, and deserves a wide awake paper.

—A pleasant party gathered at the residence of D. D. Littlefield Monday evening, and under the supervision of Dan, a happy time was had. They sang, they danced and enjoyed themselves in various other ways.

Some clothes were then furnished the tramp, and he was removed to the poor-house, and business at the school was resumed.

A SONG OF THE CAMP.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

"Give us a song!" the soldiers cried,
The outer trenches guarding,
When the heated guns of the camp allied
Grew weary of bombarding.

The dark Redan in silent scoff
Lay grim and threatening under;
And the tawny mound of the Malakoff
No longer belched its thunder.

There was a pause. A guardsman said:
"We storm the forts to-morrow;
Sing while we may, another day
Will bring enough of sorrow."

They lay along the battery's side,
Below the smoking cannon,
Brave hearts from Severn and from Clyde,
And from the banks of Shannon.

They sang of love, and not of fame;
Forgot was Britain's glory:
Each heart recalled a different name,
But all sang, "Annie Laurie."

Voice after voice caught up the song
Until its tender passion
Rose like an anthem, rich and strong—
Their battle-eve confession.

Dear girl, her name he dared not speak,
But, as the song grew louder,
Something upon the soldier's cheek
Washed off the stains of powder.

Beyond the darkening ocean burned
The bloody sunset's embers,
While the Crimean valleys learned
How English love remembers.

And once again a fire of hell
Rained on the Russianquarters,
With stream of shot and burst of shell,
And bellowing of the mortars!

And Irish Nora's eyes are dim
For a singer dumb and gory;
And English Mary mourns for him
Who sang of "Annie Laurie."

Sleep, soldiers! still in honored rest
Your truth and valor wearing;
The bravest are the tenderest—
The loving are the daring.

THE TEAMSTER'S ESCAPE.

When the ill-starred Condor mine was first opened in 1869, Nat Reines, for many years a teamster in that part of Arizona, undertook to team the engine-boiler, battery "stamps," and other heavy milling machinery, together with supplies, from a place called Great Bend on the Gila river.

Reines was then a well-known character along the overland stage-route; and the writer, at that time, was in his employ. In fact, I was his nephew.

This will better account for my emigrating to such a country. For anybody who recollects what the population of Arizona was twelve years ago will think that a man ought perhaps to satisfactorily explain how he came to be there.

The mine above mentioned was situated in the range north of the Gila, from forty to fifty miles above the point where we took the machinery from the transportation company.

Uncle Nat was to have $4,000 in gold for hauling up the outfit, an offer liberal, certainly, and such as could only be made in Arizona. But of course he had to run his own risks and take his chances of the Apaches getting his scalp, as indeed we all did in those days.

No one was safe outside the forts, or could even guess with any certainty where the savages would strike their next blow. They were out continually, scouring the whole territory, and lived on plunder.

We had three six-mule teams. It was supposed that to complete the contract it would take four round trips—about a month's work altogether.

There were, beside myself, two other teamsters, "Old Rube Floods," as we called him, and a Mexican nicknamed "Lonze," with two spare hands, brothers, from Missouri, named Stroudsly.

We drivers rode or walked as the case demanded, and had each, in addition to his knife and cart-whip, a Henry rifle, which we were expected to be ready to use at a moment's notice.

Uncle Nat had associated with him then a Texan, one Dan Lowell, as a partner. They two rode at the head of the teams, with their rifles and revolvers; and theirs were the only horses in the train.

No one who has not been through the Southwest can begin to imagine just what a strange, half-finished-looking country Arizona is—at least some parts of it.

The hills and mountains have a singularly rugged, dark aspect. Then there come stretches of coarse blue gravel, where there isn't so much as a weed growing, for miles and miles. When there is grass, it is curious, coarse, outlandish stuff.

The woods are as peculiar as the grass; thorn thickets, or brown jungles of grease-wood and meskit. These latter grow mostly along the river-bottoms, or in the arroyas, or gullies, of brooks.

Then, to crown all, come the great clumsy cactuses, with huge seamed trunks and broad, thick limbs, or leaves, covered with thorns—growing out of dry gravel-hills and among ledges and rocks where no other living thing could draw moisture sufficient to live.

Our route up from the Gila lay much of it through a desert of this sort. It took us three days to make the trip up to the mine, and two back.

On our first trip we hauled the boiler. We had fourteen mules, heavy ones, too, to draw it, and two spare spans for hard places. It was a ponderous load, but we got it safely through. Then came the stamps, battery and other gear.

The load for the third trip was supplies of all sorts—beef, flour, corn, mining tools, powder, etc. There were also eight or ten kegs of powder and three heavy boxes, which, I remember, were quite a puzzle to us, as to what was in them. They were branded "Nobel's Blasting Oil;" and when handled and jolted, there sifted out of the cracks of the boxes a fine, white powder, like flour.

Nobel's blasting oil is nothing more nor less than nitro-glycerine. That was the name it was used under for a time after its discovery, or rather its practical application to blasting, by Alfred Nobel, in 1863.

Dynamite—which is nitro-glycerine put in a dry form by mixing it with silicious earth—was not devised till six or seven years later.

The law at one time required that, for transportation, nitro-glycerine should be put up in tin cans, and these packed in plaster of paris in cases or boxes.

Under ordinary circumstances, however, there is little danger of accidental explosions from nitro-glycerine, either from light shocks or from fire. To explode charges of nitro-glycerine, it is necessary to inclose within them considerable charges of powder fired by a common safety-fuse, or else a powerful detonating cap, fired also by a fuse. Electricity can be employed for this purpose. Nitro-glycerine may be set on fire with a match, or a lighted shaving, and will burn slowly without exploding.

On the second day out, upon this third trip, we were attacked by the Apaches. A band of them, under a chief well-known in that part of the Territory, as "Old Coochies," waylaid us at one of the arroyas, or gullies.

Thirty or forty of them were hidden in the ravine; and as we came up to cross it, they swarmed out both above us and below, yelling and shooting their arrows and guns. No doubt they had been dogging our trail for a day or two.

Uncle Nat and Powell were ahead and had just ridden up to the arroya and stopped. The first we teamsters knew of the presence of the savages was from a chorus of their schreeches, followed instantly by half-a-dozen rifle-shots.

Seeing their numbers, our two leaders wheeled about, after firing, and galloped back to us, Uncle Nat shouting:

"Down off them wagons with yer guns and beat 'em off!"

But the Apaches were upon us before we could even look to our carbines. They charged on us at once. Shots cracked sharp and hot, but there was little stopping for aim.

The it was hand-to-hand with them. Uncle Nat and Powell got out of it—their horses took them off. The two Strondsly boys, on the hind team, cut loose each a mule and tried to escape, but were both run down and shot.

Old Rube was killed on the seat of the wagon, before he dropped his reins. As for myself, I jumped down and fired one shot, then clubbed my gun. But a lance-thrust from one of the mounted Apaches went through my clothes and tore through the skin along my ribs, with such force that it poked me headlong, partly beneath the wagon.

Three or four others drove their lances at me as I lay there, and an arrow struck into the ground close beside my cheek. The mules were jumping, too, and I barely escaped the heavy wheels.

The instant the wagon moved from over me, I was seized by two or three of the yelling savages at once. That my last hour had come I had no doubt. But instead of dispatching me, they tied my hands behind my back and let me get up—saving me for torture, it may be, or possibly for ransom.

The chief, a stalwart, hideous-faced old rascal, seemed to give some order, when three others came dragging the Mexican, Lonze, out where I stood. He was severely wounded; one arm hung helpless, and an arrow was sticking in one of his legs. An Apache caught hold of it and jerked it out. Oh, how the poor fellow screamed! They tied us two together with about four feet of rope slack betwixt us.

The savages seemed jubilant over their prize, particularly the powder; and no doubt all the supplies were very acceptable to them.

They whooped and danced and squalled extravagantly; and, as soon as the party came back from pursuing after Powell and Uncle Nat, the whole band set off toward the mountains, in the northeast, driving the three wagons along with them.

The Mexican and I had to plod behind, tied together. Poor Lonze was in sorry plight, and groaned at almost every step. As for myself, I was not much hurt; but I thought our chances looked poor indeed.

In this way we went on for an hour or two; but about an hour before sundown the band halted, and, after some consultation, the chief with all but eight of the party set off on another expedition.

These eight then continued on with the wagons and with us in charge. We presumed they were going to some one of their villages; and what sort of reception there was in store for us when we reached it was not hard to guess.

Night fell. By this time we had entered among cliffs and mountains. Still we kept on, hour after hour, till it must have been past midnight. I concluded we were to travel all night, but at length our captors halted the teams and turned the mules loose.

They then tied me fast with my back to the hind wheel of one of the wagons—so that I stood back to the outer side of the wheel. Lonze they served in a similar way at the forward wagon. Without kindling a fire or preparing food, the Indians lay down near by and seemed to go to sleep.

It was not a pleasant situation, standing there, tied in that way. The night was dark, but I could see that we were in a deep gorge, with high crags and rocks on both sides. Lonze was groaning and saying his Catholic prayers.

On account of his broken arm, the savages had not tied him as they had me. Later on, he slipped his sound arm out, and, untying himself, crept along where I was. But he was so sick and faint-hearted that I could not persuade him to unbind me. He seemed not to dare to; and he did not understand what I said in English very well.

While I was whispering to him, ordering him in no gentle tones to cut my rope, one of the Indians started up. On that, Lonze slunk back to his wheel, and would not again stir from it. I was so angry with this poor-spirited fellow that could almost have seen him tortured with a relish.

Not long after it began to get light, and the Indians, waking up, built a fire of brushwood, and for some time sat warming themselves by it; for the morning air was very chilly. Then toward sunrise they knocked open one of the beef barrels, and, getting out some of the salt junk, set it roasting on a stake stuck slantwise over their fire.

While this was in progress two or three of them were overhauling the contents of the farthest wagon, while the rest sat round the fire. From where I stood I could see what they were about very well, though the distance back to their fire was fifty or sixty yards.

After a while I saw one of them with his hatchet break open one of the blasting-oil boxes. It was full of what looked to be flour or plaster; but packed in it were bright tin cans as large as a quart measure.

The Indian looked at them curiously; then he cut one open with his ax and tasted the contents. He did not seem to know what to make of the stuff, and carried it to the others.

Under any other circumstances I should have laughed to see them taste it, and spit and jabber about it. They cut open several cans, tasted the oil, and threw them down. Then another took out of the box what looked, from where I was, like a bundle of rats' tails—probably fuses.

I saw one of them chew the end of one of these, then spit it out. Meantime, another had taken out of the box a handful of smaller cans, not more than an inch or two in diameter, but eight or nine inches long, each with one of those rat's tails stuck in the end.

I did not myself then know what they were, or I should have watched the proceedings with very different feelings. The savages looked at these, held them up before each other by their tails; then they began to laugh, and, from laughing, they began to throw them at each other, and that led to a regular frolic. They ran and dodged, round the wagon and round the fire, pelting each other with those cans.

Just then, right in the midst of the game, there came the awfullest explosion I ever heard. 'Twas tremendous! It blew everything flat all around. Even out where I was the force was so great that it blew the wagon fifteen or twenty feet—landed it on one side, with the wheel I was tied to up in the air. It seemed to give the whole thing a hoist, bodily, off the ground.

For a moment or two I was stunned. I did not know anything. When I came to consciousness I saw several rocks were tumbling down the side of the ravine.

Recovering my wits a little, I managed to squirm round, and looked out toward the fire. There was a prodigious dust and smoke. Just then I saw one of the Indians jump from the ground, and run down the ravine, as if a wild animal was after him, with both hands holding on to the top of his head.

Then I began calling to Lonze, and, after some minutes, I got him to come and cut me loose from my wheel.

We looked about. It was hard telling how many of the Indians were killed, for some of them were blown all to pieces. I think they were all killed, except the one I saw run off.

Still, we did not stop long to investigate the matter. I recollect seeing a hole blown in the earth where their fire had been, which looked to be six or seven feet deep. I searched for a minute, hoping to find a gun, but everything seemed to have been literally blown to bits.

Several of the mules had been feeding at no great distance; but now they had all taken to their heels, frightened by the explosion.

We started down the canon, keeping a sharp lookout for the Apache who had run away, but saw nothing of him.

Following back along our last night's trail for six or eight miles, I sighted the peak back of the Condor mine, off to the southwest, and made for it, reaching the works early in the afternoon. Lonze I had been obliged to leave behind me at a spring we came to during the forenoon.

They sent out from the mine for him at nightfall, and he was brought in toward morning, in bad plight, but he got well in the course of a month. It takes a great deal to really kill one of those Mexican "greasers." Nothing was ever recovered from the captured wagons.—Youth's Companion.

Military Training.

An exchange proposes a new idea in the education of men for the military, by which it contends we shall secure greater geniuses for the profession and do away with favoritism. It is to let those who wish to fit themselves for the military profession get their education as young men do for other professions. A Government school for military officers is no more necessary than for doctors, lawyers, engineers, bankers, editors, or preachers. Let Government fix its standard of educational qualifications for entering the army, and fix it as high as it shall please; the people's schools will turn out men who can pass it. Then its institute can be turned into a practical training camp for all arms. This will bring in the natural law of the survival of the fittest. Instead of turning in dunces and others, promiscuously, by political favor, to be turned out officers, with no regard to natural qualifications, only those will demand admission who are directed to the military profession by the bent of natural genius, aptitude, and ambition. Then there may be a chance to get into the military profession great geniuses, such as those which arise in other walks of life. Then we shall have the operation of natural selection, instead of the preservation of the unfit, and the general level of dull mediocrity. This would go far to bridge over that gulf which the present system of favoritism creates between the regular army officers and the volunteers who have to do the fighting. The small expectations to which our army system has reduced the public mind, and the great numbers which our officers require to do little, admonish the nation that its present military school is not to be relied upon for the public defense.

Japanese Ornaments.

This city is being Japanized. In fact, this may be called the Yokohama era. Four years ago there were only three stores in New York that kept Japanese goods, and even they were rather obscure and out of the way. To-day there are not less than seventy-five such merchants. Almost every street below Fourteenth has one or more. They have also invaded the sidewalk, where they flourish their fantastic wares in the face of the passer-by; and there are even some itinerants who bob into your office every day, holding up some lacquered trifle and exclaiming "On'y ten cents!" I think the people of this city bought half a million Japanese ornaments last year. Indeed, so great is the demand for Japanese goods that three factories are running day and night, and one is in Rhode Island.—New York Letter.

An Egg Bath.

A Paris plumber was repairing the tiles of a house, when, his foot having slipped, he fell off the roof into the street below. Just then a market gardener's cart happened to pass by the house, laden with baskets full of eggs, and osier-cages containing live poultry, and the man, falling into the midst of this load, crushed two cages, killed about a dozen fowls, and finally was ingulfed in an enormous basket of eggs. When withdrawn from his liquid tomb the plumber looked like an omelette, but, excepting a few slight bruises, he was safe and sound.

A "VITAL QUESTION."

Concerning Restrictions Upon the Suffrage.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The latest issue of Harper's Weekly, which certainly represents a large fraction of the Republican party, says that "except for one vital question, and for the fact that the civil service is filled mainly by Republicans, the administration of Gen. Garfield, like that of John Quincy Adams, would probably see a reconstruction of parties." This statement from a Republican stand-point is a complete admission that but two things hold the Republican party together. One is the spoils; the other is that "vital question." It is a great Republican advocate that makes this admission. Certainly there is no indication on the Democratic side of Democratic dissolution, of the disbandment of the Democratic party, of the abandonment of an organization old as the century. A high Republican authority, on the contrary, in speaking of the future, admits that the Republican organization rests only upon two things—on the fact that "the civil service is filled mainly with Republicans," and a certain "vital question."

What is that "vital question?" In the words of the authority we quote, it is the "forcible suppression of the right of suffrage in a large part of the country." The context indicates that "the large part of the country" to which the "Journal of Civilization" alludes is the southern portion of the country. But suffrage, as we have recently taken occasion to say, is denied and abridged, or suppressed, in a portion of the country far larger than the South, not merely by individuals whose random efforts are of little consequence, but by entire States, by the fundamental laws of great commonwealths. We suggest that the cultured editor of Harper's Weekly direct his indignation to the limitations upon suffrage in his own State; in the State of Rhode Island, where, in Brown University, he received his early education; in Massachusetts, where he lingered among the delights of the Brook Farm community, and in the western portion of which State he still makes his summer home; in Vermont, the home of Senator Edmunds, whom he admires; and in various Northern and Republican States whose directions touching suffrage have evidently escaped his notice. If this question touching the hindrances upon suffrage is so "vital," the constitutions and the laws of nearly every Republican State must be remodeled, for they all deny, or abridge, to citizens of the State and of the United States the right to vote. They do this not by scattering inconsequential individual interference, but by the solemn constitution and statutes of the State, behind which stand the jail and the penitentiary. The editor of Harper's Weekly graduated from a Rhode Island college. The State in which he received his early impulses denies to citizens of the State and of the United States the right to vote, unless they own a certain amount of real estate. This disfranchises a large portion of the citizens of the State otherwise qualified to vote. Massachusetts, the ideal State of this distinguished editor, disfranchises, it is alleged, more than 100,000 citizens of the State and of the United States who would be qualified to vote, and be permitted to vote under the laws of most of the Southern States. Massachusetts says that no man shall vote within her borders who has not some education. How would this qualification affect the negroes of the South? Massachusetts says that the citizen entitled to vote within her limits must be able to read the constitution of the United States. About nine-tenths of the Republican voters of the South scarcely know the difference between the constitution of the United States and a Virginia fence. The editor of Harper's Weekly is not much of a believer in the Christian religion; but some of his ideal Republican States exact a religious qualification for suffrage or office-holding.

In these allusions to the inhibitions placed upon suffrage in the States which are in political accord with this Republican critic, we say nothing of the notorious, scandalous and almost universal intimidation which banks, corporations, manufacturers and employers have outrageously applied therein to free suffrage. This intimidation is a more "vital question" to the welfare of the republic than anything in relation to negro suffrage in the South. We have only spoken of the suppression of suffrage by the Republican States, with courts and jails and penitentiaries at their command to emphasize their edicts of suppression of suffrage. We repeat the suggestion that the States of the South in their constitutions and laws copy the statutes and constitutions of these New England and Republican States concerning suffrage. Should they do this we will watch the result with interest. How many negroes of the South could vote under the laws of Massachusetts or Rhode Island or Vermont or Connecticut? To compel every negro in the South to own real estate, to pay a poll tax, to be able to read the constitution of the United States, to be able to write legibly—the religious qualifications would be no incumbrance, for the negro has plenty of religion—and to do other things that these enlightened States do, would leave how many of the citizen negroes of the South legal voters?

"Ures Troolie."

A widely varying importance is attached to the style of signing the name to a letter. This not infrequently leads to considerable misapprehension. There are people who, after very long acquaintance, and having warm regard for each other, never get beyond "Yours truly," or, at most, "Truly yours," which is, we believe, generally accepted, we know not why, as just one shade warmer. On the other hand there are those who in a few weeks reach "Ever yours," and even "Ever affectionately yours." "Where," was once bitterly asked, "are all the 'ever affectionately yours' of ten years ago?" Has not every one who has reached middle life a number of letters hidden away in some bureau, with a signature as warm as this from some one to whom he would now neither give nor get aught warmer than a "Faithfully yours," if as much. It not seldom happens that people who have a warm manner give a cold signature, and vice versa. The great Duke of Wellington was a case in point. The most un-Irish of Irishmen, there was a decided absence of genial cordiality about him; yet his letters are full of "Ever affectionately yours." As we get on in life there appears a decided tendency to curb any affectionate exuberance in signature. Very few of us—men, at least—sign "affectionately" to any male acquaintance made after we reach 23. It is just as well to be a little careful as to this signature, remembering that many do attach considerable importance to it, and see in it an emphatic indication of the measure of regard intended.

THE DEMOCRATIC OUTLOOK.

Pronounced Utterances of Mr. Horatio Seymour.

[From the Syracuse Courier.]

Gov. Seymour, who has been ill for some time, was found at his home in Utica. He said: "I have been shut up in my house during the past four months by ill-health. I have seen but few with whom I could talk about public affairs, but it seems to me that the policy of the Democratic party is a plain one. It outnumbers the Republican organization, as is shown by the returns, although the latter party had the assistance of nearly 100,000 officeholders beside the support of large numbers who vote for its nominees for the purpose of promoting a scheme in which they are interested. Both Mr. Hayes and Mr. Garfield not only received less than a majority of the votes of the American people, but they were actually beaten as regards the number of their supporters by the Democratic candidates. The controversies in the Republican party are more widespread and deeper than those of the Democratic party. Nothing more is needed for the success of the Democratic party than a steady and firm adhesion to its principles. It is true that these have been too frequently lost sight of, but many schemes will be developed by the Republicans under the teachings of Mr. Garfield that power gravitates more and more into the hands of the General Government, and for which, Mr. Garfield rejoices. His speeches on this subject are invitations to all manner of schemes to besiege the capital. This will arouse the public mind to the necessity of returning to a constitutional policy. While there are dissensions in both parties, the long-continued power of the Republicans has endangered controversies throughout the mass of their party, while the troubles in the Democratic ranks are mainly local and more easily cured."

"What do you think of the propriety of nominating a business man for President next time, a man who has the confidence of the business interests of the country?"

"We have failed to elect politicians and soldiers. What the Democratic party wants is a man who, by his character and business relations, can draw votes from the Republican party and poll the Democratic vote. We have such men in our party, and we must nominate such a man for our candidate for President in 1884. In doing so we can succeed. There must be a reunion of the party, not at the sacrifice of any Democrat or Democratic organization. We need them all, and I hope to see the party united, which would bring success. The idea is a good one, although it would be idle to speculate at present with regard to the next nomination for the Presidency. No one can foresee the events of four years. Popular strength is a thing so transitory in its nature, and depends so much upon events and accidents at the time of election, that theories with regard to men are more apt to mislead than lead to correct conclusions."

"Would it not be well to seek the co-operation of and encourage the young men of the country who are coming of age and will cast their first vote in 1884?"

"By all means; yet the fate of the Democratic party depends upon the addition to its members of the young, the unselfish and the active. Old men and their quarrels are the great causes of the destruction of political organization. As I am one of them, I have a right to speak freely. In the natural course of events a large share of those who now disturb the Democratic party by their quarrels will have passed away, and most of the others will be rendered inactive by old age and physical infirmities. Age and experience have taught me to admire the unselfish and enthusiastic action of young men. I believe that the Democratic party must be restored to power through their efforts."

"What do you think of Grant's engineering for the nomination for President in 1884 by the aid of the Democratic party?"

"I have no idea that his nomination could be brought about by such agency. I have none but kind feelings for Grant, but his nomination by the co-operation of the Democratic party is so entirely out of the question that I do not believe that he can entertain such a thought. Both Gen. Grant and the Democratic party would be incalculably injured by such an unnatural alliance."

A WESTERN newspaper publishes the following: "Wanted a correspondent I am 25 years old have one hundred and sixty 160 ackars of Kansas land worth 1500 dolars tolaberl fair looking comin chool educatoon eny lady fairly educated will oblige me by righting I will send my PhotograPh by return male. FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

THE long Arctic night is of 145 days' duration. What a gloomy idea!

THE last census in this country gave as relative numbers 968 women to every 1,000 men.

A HEALTHY man requires about a pint of air at a breath. He breathes about 1,000 times an hour and requires about fifty-seven hogsheads of air every twenty-four hours.

ONE of the modes of punishment in China is to compel a criminal to die of sleeplessness, by keeping him awake a week, night and day. Ten days is sure to prove fatal and is terrible agony for the victim.

THE stages and theaters of the Greeks and Romans were so immense that the actors, to be heard, were obliged to have recourse to metallic masks, contrived with great mouths, to augment the natural sound of the voice.

IF a train of cars should start to-day and travel toward the sun at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and twenty-four hours a day, and 365 days in a year, it would take more than 170 years to reach the sun. And the sun is our next-door neighbor; and our solar system is a little flake of light on the borders of infinity.

IN the manufacture of attar of roses at Gharapore, Hindoostan, the petals of the flowers are put into clay stills, with twice their weight of water, and the produce exposed to the fresh air for a night in open vessels. The attar is skimmed from the exposed pans, and sells at £10 the rupee weight, to make which 20,000 roses are required. It is frequently adulterated with sandal-wood oil.

IN the crypt of the Capucin Church, Vienna, are buried the dead of the house of Hapsburg. There are more than eighty sarcophagi, among them those of the Emperor Mathias Corvinus, who died two years before the discovery of America; Maximilian, Emperor of Mexico; Napoleon II., and Joseph I., whose coffin is made of solid silver. Here also are the remains of Francis I., whose wife, the heroic Maria Theresa, is said to have visited his tomb daily for thirteen years, until she died and was laid beside him. As a precaution against premature resurrection, the hearts and intestines of the royal corpses are removed and buried far away from the Capucin Church.

THE Mound Builders were a race of people very different in their habits and modes of life from the Indians who occupied all the country at the time of the advent of the whites. They are now regarded as a distinct and extinct race. Of their history very little is known, except what can be gathered from the mounds and walls which they built; most of these are made of earth or gravel. They are usually found overgrown by living and decaying trees, from which we have the proof that they have been abandoned at least 1,000 years. We have proof also that the Mound Builders worked the copper mines of Lake Superior, lead mines near Lexington, Ky., and oil wells in Canada and Pennsylvania. The remains of the Mound Builders are spread over a vast extent of country. They are found in the sources of the Allegheny, in the western parts of the State of New York, and in nearly all of the Western States, including Michigan and Iowa. They line the shores of the Gulf of Mexico from Texas to Florida, whence they extend through Alabama and Georgia into South Carolina. From all the facts known little more can be said than this: That the valley of the Mississippi and Atlantic coast were once densely populated by a sedentary, agricultural and partially civilized race, quite different from the modern Indians, though possibly the progenitors of some of the Indian tribes that after many centuries of occupation; they disappeared from our country at least 1,000, perhaps many thousands, of years before the advent of the Europeans.

An Unbuilded Monument.

Poor Artemus Ward! In our day there has been no more delightful humorist. When he died, the press of England and America was filled with tributes to his memory. In New York a meeting of newspaper folk was held, at which it was resolved that his memory should really and truly be perpetuated. The manner in which this was done is amusingly told in the following, from a Boston friend:

"A few summers since I passed a week's vacation at Waterford, Me., and during my visit went to the village graveyard to view the final resting-place of Artemus Ward. With some trouble I found the grave, there being nothing about the plain white slab to distinguish it from many similar ones around. While thinking and wondering that no monument had ever been erected to the humorist, a countryman approached, to whom I said, 'My friend, can you tell me why it is that Artemus never has had a monument erected to his memory?' 'Well, stranger, I guess I kin,' was the reply. 'You see, arter Artemus died, three or four hundred printer fellers down in New York city got together and passed some beautiful resolutions, saying that Artemus should have a monument, and they would pay for it then and there; and then they took up a collection, which amounted to $20.60, so I'm told; and since then this town hain't seen either the monument or the money; but, stranger, we did get a copy of the resolutions."—Harper's Magazine.

A Hint for the Young.

Sidney Smith, in one of the ablest of his essays, says:

"I know of no principle which it is of more importance to fix in the habits of young people than that of the most determined resistance to the encroachments of ridicule. Give not up to the world, nor to the ridicule with which the world enforces its dominion over every trifling question of manner and appearance. Learn from the earliest days to insure your principles against the perils of ridicule. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a stand for any valuable point of morals, do it however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear; do it, not for insolence, but seriously and grandly, as a man who wears a soul of his own in his bosom, and does not wait till it shall be breathed into him by the breath of fashion. Let men call you mean if you know you are just; hypocritical, if you are honestly religious; pusillanimous, if you know you are firm. Resistance soon converts unprincipled wit into sincere respect; and no aftertime can tear from you those feelings which every man carries within him who has made a noble and successful execution in a virtuous cause.

The Inventor of Steamboats.

The most interesting historical fact connected with Bardstown, Ky., is that it was the last residence and burial place of John Fitch, the inventor of steamboats. This wonderful genius was born in Connecticut in 1743, and died here in 1798. He was a clockmaker, silver and gunsmith, and was a Lieutenant in the Revolutionary war. He made himself very useful in repairing the guns of the soldiers. For some real or supposed slight he left the service, emigrated to the wilds of Kentucky in 1778, and entered 1,000 acres of land in this county. While sitting one day on the bank of the Ohio river, in 1780, he was inspired with the idea of propelling boats by steam, and immediately set to work to accomplish it. He made sketches, drafts, models and experiments, and in 1785 memorialized Congress in reference to his steamboat. He petitioned the Legislatures of a half a dozen of the States for the exclusive privilege of navigating their waters by fire and steam. In 1787–'9 he built several boats, and succeeded in making trips between Philadelphia and Burlington, N. J., at a speed of seven miles per hour. His success was only temporary. His machinery was too light and often broken, and finally the bursting of a boiler on one of his trips compelled him to abandon his scheme. In 1790 he petitioned Congress to grant him a patent for his invention. He sought aid in vain from England, France and Spain. Discouraged and poverty-stricken, he returned to his Kentucky farm, and gave himself up to habitual intoxication. He deposited in the Philadelphia Library large volumes of manuscript, sealed up, with directions that they should not be opened for thirty years. When opened they were found to contain a full history of his trials, embarrassments and disappointments. He confidently predicted the final success of his plan. He said:

"The day will come when some more powerful man will get fame and fortune from my invention. But nobody will believe that poor John Fitch can do anything worthy of attention."

This prediction was verified before the thirty years expired. In 1813, when Robert Fulton brought suit in New York to enforce his claim as the inventor of steam navigation, he was defeated by the production in court of one of John Fitch's pamphlets. A committee of the Legislature of New York, after a thorough investigation, decided that the boats built by Livingston and Fulton were in substance the invention of John Fitch. Judge Rowan, of Kentucky, Fitch's executor, says:

"I was convinced from his statements, explanations and papers, that Fitch was the inventor of steamboats."

The last days of poor Fitch were sad enough. When his farm was reduced to 300 acres, he contracted with a tavern-keeper to give him one-half of his farm to board him while he lived and furnish him with a pint of whisky per day. He afterward increased the land grant on condition that he should have a double supply of liquor. At the age of 55, defeated in his plans, disappointed and demoralized by drink, the poor fellow died, "unwept, unhonored and unsung." He left no family. His ashes repose in the old graveyard at Bardstown. No stone marks the spot, but many years ago, when the precise locality was known, a survey was made and recorded in the the County Clerk's office, by which the exact spot was ascertained. Within the past few years some correspondence has been had with reference to the removal of his dust and the erection of a suitable memorial.—Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

A German Wife.

A writer who has had the misfortune to witness the monotonous life of some unappreciated, meek German wife, explodes in the following condemnatory style: "Some writer says that a German realizes his idea of what a wife should be. So much for him! I pity the wife he choses if she be an American girl. The German wife is virtuous, domestic—how utterly and wearisomely domestic!—but is she happy? May a wife not be both virtuous and happy? A German wife is literally and wholly the upper servant of the household, and is so regarded by her husband, for whom she toils faithfully, ironing his shirts, cooking his dinner, meekly bringing her accounts to him, ready to be rebuked if her household expenditure exceeds in the slightest the maximum he considers proper; and this she does without commendation or reward—even the reward of his companionship. What is the use of her having been well educated, if her husband cares nothing for her society, and she has no leisure from household duties for reading? It is true that she is perfectly contented with her life, and despise the notion of a better one—but oysters, I suppose, are contented with their fate. The attitude of the Germans toward women measures their civilization, and by that standard they are half barbarians."

Blocked In.

The train had run into a snow-drift, and the engine was butting its head in vain against a six-foot bank.

"For once the iron horse appears to be beaten," remarked a fat woman near the center of the car.

"You shouldn't call it an iron horse," mildly reproved a solemn-faced man across the aisle.

"Why not?" asked the fat woman in some surprise.

"Because it's block tin," softly murmured the solemn-faced man, as he gazed out the window and across the wintry waste with a far-away look in his eye.

The fat woman gasped, while the conductor was astonished to such a degree that he went out of the car without slamming the door.—Rockland (Me.) Courier.

JUST why a man should be ashamed to own that he is injured by a fall we don't see, but ninety-nine men out of a hundred on getting up from a slippery spot, will lie like butchers, and say: "Not hurt at all," when in truth they are bruised and skun in over twenty places.—Boston Post.

THE child of a very fashionable family was sick, and the colored servant was sent to the drug store with a prescription. "If the child can not keep the first powder on its stomach, you must give it another one," remarked the clerk as he pasted on the label. "You don't reckon we would give him the same powder ober again, does yer? We ain't no poor folks, we ain't."—Medical Journal.

HERE is a good illustration of the motives by which most men are moved: A Sunday school teacher said: "Now, children, if a boy should strike you on your way to school, it would be your duty to forgive him, wouldn't it?" "Yes, ma'am," from the whole class. "And you would really forgive him, wouldn't you?" One little fellow answered with calm deliberation, "Yes, ma'am; I think I would, 'specially if he was bigger than I am."

Two Days' Work.

[From the Muscatine Journal.]

Two days' moderate application of the means in question enabled Mr. Otto Eichhorn, 1413 N. Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo., to thus write us: I had been a sufferer for the past six weeks with severe pains in the shoulder and spine so that I was unable to do any work. Advised by a friend I used St. Jacobs Oil. With the second application relief was had and a cure effected in two days.

A Cool Proposition.

There are men who speak of their losses, and, when called upon to detail them, can only say that they did not make this or that investment whereby they would have gained large sums. An analogous mode of reasoning would seem in order as regards profits. At least, so thought the brilliant but penniless young "society man" who asked a Wall street magnate to give him his daughter's hand.

"But, my dear fellow, you haven't a cent in the world!" cried the rich man.

"What does that matter?" asked the leader of Germans. "You say that her dot is $500,000. I will take her with half that sum cash down. We shall come out $250,000 apiece ahead—don't you see?"—Harper's Weekly.

[From the Peoria National Democrat.]

THE most eminent physicians of the day highly recommend St. Jacobs Oil as a cure for rheumatism. It can be purchased at any drug house, and the price is insignificant, when you take into consideration the wonderful cures it will produce.

THE conflict of races and languages in the Austrian empire is triangular, being shared with equal intensity by Germans, Hungarians and Bohemians. In Hungary it cost a bitter struggle to obtain a license for a theater where performances may be conducted in German, while in Bohemia village authorities refuse to recognize the Teutonic tongue in official communications. Still, the German is steadily encroaching upon its rivals.

Maine News.

Hop Bitters, which are advertised in our columns, are a sure cure for ague, biliousness and kidney complaints. Those who use them say they cannot be too highly recommended. Those afflicted should give them a fair trial, and will become thereby enthusiastic in the praise of their curative qualities.—Portland Argus.

"CABBY, drive me to No. 12 ——," "All right, sir, I knows yer." "How do you know me?" "You're the gent what halways gives me sixpence hextra."

Shrewdness and Ability.

Hop Bitters, so freely advertised in all the papers, secular and religious, are having a large sale, and are supplanting all other medicines. There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of these Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability in compounding a Bitters whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation.—Examiner and Chronicle.

RECIPE for a modern composition: Begin in march time, so softly that it cannot be heard. A few taps on the bass drum will do. Turn on the full orchestra gradually—bang! whack! bang! Shut off by degrees—p, pp, ppp, pppp—until nothing is heard but the leader shaking his stick. Let him shake his stick in silence for some time after the piece is ended. When he stops the public will applaud.

The Big Words of Science.

Monstrosities of diction are not confined to chemical science, but are to be found in physics as well as metaphysics. We recently gave some samples of the extraordinary and absurd length to which the names of certain organic salts had grown, and we may now add the following choice specimen of imaginary (from a recently published paper by Sir William Thompson) to illustrate the grand style of modern natural philosophy. "The stream lines," says the distinguished Glasgow physicist, "are as represented in the diagram, in which the region of translational velocity greater than wave propagational velocity is separated from the region of translational velocity less than wave propagational velocity by a cat's eye border pattern of elliptic whirls." The curious mixture of homely simile and abstract terminology in this passage is highly ludicrous. Its obscurity is, however, surpassed by Mr. Herbert Spencer's famous "Formula of Evolution," which runs: "Evolution is a change from an indefinite, incoherent, homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity, through continuous differentiations and integrations," which written in plain English by Mr. Kirkman, the mathematician, means: "Evolution is a change from a nohowish, untalkaboutable all-likeness to a somehowish, and in-general-talkaboutable not-all-likeness, by continuous something-elsefications and stick-togetherations." As a clever travesty on the above cacophonous, mystifications of Mr. Herbert Spencer, which, like the language of diplomacy, conceals the meaning it ought to express, we have Mr. Kirkman's "Formula of Universal Change," which is: "Change is a perichoretical synechy of pamparalagmatic and porroteroporeumatical differentiations and integrations." After such pedantry as this, the clown in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, who "did impeticos thy gratility," is absolutely nowhere.—London Globe.

Secret.
The fact is well understood that the MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT is by far the best external known for man or beast. The reason why becomes an "open secret" when we explain that "Mustang" penetrates skin, flesh and muscle to the very bone, removing all disease and soreness. No other liniment does this, hence none other is so largely used or does such worlds of good.

No Wife Ever Could.

[Chicago Tribune.]

An application for divorce, on the ground of cruelty. The first witness was Mrs. Rollingstone.

"What is your name, madam?" asked her lawyer.

"Beatrice Rollingstone."

"Maiden name?"

"Bonest."

"Has your husband treated you cruelly?"

"Yes, sir."

"In what respect?"

"He said I could not make mince pies like his mother."

"What resemblance does the defendant's mother bear to a mince pie?" inquired the court.

"Oh, I meant that he said I couldn't make as good pies as his mother could."

"Let the divorce be granted," said the judge.

The New Bible—Quick Work.

The new version of the New Testament, which has been so many years in course of translation, and which is unquestionably the most important literary enterprise this century has seen, is being waited for with curiosity and anxiety by hundreds of thousands. It is not generally known that a first edition of 5000,000 copies has already been manufactured in England, and 100,000 copies are said to be already in New York City, not one of them permitted to be sold. They are awaiting a telegram from the authorities in England authorizing their issue. The first copies can only be had at the extravagant price of $10 per copy. The Literary Revolution proposes fully to meet the demands which its army of friends are making upon it by doing probably the quickest work in book-making which has ever been accomplished. Arrangements have been fully made to put the entire book into type inside of 24 hours from the time a printed copy of the Enlish edition can be procured, and within three days at least 10,000 copies will be bound ready for delivery to waiting purchasers, and at least 5,000 copies will be manufactured every day thereafter, until the demand is met. It will be printed in large, beautiful type, neatly and strongly bound in cloth, in a volume of about 500 pages, and sold at the nominal price of 30 cents. A fine edition in half Russia, gilt top, will be sold for 60 cents, and one in full Turkey morocco, gilt edges, for 1.25. Of course, the popular demand will be enormous. Orders will be filled in the order in which they are received, with remittance. American Book Exchange.

Wellington and Waterloo.

Wellington and Waterloo appear in a fresh aspect in the following hitherto unpublished letter, unearthed by the Academy. The writer, who was an officer at Wellington's headquarters during the battle, writes, under date of Brussels, June 19, 1815:

"I cannot help writing two lines to congratulate and condole with you on the victory which England has purchased for Europe—at the expense of more than half her army. I must not attempt to give you any account of the battle, of which the Gazette will, I dare say, give us the first distinct information. I understand, however, that it throws everything, which the duke has before done, into the shade. His personal exertions were, it seems, incredible, and certainly secured the success of the day, of which, at one time, everybody except himself despaired. One of his aides-de-camp told me this morning, that he took his position on a ridge, from which he declared that he never would move—and never did move but in triumph. When Bonaparte headed an overwhelming charge, the duke threw himself into the opposing square, by which it was successfully resisted. I mention these particulars because they are precisely what his dispatches will not mention, and because I have them from an eye-witness. Everybody was killed or wounded about him, but he is happily unhurt. One is afraid to inquire after an acquaintance, the carnage has been so inexpressibly horrible. No words can do anything like justice to the valor of our people, who were literally almost smothered by the superior numbers of the French, who were themselves acharne beyond all former examples. Of this you will judge when I tell you that one of the prisoners has just now, opposite to this house, provoked a soldier to bayonet him by his cries of 'Vive l'Empereur!' As well as can be judged, the French are supposed to have lost 180 pieces of cannon. The day was at one time supposed to be so completely lost, and the French so thoroughly expected to make their appearance, I thought it prudent to dispatch a part of the department, with papers and some of our baggage, toward Antwerp, and have this morning sent after them to return."

We are in receipt of the seed catalogue of David Landreth & Sons, Philadelphia, Pa. This firm, established in 1784, is the oldest in their line in the United States, and is widely known for square dealing. Their almanac and rural register and catalogue is an improvement upon former editions; their motto seeming always to be, forward. It is illustrated with cuts of their farm buildings and the more important vegetables. It contains valuable tables and instructions to market gardeners and amateurs. It is mailed postpaid to all who apply for it.

Liquid or Dry.

—Some people prefer to purchase medicines in the dry state, so they can see for themselves that they are purely vegetable. Others have not the time or desire to prepare the medicine, and wish it ready to use.

To accommodate each class, the proprietors of Kidney-Wort now offer that well-known remedy in both liquid and dry forms. Sold by druggists everywhere.—[Truth.

NOTICE TO Contractors and Builders!

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at the Recorder's office, in the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Ind., until 12 o'clock m.

MONDAY, MARCH 21, 1881,

for furnishing all the materials and labor (excepting as hereinafter named) required for the rebuilding of the Auburn high school building, in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, which was consumed by fire on the 30th day of November, 1880; said high school building to be completed according to the plans and specifications for the same, furnished by L. D. Grovesnor, architect, of Jackson, Michigan, and which will be on file Tuesday, March 8, 1881, in the Recorder's office in the said town of Auburn, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, and open to the inspection of bidders.

Bids will be received for the work as a whole, with and without a ball in the roof of said building according to plans and specifications on file aforesaid; also separate bids will be entertained for the stone work, for the brick work for the carpenter work, for galvanized iron work, for tin work, for the slating of roof, plastering and painting.

All the work that is to be done cannot be definitely enumerated in this notice, but the bids must be for all work and material required to complete said house according to the plans and specifications aforesaid, consisting of stone work, brick work, carpenter work, galvanized iron work, tin work, slating of roof, plastering and painting, except about 300,000 brick and the stone foundation of the building burned as aforesaid, window-sills, water-tables, stone for door steps, eight large outside swinging door hinges, sash weights, etc. of burned building now on hand and on the grounds. Said work to be completed on or before the first day of September, 1881.

All bids to be accompanied by a satisfactory bond in a penal sum to be fixed by the board of school trustees of said town of Auburn, state of Indiana, and at least one of the sureties on said bond to be a resident of DeKalb county; and a certificate from the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which the other sureties reside, that the same are good and sufficient beyond a doubt, as provided for in section 1 and 2 of "an act entitled an act to indemnify counties against loss in certain cases and to protect laborers, material men and others from loss by others contracting for public buildings and work," approved March 11, 1877, chapter 5, page 29. Laws of the state of Indiana, passed at the special session of the general assembly, begun on the 5th day of March, 1877.

Estimates will be made monthly on finished work, and payments made for same less 10 per cent., and said estimates will be paid according to contract.

The board of school trustees reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of school trustees.

A number of English coal-mines are being worked under the ocean. In Northumberland the net available quantity of coal under the sea is estimated at 408,000,000 tons, and on the Durham coast under the sea, including a breadth of three and a half miles with an area of seventy-one square miles, 734,500,000 tons. The latter mine is in a vein of an aggregate thickness of thirty feet, distributed in six seams. Engineers are considering how it can be worked successfully in the future.

Minnesota papers are filled with accounts of more blizzards. These storms have refilled the railroad cuts, so that the work of the last few weeks will be useless, and trains so long and anxiously waited for are still delayed. Many towns have had but three or four trains since winter set in. All business is at a stand still, mails are stopped, cattle remain snowed under, and can be fed only by digging to them, and many instances of suffering are reported. Some towns are out of wood, groceries and kerosene, and are using candles.

The Trapper's Last Shot."

He was probably christened James, but is always Jim now, and, along with the greater part of his christian name, he has almost entirely lost his surname. If he had been a few shades lighter, he might have been "Colored Jim," but, black being the absorption of all color, this name would not fit him. So he is known, wherever known at all, as "Nigger Jim." He is an expert trapper and fisherman, but, rather singularly, considering these gifts, a poor marksman. For years he lugged about or carried in his boat an ancient flintlock Queen's arm, so deadly in its action that it would kill pickerel with only a charge of powder, so Jim said; yet he rarely brought home any spoils of field or flood but such as were gamed by trap or hook. Once, however, he made a very telling shot. It was on an October morning, and he was paddling his light trapping-skiff up the channel of Wonakakatuk as silently as any Indian could, when, as he rounded a bend, he saw through the tall stalks of the wild rice at least a dozen ducks sitting among the lily-pads in the edge of the channel, not six rods from him. Here was his long-sought opportunity, and no sooner did he descry them than a backward stroke of his paddle stopped the headway of the craft just before she poked her sharp nose in sight of the unsuspecting fowl. Then he laid the paddle in the boat without the slightest noise, and as silently lifted from her resting-place his old gun whose true inwardness at that moment consisted of all the powder in her owner's possession and a handful of BB shot, both wadded with a half-pound or so of waspnest. He cautiously thrust her muzzle through the rice stalks, cocked her without a tell-tale click of the ponderous lock, set the breech-plate firmly against his shoulder, laid his cheek to the stock, took such long and deliberate aim that a spider, setting his snare among the rushes, made fast an end of his web to the rusty barrel before Jim, shutting both eyes, set his teeth, and with a sturdy pull unhitched. There was a dazzling flash in the pan as if a kettleful of lard had caught fire, and then the noble weapon belched forth a horizontal column of flame and smoke, kicked Jim and his skiff half the boat's length astern, and gave a roar that went bellowing down the creek, across the lake, and was tossed back and forth from Split Rock mountain to Shellhouse for five minutes before it lost its voice. When Jim got his eyes open and his wits gathered, he peered through the eddying smoke and saw—not a feather raised, nor one wounded duck fluttering its last, but some riding unconcernedly with their heads knocked off and some keel up in a quarter-acre of fine splinters. Then up rose two Boston men from among the rushes, and the fire and smoke and uproar and vicious recoil of Jim's gun were as nothing to the vials of wrath which they poured out upon his curly, devoted head. Never was such paddling done on these waters as Jim did till he put half a mile of Wonakakatuk's channel, seething with his rapid strokes between himself and the scene of bloodless slaughter. Then he shoved the boat into the rushes and skulked ashore. Next day he offered his gun for sale, giving as a reason that she burned so much powder no poor man could afford to keep her. He effected a sale at a $1.50, and has done no duck-shooting since. He says with emphatic shakes of the head, "Any man that'll try to fool ducks with them wooden snakes'll steal sheep. Yes, sir, 'course he will.—Forest and Stream.

A LOTTERY OF DEATH.

A Ghastly Story of Mosby's Command.

A writer in the Philadelphia Weekly Times relates the following story of the war as told to him by a soldier of Mosby's command:

"On arriving at Rectortown, Va., we found Colonel Mosby with full command drawn up in line, and he himself in consultation with his principal officers. One of these finally advanced toward the squad which guarded the Union prisoners, and gave orders to draw them up in line. The adjutant then rode forward and read an order stating that seven of our men having been recently hung by the enemy it was determined that seven of the prisoners should be hung in retaliation, and that lots for these seven would immediately be drawn. A scene ensued which will be impressed upon my memory until the day of my death. A cry of anguish and consternation arose from the unfortunate prisoners. Some implored the guard to intercede with Colonel Mosby, and have them excluded from the drawing, two of them declaring that they were merely sutlers, and not fighting men, never having fired a gun at a southern soldier. Others said they had been drafted into the federal army against their wishes, and were friendly to the south. Others again expressed a willingness to desert that army and join our standard. While this tempestuous appeal for life was going on among these poor fellows, the main body of prisoners heard the awful sentence with deep dejection but sullen resolution.

"In the course of twenty minutes, two officers approached, one of them holding a hat, in which he had placed a number of wads or balls of paper, corresponding with the number of prisoners. Seven of these wads were marked. The drawing then commenced, the officer with the hat requiring the right-hand prisoner to take out a ball which, when drawn, he handed to the other officer in attendance, who on opening pronounced it to be either a blank or otherwise. At first several blanks were drawn, then came a marked ball, which was drawn by a calvary soldier of Custer's command and hailing from Michigan. This man very coolly remarked that he was prepared to die for his country.

" 'Six men have now been drawn,' cried the officer with the hat; 'one more must come.'

"The next and last victim was a drummer-boy, who, upon being informed of his fate, uttered the most piercing cries, and, throwing himself upon the ground, exclaimed that he was only a drummer-boy with neither father nor mother, and begged to be spared. So greatly was the pity of the officers excited that they immediately applied to Colonel Mosby to spare this boy. He very promptly replied that he did not know there was a boy among the prisoners, and ordered that he should be removed and the drawing taken over again. This was done, and on the second drawing my friend, a lieutenant, drew a marked ball. I was shocked by this, and he was greatly distressed, but exhibited a courageous resignation to his fate. Calling to him a soldier of his company, who had also been taken prisoner, he requested him to take to his wife an empty pocket-book and pencil-case, saying these were the only souvenirs he had left when condemned to execution, and that his last thoughts were with his wife and mother. I was deeply affected at his fate, and desired to assist him if possible. Whispering to him I asked him if he was a Freemason, to which he replied in the affirmative. Immediately after this the guard was ordered to march off with the seven men who had been condemned. We proceed with them (I being one of the guard) only a few hundred yards when we were ordered to halt and await further orders, and in a few minutes a freshly-mounted squad of fifteen men, commanded by a lieutenant and equipped for a raid, approached us, with orders from Colonel Mosby that we should be relieved from care of the prisoners. Among the number of this relief was an intimate friend of mine, to whom I related the circumstances in connection with the lieutenant, and also informed him that he was a Freemason. Being anxious to learn their destination, I questioned him about the recent order, and he informed me that they had been commanded to take the prisoners across the mountains and as near to Sheridan's headquarters as possible, and there to hang them. He promised me that he would do all that he could consistently with duty in behalf of the condemned officer. They then proceeded on their way, and severals day elapsed before I heard anything of their movements. On meeting with my friend he gave me the following particulars:

"They reached Paris on the same night after leaving, and were met there by Captain Montjoy, who was returning from the valley with a batch of prisoners. Being a friend of Montjoy's, he took the first opportunity of informing him of the situation of the lieutenant, and also informed him that he was a Freemason, and requested that he would try to save him. Upon hearing this Mountjoy requested an interview with the officer, and immediately afterwards he crossed the street to where he kept his own prisoners, and returned with two of them. These he presented to the officer in charge of the prisoners as two of Custer's men, whom he wished to substitute for the lieutenant. After some hesitation, and with the condition that Montjoy should assume all responsibility, the exchange was made. The officer, after returning earnest thanks for his life, was hastily transferred to a batch of prisoners under the care of a sergeant, who was told to make all possible haste to Gordonville, and specially to get out of 'Mosby's dominion' before the break of day. The others met their fate."

School Reports.

Report of school No. 4, Concord township: School closed pleasantly March 4th, with several visitors in attendance. We had a nice picnic dinner, and a good social time. The term was a pleasant one, and we hope, even think, more profitable than pleasant. Number of pupils enrolled, 25; average daily attendance, 18; minutes lost by tardiness, 59. Those neither tardy nor absent during the eighty days were Ida Koch, Eva Hay, Della Koch, Aletha Jenkins, Ernest Jenkins and Dell Draggoo.

THE THREE WORTHLESS FELLOWS.

Three worthless young fellows went out in the night,
Went out in the night, when the sun went down;
They wandered along 'neath the moon's pale light,
And smoked their cigars, as they walked down town,
For men will go, and women will weep,
'Tis useless to grieve, 'tis wiser to sleep,
Though they don't come home till morning.

Three worthless young fellows looked up at the moon,
Looked up at the moon, as they went their way.
Each thought of O'Shaughnessy's bigsaloon,
Where every night they could billiards play.
For men will play, and women will weep,
'Tis useless to grieve, 'tis wiser to sleep,
Though they don't come home till morning.

Three worthless young fellows got safe to the door,
Got safe to the door, as the clock struck nine;
Each well knew the place, they had been there before,
And drank of the brandy, and ale, and wine.
For men will drink, and women will weep,
'Tis useless to cry, 'tis better to sleep,
Though they don't come home till morning.

Three worthless young fellows came out in the street,
Came out in the street, as the clock struck three;
Two stalwart policemen they chanced to meet,
And were marched straight along to the armory.
For men will sing, and women will weep,
'Tis useless to grieve, 'tis wiser to sleep,
Though they don't come home till morning.

Three worthless young fellows came home in the morn,
Came home in the morn, as the clock struck ten;
They "went out for wool, but alas were shorn!
And they wished themselves anywhere else" just then.
For men will sin, and women will weep,
'Tis waste of affection, forget it in sleep,
And dream till the dawn of the morning.

EVOLUTION IN GAMBLING.

Mechanical Devices for Cheating at Cards and Their Uses.

[From the New York Sun.]

The business of manufacturing gambling implements thrives with the general prosperity of the country. In all the large cities, particularly in New York and Chicago, there are establishments whence are scattered throughout the country the implements of the trade. Although the law confiscates these implements when men are caught in the act of using them, there is no law against their manufacture and sale. The goods are therefore made and sold openly. When the police break up a gambling den they take away all the tools. But within twenty-four hours everything can be replaced and the game goes on as before. The mails and the express cars go constantly laden with gambling tools. The prices are generally high and vary but little, as the competition is not great except in the commonest articles, such as cards and chips. All the latest improvements in the mechanic arts are brought to bear in the manufacture. In short, there is evolution in gambling, as well as in everything else. A curious feature of the business is that the different processes of cheating are unblushingly advertised and sold. A reporter recently visited a queer establishment of this kind in Nassau street, which has been in full blast for twenty years. The present proprietor has managed the business for seven years, and says he bought it of a well-known actor, whose rapid rise in the dramatic profession caused him to sell out. He is a short, spare man, about 40 years old, with keen black eyes. He not only made no secret of his sale of implements for cheating at various gambling games, but was willing to exhibit and explain them. He said he had often been told by gamblers that he was injuring the business by exposing the tricks, but he had come to the conclusion that men would gamble, and that each player would somehow think that he could get the best of the game.

"What is the cost of a set of faro tools?"

"First you want a dealing box. An honest box, that will pull one card at a time, costs from $10 to $15. But if you want a box from which the dealer may pull one or two cards at will, without detection, it will cost you from $35 to $75. Here is a crooked box. By pressing a spring the dealer may pull two cards. He has previously fixed the pack so that he knows the order. You can never win unless he chooses to permit it. Sometimes he will let you rake down bet after bet for small amounts. Then, when you play high, he touches the spring and your money is gone. Some dealers have two boxes exactly alike. One is level or honest; the other is crooked. I made a crooked box the other day to match one that was brought here, and when my customer came for it he could not pick out the new one. The machinery for these crooked boxes is very delicate, and requires a first-class mechanic to make it. An expert dealer will pull two cards instead of one, and the closest scrutiny will not detect it. The faro spread or cloth lay out, with all the cards in the pack painted or glued on it, on which the betters lay their money, costs from $10 to $16. The case-keeper, used to record the cards drawn, costs from $7 to $20. Some players object to the use of these as offering a chance to cheat. To protect the players what are called cue cards are made, serving much the same purpose as the case-keeper. These cost about $4 per 1,000. Then there is a card-press for holding the cards, which costs from $4 to $8; a check-rack costs $5; ivory checks, from $30 to $37.50 per 100. Composition checks are sold as low as $30 per 600."

"In what game do you think there is the most cheating?"

"At present there is more cheating in draw-poker because it is played everywhere. I have seen lawyers, doctors, Judges, Police Captains, merchants, bankers, Congressmen, and, in fact, everybody playing poker. As for Poker Schenck, I have heard that his ingenious rules were invented for the purpose of permitting a Congressman to win when a member of the third house wanted him to vote for some particular measure. There are many ways of cheating at poker. One is by marked cards. One way of marking cards is on the backs at the time of their manufacture. Here are seventeen different styles of marked cards which I sell all over the United States. To an ordinary observer the backs are of an intricate and symmetrical pattern; but I can tell at a glance every card in any one of the seventeen packs."

"How can one remember so many marks?"

"It is very simple when you once learn. I will guarantee to teach any intelligent person to read any one of these marked packs in two hours. It only needs seventeen marks to a pack. Four marks will expose the four suits, and thirteen marks will expose the cards in each suit. Although the marks are so plain that they can be read as far as you can see a card, they are so covered up in the scroll work and patterns that you would not notice them unless they were pointed out to you. Sometimes the marks are in the fold of a flag; sometimes in the turn of an ornamental scroll. Here is a pack that is apparently ornamented on the back with a marble pattern. By looking at the upper left-hand corner you can plainly see a heart, spade, club or diamond carelessly thrown into the pattern. All the high cards are denoted by the different positions of a little scoop. This a gentle reminder of the way the boys get scooped by them. All the low cards are marked with various positions of a little device that looks like the butt of a pistol. A casual observer might think the backs are all alike on each card in the pack. Yet, in fact, each card is printed from a separately engraved back. These cards are sold at about $1.50 a pack."

"But do not these printed marks soon become known among gamblers?"

"Yes. Then there is a way of marking cards specially for one pack, which costs $7 or $8. This is done to cheat gamblers. I knew a man who went into a gambling game up town, and played and lost several nights at poker. Then he put private marks on an ordinary pack of playing cards, staked the darky who furnished the cards to the players to put in his pack, and he went out of the game $1,000 winner that night."

"What is the advantage of marked cards in poker?"

"You can tell every man's hand as it is dealt before he knows it himself. If he gets a low hand you can often bluff him out of his stake at the start. If he gets a high hand you know when to keep out. But when your turn comes to deal you can give each player whatever cards you please. Watch me deal this pack. I will give you, while you are watching me, either the second or third card from the top without detection. If I see a good card on top I slip it down and keep it for myself, and deal you the next one. Or I can slip that down, too, if I choose, so that your chance of getting a good hand is very slim."

"Suppose some one else furnishes cards that are not marked. Have you any way of marking them?"

"Several. Here is a little tool called a poker ring. It is apparently an ordinary diamond ring. Look at it. You see nothing peculiar about it. Pass your finger over the part that is inside my hand. You will feel a little sharp steel point. Suppose you take out a fresh pack of cards which I have never seen. In ten minutes' play I will have all the good cards marked with my little pricker. Every time an ace or a king comes in my hand I will prick a little hole in the corner. That throws up a small burr. When I deal the cards I can tell with my eyes shut when I come to one of these pricked cards. You may bet your life I will never deal one of them to you. Sometimes, to avoid suspicion, I will prick four deuces or fours and deal you three aces. Then I make you feel sorry. The slight embossing that is done by the pricker will not be noticed. The old-fashioned way of bending corners to mark cards is out of use, as bungling and easily detected. Another way by which I can read your hand is by the spy, or shiner.

"The spy is a very simple advantage tool. It is merely a little mirror which you fasten to your knee. It is concave, and catches the reflection of the cards at various angles. This is generally used at a pretty large table, as it is likely to be observed where the players sit close. All I have to do is to look down into the mirror to tell every card I deal you. This is used where the cards are not marked. If you suspect that you are watched all you have to do is to cross your leg a little while and the mirror is covered up. Sometimes you may hold one in your hand. The price of this beautiful little instrument is only $1.50. But it is not simpler than the 'bug.'"

"A 'bug?' What is the function of a 'bug?'"

"A 'bug' is an entirely new invention for the purpose of holding over cards when you are playing poker, so that, when you need them you can slip them in your hand at another deal. This is done without detection, as the cards are seldom counted. The instrument consists of a strip of steel, which has at one end a little spike that is struck into the under side of the table. The spring lays up against the under side of the table. You can easily slip one or two cards in there without detection, and take them out at your leisure. This gives you two or three more cards from which to make your hand than the other players have. You keep discarding into the bug, and you can soon make any hand you wish. I caught a fellow once playing a bug on me. I never said a word, but went out of the room. When I returned I had changed my ring, and it was not long before I had all the cards pricked. I dealt him an ace full and took four tens. Then he wept. He knew nothing about the pricking game. He got quite excited, and began making remarks when he found he could not win a pot with four jacks. After that I went halves with him, and we worked the bug and the ring together. The ring only costs $1.50."

"But was not that risky business? Suppose you were caught with those implements?"

"You mustn't get caught. A genuine gambler goes fixed with all his tools. He cheats you in so many ways that you cannot possibly conjecture how it is done. You may furnish the cards yourself, and he will beat you. Why? It is his business. He cannot afford to keep a room and pay for furnishing it and give you a square show. You are trying to get his money. He is trying to get yours. You lose, of course. You ought to know better than to play. Here is another nice tool for concealing cards. It has a good deal of machinery about it.

"This is called the vest holder. The plan of it is to rig a contrivance inside of your vest that will pull in any number of cards that you place in it, and carry them clear out of sight in your bosom. A string runs down through the leg of your trousers, and is attached to your foot. When you want to take a card out, or put one or more in this receptacle, you let up the string with your foot, and the holder marches out. At the same instant you conceal the motion by pressing your hands to your breast as you pick up your cards from the table. Thus you are enabled to have two or more cards more than your adversary, and can, of course, hold a good hand every time. This tool costs $15. You have plenty of chances to throw your surplus cards into the pack. Of course you must be careful in secreting cards, whether in your vest, your bug, or any other way, to do it neatly. Some gamblers have a skillful way of putting cards down the back of the neck. Of course a man has a right to scratch his neck. He can either scratch a card down or scratch it out. Some men have a knack of disposing of surplus cards by kiting them to a distant part of the room with a dexterous flip. It does not look well, however, after a game is ended, to see cards lying about the room."

"Is there much demand for these implements for cheating?"

"Much; and constantly increasing. I get letters all the time from men who say they are out so many hundred dollars. They think they have been cheated, but they can't tell how. They want some method of getting square with the game. Once in a while I meet a man who shrinks from using these tools. I can't understand that. When I play poker I want to win. If you have the tools you can win every time."

"But will you not be suspected if you win every time?"

"Yes, but that makes no difference so long as they let you play. I knew a gambler once who went into a nice little party of business men of whom he had been winning $50 a night for a few weeks. He found four men sitting at a table. They all knew him, and said, 'Good evening, Doc.' He said, 'How are you, boys? Can't you move up and give me a stack of chips?' They said, 'Not this time, Doc, we've made a rule not to let any more in.' He says, 'All right,' and took a walk around the block. When he got back he found six men around that table. Then he knew they had dropped on him. They evidently suspected him, but could not tell how he did it. Then he got introduced to men who did not know him."

"Suppose a gambler is playing with a lot of square players, could not another gambler come in and spoil his game?"

"Yes; that is often done. The process is very simple. If I see a skin game going on and I know the ropes and I have the nerve, all I have to do is to rough in and insist upon my half of the skin. Unless the gambler can back me down I get half the pot. Generally he will prefer to give half rather than lose his own plucking. There are plenty of gamblers who are constantly going about town, passing for business men, who get introduced into clubs and private games, and make a handsome stake out of unsuspecting players. Generally when their winnings get suspiciously large they are quietly barred out. Then they must seek new fields and pastures green."

"How about roulette—are there any cheating tools in that?"

"Most verdant youth, yes. Here are two roulette wheels. They look perfectly alike. You may look at them all day and you cannot find any difference between them. Yet I will never let you win a cent on this one, while on the other you have only an even chance. It is a common thing for a man to have one square wheel and one crooked one. He may use the square one for months, and then make a handsome stake by using the crooked one a week."

"Anything else, you wicked man?"

"I am not wicked; I am merely making it very unprofitable for people generally to gamble. That is really a great moral work. Here is a nice little teetotum. I spin it and it drops with a high number up. I give the same teetotum to you, and you can't hit that number if you spin a year. How is it done? Merely by turning a part of the top a sixteenth of an inch. It is on the principle of loaded dice."

"Are loaded dice sold openly?"

"Oh, yes. Here they are on my price-list: 'Best ivory exact imitation of common dice.' There are nine of them—three sets. One set always throws high numbers, not always sixes, because that would be detected at once. Another set throws low numbers, and the other set is honest. The sets are exactly alike, and one can be substituted for the other without detection. There is a great demand for these loaded dice, and they cost about $5 a set."

"Any other methods of fixing cards for cheating?"

"Yes. Here is a very common method of fixing cards. Take an ordinary pack and trim the ends of all the cards but the four aces. This leaves the aces a trifle longer than the other cards. It is only a trifle. Yet it is enough to make it impossible to cut them without leaving a card smaller than ace on the top of the cut, if the cards are cut by taking hold of the ends. If you want to be sure that the first card you deal to your opponent will be smaller than the ace, you force the one who cuts to lift by the ends of the cards. Then you know without looking that you have an ace on the bottom of the pack. If you can't deal that to yourself your education has been neglected. The long cards can readily be detected in your hand while you are dealing, and you will have no difficulty in keeping whatever cards you like for yourself, and making certain that your opponent does not get a better hand than is good for him."

"But suppose you have to cut such a pack for your opponent. You are sure to cut so that a low card will be dealt to yourself, are you not?"

"By no means. Of course, if I should cut by taking hold of the ends the result would be as unfortunate for me as for him. But my turn is provided for in another way. The aces, for instance, may be cut a little narrower than the other cards; then, if you cut by taking hold of the sides of the cards, an ace will be left on top and dealt to you. There are different modes of using the principle of this sort of cards, which are called briefs and strippers. They are well known in the market. They are especially prepared for the different games, so as to enable the gambler to control the cutting of the cards."

"Do you think that these things are used by persons who claim to be honest?"

"Honest? I do not believe there is such a thing as honest gambling. I have seen a man worth $2,000,000 steal a $5 chip, and I have seen his wealthy neighbor compel him to disgorge $2.50 on a threat of exposure. At the gaming-table that sort of thing is called hooking a 'sleeper.' You may take it for granted that if you sit down to play poker with a man he wants to get your money. The best thing you can do is to get his."

"I should think you would spoil the sale of these implements by exposing them publicly," the reporter suggested.

"By no means. The fools are not all dead yet. Once in a while a gambler tells me that I spoil the sale of tools by notifying the novices. I will take my chances at that. I am not in the gambling business now."

"What constitutes a keno set?"

"The very best set costs about $60. This includes globe and stand, 200 cards, 100 pegs and boards, 200 checks, tally sheet, ball board, 6,000 buttons, and ninety inch balls made of ivory."

"What is the cost of crooked roulette wheels?"

"The well-known gambler who got broken up at Long Branch for cheating had a roulette that cost $800. They are made of all sorts of materials and at all prices from the $1 toy to $1,000 for ivory inlaid. A roulette cloth costs about $60 single, and $90 double for thirty-six numbers. A roulette table costs from $60 to $120."

"Do you think there is much cheating at whist?"

"Yes; by marked cards, briefs and strippers. I tell you there is a way to cheat in every game. The strippers are a rare thing in poker. You can hold four aces against four kings. They are good for seven up, for you can get three aces and a chance for the fourth when your opponent deals. They are good in euchre, because you can force your opponent to deal you or your partner the three bowers every time he deals in spite of himself."

"Did you ever know of a man being caught with any of these tools?"

"Oh, yes. I knew a man who was working a bug in a poker game. He had raked down several nice pots when he noticed an outsider watching him. He had seven cards in his hand when he was entitled to only five. He saw that he was spotted, and that he would be watched when he threw down his hand, and probably exposed. Did he weaken? Not a bit. He had $35 in the pot, and the whole pot amounted to $250. Of course he dared not win. His mind was made up quickly. He raised a question about the correctness of the play. The others knew it was all right. He persisted. They insisted. Suddenly he said, 'Well, if it's all right, I'm out,' and slapped his cards on the pack. Then it was too late for any one to grab his cards and count them."

"What is the outfit for the game of red and black?"

"There is a lay-out something like a faro lay-out, a dealer's box like a faro box, and cards marked in the center so the dealer can tell them. They cost about the same as faro tools. The chances for winning in a square game are about 100 to 80 against the player. In a skin game the player has no chance. That is about the chance of winning at faro."

"One more question: Have you told all the ways of cheating you know?"

He shut one eye, reflected a moment, took a swig of beer from a pitcher, a long whiff from an old-time pipe in which he was smoking chewing tobacco, and answered:

"Perhaps."

The Transvaal, South Africa.

Transvaal (that is "across the Vaal,") lies between latitude 22 degrees 27 minutes S, and longitude 27 degrees 31 minutes E. Its northern boundary is the Oori or Limpopo River, which here runs from west to east; the eastern is formed by the continuation of the Drachenberg Mountains; the southern is the Vaal River, and the western and undefined line separating it from the country of the Betjuanas. The total area is 114,360 square miles, and the population—according to the official returns of 1877—is 300,000, probably a rough estimate, from which little can be known as to the fighting strength of the people who have defied the power of the British Empire. Potschefstroom, the seat of Government, is by land 960 miles northeast of Cape Town. The region is described as a vast plateau, sloping to the north, supported by the coast line of mountains, which, presenting a bold mural buttress, or escarpment, to the low country at their feet, stretch away on their western flank into immense undulating plains. At right angles to the coast range another belt of very high lands, called the Magaliesberg, runs east and west, forming a water shed between the Vaal and Limpopo rivers. The southern face of this range also presents long and undulating plains, generally well watered and wooded, and abounding in large game. To the north, approaching the Limpopo, high parallel chains of hills appear, through the openings in which flow small streams. The average height of the plateau inhabited by Europeans is from 4,000 to 5,000 feet, but many of the mountain peaks reach an elevation of 9,000 or 10,000 feet, and a part of the year are covered with snow. The climate is generally healthy, though in the northern sections the heat is intense, and during the summer months hot winds and heavy thunder storms prevail. The worst feature is, perhaps, a fly called tsetse, the bite of which is fatal to horses and oxen, thereby rendering travel very difficult, if not impossible, at certain seasons. The Boers, though originally pure Dutch, are now very considerably mixed by intermarriages with European refugees and emigrants from Cape Colony and Natal, as well as the natives. Still the Dutch characteristics largely predominate, and while the standard of education is said to be low, the people know enough to govern themselves and hate the foreign yoke. In religion they are protestants of the strongest Calvinistic persuasion, and the Bible and hymn book are almost their only literature.

A Terrible Record.

Speaking of smallpox, the surgeon in charge of the smallpox hospital in Chicago says: In Cincinnati there died in 1872, 1,179; in 1873, 658; in 1875, 722; in 1876, 929. For 1879 the death rate in the State of Wisconsin, where there was no hospital, was 26.25 per cent.; in the city of Montreal it was 28.48 per cent., and in Chicago it was nearly 17 per cent. In Chicago, the cases treated at the hospital within three years numbered 310, and the deaths during that period were 49. This was a record which had never been equalled in London, England, during a period of one hundred and nineteen years.

A National Blessing.

[Philadelphia Record.]

The nineteenth century, above all other ages, has been noted for its many inventions; it has given us the steam power in its thousand-fold applications, the Telegraph, the Telephone, the Electric Light and innumerable other discoveries, all blessings to humanity—each day bringing us new surprises until we have become so accustomed to the exhibitions of the genius of our century that any new development is at once received as a matter of natural consequence, and most people will simply remark, "I told you so." As an instance of this fact, we would only call attention to that wonderful discovery, St. Jacobs Oil. A few years ago this great German remedy had never been heard of in this country; to-day you can hardly find a man, woman or child in the United States who has not used the remedy for some pain or ache, or, at least, has witnessed its use and seen its wonderful effects on a fellow-being.

St. Jacobs Oil has become a national remedy, for it is known in every city, town, village and hamlet in the country. It is a cosmopolitan preparation; for it is praised by the Americans, Germans, Italians, Bohemians, Danes, Swedes, Portuguese, Spaniards, French, yea, even by the "Heathen Chinee." It may be termed the universal blessing; for it is indorsed by the rich and poor, the clergyman and the physician, the merchant and the laborer, in fact by all classes of the community. St. Jacobs Oil, by its almost marvelous properties, can be employed for a simple cut or sprain, or the worst case of inflammatory rheumatism. Persons who have been confined to their bed for years with that terrible disease, rheumatism, have been completely cured by the use of a single bottle. Such cases have been quoted by the leading journals of our country; for instance:

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch says: Under the title of Old Probabilities, one of the most useful and valuable officers of the U. S. Government is most widely known. But quite as well known is Prof. J. H. Tice, the meteorologist of the Mississippi Valley, whose contributions to his favorite study have given him an almost national reputation. On a recent tour through the Northwest, the Professor had a narrow escape from the serious consequences of a sudden and very dangerous illness, the particulars of which he thus refers to: The day after concluding my course of lectures at Burlington, Iowa, on the 31st December last, I was seized with a sudden attack of neuralgia in the chest, giving me the most excruciating pain and almost preventing breathing. My pulse, usually 80, fell to 35; intense nausea of the stomach succeeded, and a cold, clammy sweat covered my entire body. The attending physician could do nothing to relieve me; after suffering for three hours, I thought—as I had been using St. Jacobs Oil with good effect for rheumatic pains—I would try it. I saturated a piece of flannel large enough to cover my chest, with the Oil, and applied it. The relief was almost instantaneous. In one hour I was entirely free from pain, and would have taken the train to fill an appointment that night in a neighboring town, had my friends not dissuaded me. As it was, I took the night train for my home, St. Louis, and have not been troubled since.

The Boston Globe says: Chas. S. Strickland, Esq., Builder, No. 9 Boylston street and 166 Harrison avenue, Boston, thus speaks: The pleasure which I hereby attempt to express can only be half conveyed by words. Physicians of very high character and notoriety have heretofore declared my rheumatism incurable. Specifics, almost numberless, have failed to cure or even alleviate the intensity of the pain, which has frequently confined me to my room for three months at a time. One week ago I was seized with an attack of acute rheumatism of the knee. In a few hours the entire knee joint became swollen to enormous proportions and walking rendered impossible. Nothing remained for me, and I intended to resign myself, as best I might, to another month's agonies. By chance I learned of the wonderful curative properties of St. Jacobs Oil. I clutched it as a straw, and in a few hours was free from pain in the knee, arm and shoulder. As before stated, I cannot find words to convey my praise and gratitude to the discoverer of this king of rheumatism.

The Chicago Times says: Everybody on the South Side knows J. D. L. Harvey, Esq., who has been a resident of Chicago for over twenty years. Mr. Harvey expressed himself on the "oil subject" as follows: "I have spent over $2,000 to cure my wife of rheumatism. Two bottles of St. Jacobs Oil accomplished what all the medical treatment failed to bring about. I regard it as a greater discovery than electricity. It is a boon to the human race, and I am very glad to have this opportunity of testifying to its remarkable efficacy. I cannot speak too highly of it, and I would be recreant to my duty to those afflicted did I not lift my voice in its praise."

The Philadelphia Ledger says: Mr. Geo. I. Graham, 820 Nineteenth street, Philadelphia, is a journalist of many years' experience, and is actively connected with the Philadelphia Sunday Mirror, a leading theatrical and musical journal. During the "late unpleasantness" Mr. Graham was Captain of Company K, One Hundred and Eighty-third Pennsylvania Regiment, and through exposure in the field he contracted a variety of ills, and he says a very troublesome case of rheumatism in the right leg and foot was a war inheritance that he had in vain tried to get rid of, until he was recommended to try "St. Jacobs Oil." He states that he felt a slight relief even on the first application of the Oil. Before the first bottle he purchased had been used up he had but few traces of his rheumatism, and at this time he says the disease has entirely left him, which he attributes entirely to the use of St. Jacobs Oil. He remarks: "No person need suffer with rheumatism if St. Jacobs Oil can be obtained; to those who are afflicted with that complaint it is worth its weight in gold."

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Captain Paul Boyton, the world-renowned swimmer, thus speaks of the Old German Remedy: "From constant exposure I am somewhat subject to rheumatic pains, and nothing would ever benefit me until I got hold of this Old German Remedy. Why, on my travels I have met people who had been suffering with rheumatism for years; by my advice they tried the Oil, and it cured them. I would sooner do without food for days than be without this remedy for one hour. In fact I would not attempt a trip without St. Jacobs Oil, as I do not see how I could get along without it."

St. Jacobs Oil has been indorsed by persons of national reputation, who would not lend their names if they were not convinced that it was a duty they owed to suffering humanity; they have experienced the wonderful effect of the great German remedy, and they want their fellow-creatures to know the result. We would only mention in this connection the Rt. Rev. Bishop Gilmour, Cleveland, Ohio: Excellent for rheumatism and kindred diseases. It has benefited me greatly. Mme. Marie Salvotti, Prima Donna Wilhelmj Concert Troupe: "Nothing can compare with it as a prompt, reliable cure for the ailments named." Wm. H. Wareing, Esq., Asst. General Superintendent, New York Post Office: "Proved all that is claimed for the Oil, and found efficacious. Ready relief for rheumatic complaints." Hon. Thos. L. James, Postmaster, New York: Referring to Superintendent Wareing's report concerning St. Jacobs Oil, "I concur." Prof. C. C. Duplessis, Manager Chicago Gymnasium, Chicago, Ill.: "Our professionals and amateurs use it in preference to everything they have ever tried." Maj. T. A. Hillier, No. 2256 Master street, Philadelphia, suffered so with rheumatism that he was confined to his bed for weeks at a time, absolutely helpless; happened to hear of St. Jacobs Oil, tried it and was cured. George W. Walling, Esq., Sup't Police New York City: "Member of this Department relieved of rheumatism by its use." Stacey Hill, Esq., Mt. Auburn Inclined Plane Railroad, Cincinnati, O.: "Undoubtedly it is a remarkable medicine." D. B. Cooke, Esq., American Express Co., Chicago, Ill.: "Gladly bear testimony to its efficacy." Capt. Henry M. Holzworth, Chief Detective Force, Cleveland, Ohio: "Surprising relief. A world of good." Prof. Edward Holst, Pianist and Composer, Chicago, Ill.: "Its effects are in harmony with its claims."

In conclusion we would say that it is the imperative duty of every family to have a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil on hand for all emergencies; for the remedy is a true friend in need, and the occasion for its immediate use may come when it is least expected. Follow this advice and it will not be long before you will join us in calling St. Jacobs Oil "A National Blessing."

How a Woman Identified.

A few days ago a man called at a house on Fort street east and asked for a bite to eat. He was refused, and shortly after he left a cloak was missing from the hall-tree. The police were notified, and the other day when they arrested a man on suspicion, they sent for the woman to come down to the City Hall and identify him. When she was asked if she was certain that she could identify the man who had called, she somewhat indignantly replied: "Identify him! Why, I could pick him out among ten thousand!"

She was then confronted with the prisoner. She gave him a good looking over and called out:

"Oh! you can't fool me! You've had your hair dyed from black to red since you asked for cold pancakes, but I'd know you if I saw you in Texas!"

The captain here observed that he never heard of black hair being dyed red, and after a brief examination he asserted that the prisoner's hair had not been dyed at all.

"Well, I may possibly be mistaken about his hair," said the woman, "but I'll swear to that overcoat. I took a good look at it as he went off the steps, and I know it's the coat and the man. I particularly noticed that the third button from the top was missing."

The captain informed her that it was an overcoat he had borrowed within the hour and asked the prisoner to slip on. The woman wouldn't give in for some time, but finally said:

"Well, I might have been mistaken, but I looked square into his eyes, and I know this is the man."

"What color did you say his eyes were?"

"Blue, sir, light blue."

"But this man's eyes are black—coal black!"

So they were. The woman was dumb with astonishment for a time, but finally rallied and said:

"Didn't this man wear a slouch hat when arrested?"

"No, ma'am—he wore a cap."

"And don't you think he is the man?"

"I don't think anything about it, as I never saw him until an hour ago."

"Is it positively necessary that I identify him as the man?"

"No, ma'am."

"Then I guess I won't. The fact is, I was a little flurried that morning, and I don't think I got a fair sight of the fellow. Besides that, I think the cloak was stolen the day before I missed it, by an old woman who was selling notions."—Detroit Free Press.

The Towers of Silence.

These towers, which are built in a compound on the top of Malabar hill, in the Island of Bombay, are six in number, and overlook the sea, the oldest one being 300 years. The internal arrangements of the towers are follows: The bodies are placed in three separate circles—the outer and larger one for men, the middle one for women, and the smallest for children. There is a pit in the center, into which the bones are thrown after the flesh is stripped off, and paths to allow the priest to move about. The flooring gradually sinks to the centre to let the rain into the pits, from which it runs through filters into the earth. The towers vary in size from about thirty to fifty feet in diameter, and eight to fourteen in height.

This Parsee mode of disposing of the dead seems to European minds very revolting. The body, after the religious ceremony is performed in the temple where the friends are assembled, is carried out and placed in one of the towers, where it remains exposed to the elements until the flesh is entirely eaten off by the crowds of vultures which frequent the place, in about an hour. When the skeleton becomes dry, it is thrown into the pit in the center; thus the rich and poor meet together on one level of equality after death. When the pit becomes full of bones, they are taken out and thrown into the sea, thus fulfilling one of the principal tenets of the Zoroaster religion, "That the mother-earth shall not be defiled."

Seeing Fair Play.

Strolling leisurely about a shipyard, says an English paper, we observed a regular hard-weather, sailor-looking tar from a man-o'-war, who, in turn, was watching two men dragging a seven-foot cross-cut saw through a huge live-oak log. The saw was dull, the log very tough, and there they went—see-saw, see-saw, pull, push, push, pull. Jack studied the matter over awhile, until he came to the conclusion that they were pulling to see who would get the saw, and as one was a monstrous big chap, while the other was a little fellow, Jack decided to see fair play; so, giving the big one a blow under the ear that capsized him end over end, he jerked the saw out of the log, and, giving it to the small one, sung out, "Now run, you beggar!"

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

COPPER has been detected in the soil of a churchyard, and in portions of exhumed bodies.

AT Thebes an ancient Egyptian papyrus roll containing a treatise on medicine has been found.

A NEW scientific instrument is the "pulviometer," which registers the quantity of rain falling within a certain period, and the duration and the hour of the fall.

It has been discovered that a minute fungus will cause fermentation in a solution of glucose, while it does not affect that of cane sugar. Advantage has been taken of this fact to separate cane sugar from molasses, the glucose undergoing fermentation, and thus allowing the cane sugar to crystalize out.

A PAPER said to be proof against fire and water is prepaid in this way. After a mixture of two-thirds ordinary paper pulp and one-third asbestos has been thoroughly incorporated, it is steeped in a solution of common salt and alum. It is then made into paper, which is finally coated with shellac varnish.

THE new invention, the photophone, a modification of the telephone with selenium, by means of which light is made durable, has had a new and practicable application. It has been employed in the study of the solar eruptions and the effect of these great convulsions in the sun has been perceived audibly by the ear of the observer.

A MEDICAL missionary has learned the curious fact that Mongol doctors are not entirely unacquainted with the properties of galvanism. It is said that they are in the habit of prescribing pulverized loadstone ore for sores, and a man hard of hearing was, in one case, recommended to put a piece of loadstone into each ear and chew a piece of iron in his mouth!

MR. C. J. KINTNER, of the United States Patent Office, believed that, judging from what has already been done in various applications of electricity, within the next decade we shall find our large telegraphic corporations operating their elevators, supplying motive power, heat, and light throughout their buildings, and electricity for their lines from one common source of power.

THE researches of Professor Quincke indicate that the change of volume of solid and liquid bodies under electrical influence is not due to heat, for the change produced in the volume of fatty oils is one of contraction. The same investigator has shown that electricity diminishes the elasticity of flint and German glass, which is also said to be the case with India rubber, while the elasticity of mica and gutta percha is increased.

A DAIRYING company of London have a laboratory at which samples of milk received from farmers are subjected to chemical analysis. Prizes have been offered by the company, which are to be given those farmers whose milk supply stands highest in quality during a stated period of time. The samples of milk are carefully examined by the company's analyst, whose analyses and reports will decide the competition for the prizes. It is expected that much valuable information respecting methods for producing the richest possible milk will be produced in this way.

IF elastic gum is warmed, then expanded and wound in a spiral upon a glass tube or wire, and cooled for a short time in a cooling mixture, it shows no tendency to contract; but when it is submitted to hot water it returns quickly to its original length. The phenomenon can also be made to appear without the use of the cooling mixture. If one holds heated gum a second in an expanded condition it shows no disposition to return to its original length, but if one immerses it in hot water it contracts to one-fourth or one-fifth of its original length. Maxwell has found that similar phenomena are produced in gutta percha.

FOR the purpose of determining the capacity of a horse to undergo the privations incident to a state of siege, a series of experiments have been made in Paris. The results show: That a horse may hold out for twenty-five days without any solid nourishment, provided it is supplied with sufficient good drinking water; that a horse can subsist on barley five days without water; and, thirdly, that if a horse is well fed for ten days, but insufficiently supplied with water throughout this period, it will not outlive the eleventh day. A horse which had received no solid nourishment for twelve days was nevertheless in a condition to draw a load of six hundred pounds on the twelfth day of its fast.

One Hundred and Twenty Miles a Second.

When speaking of the spots on the sun, in his lecture, Professor Rees stated that many of them were noticed to revolve with great velocity, some at the rate of 120 miles per second. These rotations are explained by the facts that there are on the surface of the sun cyclones which drift along those large masses of volcanic matter at an indescribable swift rate. It must be remembered that the smallest one of the spots would be covered only by about eighteen earths. When speaking of solar cyclones we must not imagine that they are like the ones we have here on earth. Should a solar cyclone strike the United States, in thirty seconds all the country between New York and San Francisco would be floating away into space in the shape of a vaporous cloud. The terrible friction would ignite everything. One of our cyclones may traverse 50 or 100 miles in an hour, but a solar cyclone at the rate of 120 miles in a second would do infinitely more damage than one hundred cyclones could do. —St. Louis Republican.

Nature Making Mummies.

Says the Phœnix (Arizona Territory) Gazette: "The remark so often made and heard in Arizona about dead bodies drying up and blowing away, received a pretty strong verification at the reinterment of Dan Dietrich. Although death had occurred nearly eight months ago, and the body had been buried only in blankets, every feature was distinct and perfect, and any one who had known Dan during his lifetime would at once recognize them. The hair appeared to have grown since his death, and still retained its natural color. No unpleasant odor was perceptible, one might easily have supposed he was examining a well-preserved mummy. Since the first interment the body only shrunk and dried up, and no sign of decay could be found save in the region of the stomach, and that was due more to the fact of that portion of the body having been opened during the post-mortem examination than to natural causes. The body had, however, in that time lost over two-thirds of its weight, dwindling from 140 pounds to less than fifty pounds. This remarkable state of preservation in our hot, dry climate and soil is by no means uncommon, as many present could cite similar instances of it."

NO BENEFIT.

[From the Atchison Champion.]

An Indiana newspaper thus writes: Mr. Geo. F. Helderle, of Peru, Ind., says that he had suffered very much with rheumatism and used many remedies without benefit. He found the desired relief in St. Jacobs Oil.

Large Game in the Northwest.

Elks are abundant here, just as they used to be everywhere throughout the Red River Valley. They like to browse by the river side, where they find the swamp willows and the succulent varieties of the poplar and basswood, alternating to the prairie grass when they wish a change of diet. Several were killed within a few miles of Hallock last winter. Up to ten years ago they were common all over western and southwestern Minnesota; by no means confined to timber, but roaming the prairies in considerable bands. These horns which you see in so many houses and bar-rooms, and on stables and pilot-houses of steamboats, are chiefly trophies of this recent period.

In Dakota they are still numerous enough, but they are far to reach, and not easily killed when found. Probably there is no place anywhere at present where the splendid animal can be reached with such facility as by the wagon road from Hallock. You have only to provide yourself with a camp stove, cooking utensils, and the ordinary outfit of blankets and provisions, take a good Indian saddle-pony that will stand fire, a guide and a wagon, and "light out." I forgot to say that you want a warm hunting-suit of a dead grass or yellowish brown color; be particular about this. The best method of hunting elks is by stalking. By elks I mean the wapti, or Cervus canadensis, and not the moose, although the moose are found here, too, as are also an occasional specimen of the mule deer, C. macrotis. There is the skin of a mule deer now hanging in the carpenter's shop at Hallock.

One of the most interesting facts relating to the distribution of our large fauna is the discovery of an abundance of moose, Alce Americana, in northern Minnesota. They are smaller than the moose of Maine and the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, but are as numerous, perhaps, as in the eastern ranges. The Indians frequently bring the meat to market, and within two years heads and antlers have become a valuable commodity for natural history specimens.

Although in the early part of the century the moose was almost universally distributed throughout the swamps and forests of North America, north of the forty-third parallel of latitude, it has been believed that his present habitat had become restricted to the Canadian Provinces on the east, and to the country west of the Rocky Mountains, which lie north of Wyoming. That there is an extensive intermediate tract over which he roams is now evident, but whether his range is still unbroken and continuous from the Atlantic to the Pacific may well be questioned. The moose is not strictly a migratory animal, for it never leaves its native ground for strange lands and woods. It is probably local in northern Minnesota and the adjoining province of Kewatin. Those hunters who are in quest of big game will rejoice that a new and untried field for their prowess has been found. No better region adapted to the wants of the moose than this can be imagined, for the forest is interspersed with swamps and open marshes. Water is quite abundant, and the deciduous trees affords the kind of browse upon which he delights to feed. Snows do not fall to a depth to reduce him to the dernier resort of "yarding." The leaves fall early in October, and thus afford a great advantage for calling in the best of the season. Stalking is also a favorite method of hunting the moose, and often a good dog may be employed to advantage.—Hallock (Minn.) Letter to the Chicago Field.

[From the Pottstown Daily Ledger.]

A MICHIGAN journal relates the following: Amos James, Esq., proprietor of the Huron House, Port Huron, Mich., suffered so badly with rheumatism that he was unable to raise his arm for three months. Five bottles of St. Jacobs Oil cured him entirely.

Not a Captious Man.

A Detroit policeman was accosted by a colored man with the remark:

"I doan' want to seems capshus, sah—'deed I doan', but dar's trouble in my house ober dar."

"What sort of trouble?"

"Why, sah, a cull'd pusson called Williams sits dar wid his feet on de stove covarsin' wid my wife. I'se ordered him to vacate, sah, but he refused. What am de proper course in sich a case?"

"Go and order him out once more."

In about ten minutes the man returned and reported:

"I doan' want to seem capshus, sah, but I dun ordered him out, just as you said."

"And he didn't go?"

"No, sah. He said he'd see me in Texas fust. What would be your advice under sich circumstances?"

"If a man was in my house and wouldn't go out, I'd put him out."

"Would it seem capshus, sah?"

"I don't think so."

"Jist as you say, sah—jist so, sah. I feel sartin dat I kitch de ideah."

He retired into his house, and the officer remained to see the end. It came in about two minutes. Three or four yells were heard, somebody's feet seemed to strike the wall, and then the door opened and Williams flew into the street like a half-filled straw bed. He was scarcely on his feet before he bolted up the walk, and the owner of the house came down the steps to explain:

"I doan' like to seem capshus, sah, but now dat I've got my han' in I'd like your advice about cuffin' de ole woman up to a peak! 'Pears to me dat she sorter incouraged Williams to believe dat I couldn't lick one side of him!"

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

SOME of the nerves of the human body are so fine and small that six of them are only equal to one hair of the head in size.

EVERY one should know that a prompt shock of electricity will restore a person to consciousness, who is dying from the effects of chloroform.

IN the manufacture of lead pencils, the lead is ground to almost impalpable powder, mixed in a paste with water, made into a long coil-like wire, by being forced through a small hole (just as water issues from a syringe), straightened, and cut in lengths and baked like pottery. The "hardness" is due to an admixture of clay. The pencil is made in two halves by machinery, at a cheap and rapid rate.

THE origin of the word "Canada" is very curious. The Spaniards visited that country previous to the French, and made particular search for gold and silver, and, finding none, they often sung among themselves "Aca nada"—there is nothing here. The Indians, who watched closely, learned the sentence and its meaning. The French arrived, and the Indians (who wanted none of their company, and supposed they were also Spaniards on the same errand), were anxious to inform them, in the Spanish sentence, "Aca nada." The French, who knew as little of Spanish as the Indians, supposed this incessantly-recurring sound was the name of the country, and gave it the name of Canada.

THE history of bells is one of the most interesting in the record of inventions. They were first heard of about the year 400, before which date rattles were used. In the year 610 we hear of bells in the city of Sens, the army of Clothaire, King of France, having been frightened away by the ring of them. In 960 the first peal of bells was hung in England, at Croyland Abbey. Many years ago it was estimated that there were at least 2,262 peals of bells, great and small, in England. It has been thought that the custom of ringing bells was peculiar to England; but, in fact, the Cathedral of Antwerp, celebrated for its magnificent spire, has a peal of bells ninety in number, on which is played every half hour the most elaborate music.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from Putney, says: "Having occasion to go into my garden about half past 10 o'clock at night, I found there was a thick white fog, through which, however, a star could be seen here and there. I had an ordinary bedroom candlestick in my hand, with the candle lighted, in order to find the object I wanted. To my great surprise, I found that the lighted candle projected a fantastic image of myself on the fog, the shadow being about twelve feet high, and of an oddly distorted character, just as the specter of the Brocken is said to be. May not the gigantic spirits of the Ossianic heroes, whose form is composed of mist, through which the stars can be seen, be derived from the fantastic images thrown upon the mountain fogs from the camp fires of the ancient Gauls? In a land where mists abound a superstitious people might very readily come to consider a mocking cloud-specter to be supernatural, though it was really their own image magnified.

A New Boston Notion.

The purpose of the "Institute of Heredity" is sufficiently shown in a four-page circular which has been sent out from Boston. It is intended "to reconstruct and establish the foundations of social order upon the natural laws of human life and relations." We are told that "the causes" of a great many social disorders and misfortunes, indeed almost all of them, "are congenital. People who are born with theft and murder in their blood will steal and kill." Further it is insisted that "the public good requires, as essential conditions of its peace, safety and welfare that the citizens of the future shall not come to their social tasks burdened in advance with inherited tendencies to disease or vice or crime; for, on becoming public burdens, such citizens only react the wrong first committed against them." This is sufficiently specific. The difficulty in the case is that, adopting the premises and conceding the conclusions, it is one thing to put the remedy for these great and growing ills upon paper and it is quite another thing to put them into practice.—New York Evening Post.

Erskine's Wit.

Lord Erskine was a wit, and the most eloquent advocate of his day. His wit, however, was never venomous, but uttered with such good-natured courtesy as to disarm those whom it pierced.

An old lawyer, by the name of Lamb, was constitutionally timid, and on one occasion remarked that he felt himself growing more and more timid as he grew older. "No wonder," replied Erskine, good-naturally; "every one knows that the older a lamb grows, the more sheepish he becomes."

The Duke of Queensberry laid before Erskine a case as to whether he, the Duke, could sue a tradesman for breach of contract about the painting of his house. As the evidence was insufficient to support the case, Erskine replied as follows:

"I am of opinion that this action will not lie, unless the witnesses do."

The London residence of a distinguished London lawyer was subsequently occupied by a hardware merchant. On learning the fact, Erskine wrote the following epigram:

"This house, where once a lawyer dwelt,
Is now a smith's; alas!
How rapidly the iron age
Succeeds the age of brass."

Work.

There is no remedy for trouble equal to hard work—labor that will tire you, physically, to such an extent that you must sleep. If you have met with losses, you don't want to lie awake and think about them. You want sleep—calm, sound sleep—and to eat your dinner with an appetite. But you can't unless you work.

The Remarkable Story Told About Hartz, the Conjurer.

A singular story is told about Mr. Hartz, the conjurer, which is nearly as strange as some of the tricks he performs. According to the story, he was obliged to give up his business in May, 1877, having lost all power of action. His flesh became soft and flaky, and the least touch gave him exquisite pain. His sense of hearing became wonderfully acute, and in the room he occupied, which was on the third floor rear of a house in Brooklyn, he could distinctly hear what was being said in the front basement. He could bear no light, but his memory became so retentive that he could repeat all the conversations he had heard in three years. A footstep seemed as loud as the detonation of a cannon, and he waited with dread for hours beforehand for the report of the sunset and sunrise guns on Governor's Island. He was not able to swallow always, and he says he frequently expected to die from that cause. Sometimes as many as sixteen days passed without his drinking. He also ate very little, fasting on an average ten days at a time. His sense of taste was entirely gone, and he is only beginning to recover it. After had remained awake six months, it occurred to him that it was strange he should live without sleep, and he wrote with a pencil an order to his attendant directing the latter to wake him whenever he appeared to sleep. This occurred only a few times. His beard grew to a length of eighteen inches, and his hair reached to his shoulders. His recovery was more sudden than the attack. One morning recently strength came to him to get up, and an hour later he was able to do feats of strength that his attendant, a six footer, was unable to perform. His skin is still tender, and his flesh resembles putty or a bursted rubber ball, in that it retains for some time a depression after it has been pressed.

The disease is supposed to have been a disarrangement of the nervous system.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

IT appears that the bombs used in assassinating the emperor of Russia were made of thick glass, and were filled with nitro-glycerine. They were thrown by hand, and the jar caused by their striking on the pavement exploded them. Bombs have for some years been a favorite weapon of the king-assassins of the old world. First, they were filled with powder, then fulminating mercury, and now with the most dangerous of all—nitro-glycerine.

THE Press says we paid an unintentional compliment to the republican party in a recent article on the temperance question. Will Brother Baxter please mention something we said to the effect that we expected moral legislation of the republican party? What we did say, was that Mr. Trammel in his letter claimed that republicans made such promises before election last fall, and we furthermore expressed surprise that the ante-election promises of that party should deceive anyone, especially any one who had watched their course for the last fifteen or twenty years. We also said that the republican caucuses in both houses of the legislature directed their followers to vote against any temperance law; also we said that the republican party is not the temperance party, that its professions in that direction have always been hypocritical. If these are compliments, they certainly are "unintentional."

THE following from the Indianapolis Sentinel, of March 14, shows that Hon. D. D. Moody is ever vigilant and found on the right side of the question when the people's money is to be appropriated for the payment of high salaries:

Mr. Buskirk's bill [H. R. 127] in relation to the election and qualifications of prosecuting attorneys, defining their duties and providing for their compensation, etc., was read the third time.

MR. ROBINSON—There is a tendency manifest here to increase salaries. If I understand the provision of this bill, the salaries are increased in every respect. This matter of increasing salaries of prosecuting attorneys you will remember came up during the consideration of the criminal code bill. That bill provided for an increase of the prosecutor's salary, and if I recollect right there was an amendment adopted providing for the same salary that he has heretofore been getting. This bill increases his salary to $1,000 a year. If you want to vote to increase the salary of prosecuting attorneys, then vote for this bill, and if you want it retained at a more reasonable figure, vote against it. These men acting as prosecuting attorneys, elected under the old law, were willing to hold their offices at the salary as fixed by the law at the present time. I ask you what reason there is why these salaries should be increased? If these gentlemen cannot make a living under present salaries, they are at liberty to resign their offices. I am opposed to the bill, because it increases the salary.

MR. MOODY—I am opposed to the passage of this bill. There are forty-one prosecuting attorneys in this state, elected at the last election, and this bill proposes to donate $1,000 of the people's money to each of them, aggregating $41,000. I ask you, gentlemen, whether this is right. What equivalent do the people get for this large sum of money? Gentlemen say they favor this bill, believing it will bring to the discharge of the duties of this office better and more efficient men. I do not believe it will. I believe that the men elected last fall to fill this office compare favorably in ability and integrity with the bar of the state. I know this office is sought after, and is usually filled by young men, but this alone does dot prove to my mind that they are inefficient to discharge the duties of this office. Suppose the argument is true that these men are inferior in ability, then why donate to them this large sum of money? I am in favor of paying such a salary to our prosecutors as will command ability and integrity, but I am opposed to passing any bill that takes out of the public treasury $40,000 or $50,000 of money and give it to any class of men.

MR. EDWINS desired to enter his protest against the raising of this salary. It is now $500 a year. It is sufficiently remunerative for any young man to accept the office. It would be bad policy to increase the salary of prosecutors.

MR. GIBSON was of the opinion that the state would save money by paying $500 more and electing good prosecuting attorneys, for the reason that there is not a county in the state but what pays out more than $500 for special assistant attorneys, whereas if old and proficient lawyers were properly remunerated they would avoid the necessity for special attorneys.

In Memoriam.

The following tribute to the memory of Miss Florida Jackman was forwarded to us by the members of her class in the school at Danville, Ind. We understand she would have graduated with her class at the close of the present term:

Florida is dead! Our band is broken! We pause, speechless in our anguish, and cannot realize our loss. In our daily coming together we listen for a step that will be heard no more—for a voice that is silent. We look for a form and see the vacant chair; yet we feel that within the gloom of our cypress tree her cheerful, sunny disposition, her energy and perseverance, her pleasant manner which so endeared her to us all, casts a radiance around her memory that even the shadow of death cannot obscure. By her departure we are reminded that even now the silent, steady step may be approaching our own life threshold; therefore let us set our houses in order while the light of our consciousness is ours, so that whatever the mysterious change may be, we will be ready.

To the bereaved family of our sister classmate, we extend the unspoken sympathy which comes from wounded hearts and reaches wounded hearts, feeling truly that "when the heart is full, when thoughts come crowding thickly up for utterance, the poor, common words of courtesy" are indeed a "very mockery."

C. N. C. SCI. CLASS OF 1881.

MAHONE, senator from Virginia, went over to the republicans, thus enabling them to organize the senate by electing republicans to the different places, such as secretaries, door-keepers, etc. He was elected to the senate by such of the people of his state as were determined to pay only a part of the state debt, and repudiate the rest. They were called re-adjusters. Truly politics makes strange bed-fellows. Republicans have heretofore opposed the use of greenbacks or silver money in payment of the national debt, claiming that to pay it in anything but gold was a repudiation of a part of the debt., Every one who favored greenbacks or silver was called a repudiator, and the people warned to have nothing to do with them. "Honest money" leagues were organized, and quite a sentimental feeling aroused in favor of the poor bondholders. Now they take the leading repudiator of the country to their bosom, organize the senate by his assistance, cheer him when he appears, and Garfield sends him each day a bouquet of flowers from the White House conservatory. Mahone was also a rebel brigadier, but is all right now, of course.

Additional Local.

—Texas now calls itself civilized. The fashion of wearing bowie knives in the boot legs is discountenanced, and they are carried out of sight at the back of the neck.

—Fort Wayne will not have any spring races. They are not allowed to sell pools, and a race wouldn't be worth a nickel, unless there was some betting done.

MARRIED—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Fairfield township, on March 17, 1881, by the Rev. F. F. Christine, Miss Sarah Smith to Mr. John Burtnet, of Fairfield township.

—The Auburn Historical Society will meet next Tuesday evening, March 29, at Gordon's gallery. All are invited to attend.

A Card of Thanks.

MESSRS. EDITOR:—By your permission, we hereby tender our thanks to those friends who, on Thursday, March 17td, made us a pleasant visit, and left us in possession of a goodly quantity of the necessaries of life. Our sincere prayer is, that those kind donors may have the comforts of their liberality in their own bosoms, as well as the recompense of it both from God and man,

Childrens' Opera

Prof. Cushman's childrens' opera (Little Effie). This beautiful operetta will be presented in this town, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, March 29 and 30. This is one of the grandest entertainments ever presented in this city. The citizens of this town can truly say that one first-class entertainment will visit this town this year. The professor has about $800 worth of beautiful costumes, and will be assisted by a grand chorus of one hundred voices. The entertainment will consist of solos, duetts, tableaux, angel scenes, pantomines, etc. Do not fail to see this entertainment. Admission 25 cents, reserved seats 35 cents. Pack the hall.

Railroad surveyors have struck Columbia City. Where is the next lucky town?

From the Goshen Times we learn that Miss Kring is now preaching with great success at New Paris.

The Churubusco Herald says a democrat of that place wheeled a republican a mile on a wheelbarrow the 4th of March, on an election bet.

Frederick Druckmiller, a farmer of New Paris, Ind., committed suicide last Friday by cutting his throat. Cause: Temporary insanity.

The constitutional amendments called out more than one-third of the vote of the state; but of those cast a majority were in favor of them.

Railroads complain of the scarcity of water along the different lines, and find some difficulty in running their engines, especially in the west.

Kalamazoo, Michigan, has been blessed with over one hundred and thirty days of sleighing, and the small boys haven't got enough of it yet.

The small-pox scare seems to be abating, and it is believed that if proper precautions are taken the further spread of the dreadful disease may be prevented.

Lagrange has recently had two fires. But two or three building were destroyed, and these were partialy insured. Meetings are now being held to provide for a suitable fire department.

The editor of the Columbia City Post has lost a valuable cow by poisoning. The drug used was evidently a very powerful one, as the stomach and intestines were nearly destroyed.

The Hicksville News came out with a supplement last week. Among its other news items is the announcement that our old-time friend, F. M. Thompson, is the recently-elected father of a bouncing boy.

From all quarters comes the complaint that people did not care enough for the election to turn out. All of which shows that the majority of the people was not enthusiastically in favor of the amendments.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature to change the state constitution so that all county officers shall be elected for a term of four years, and not eligible to a second term for four years more.

A cow in Clark county, Indiana, was some time ago bitten by a mad-dog. Recently she went wild with hydrophobia, and produced a great deal of excitement, until she was surrounded and shot.

The Columbia City Post has the following: The voters of DeKalb county exercised a great deal of good judgment by electing Hon. D. D. Moody to the legislature. He is making a brilliant record on all questions affecting the rights of the masses.

An exchange says: To clean out a stove-pipe, place a piece of zinc on the live coals in the stove. The vapor produced by the zinc will carry off the soot by chemical decomposition. Persons who have tried the process claim that it will work every time.

The office of a Ft. Wayne dentist was lately robbed of eighteen pairs of forceps, valued at $65. No clue to the thieves as yet. It is not known what motive any one could have for so strange a theft. Certainly the pinchings of poverty cannot be relieved by eighteen pairs of forceps.

The Goshen Times is responsible for the following: The Wabash opera-house is so infested with rats that they scamper over the floor during performance, and nibble at the ladies' feet; and actors are afraid to die upon the stage for fear that the vermin will not understand the sham, and attack the tragedian in good earnest.

Some hunters near Milton, Indiana, recently found the partialy-decomposed remains of a man evidently frozen to death several weeks ago. The face was so decomposed that recognition was impossible. There was nothing on his person to indicate who he was. The remains will be buried by the township authorities.

The Indianian says: William Crist, conductor on the C. W. & M. railroad, took up a ticket a few days ago that had been printed in 1873, and having the signature of James E. Benham, as general ticket agent, attached to it. All of our readers will recollect the untimely death of this highly-esteemed officer of this popular road, which occurred near new Paris soon after that route was opened for traffic.

A Good Housewife.

The good housewife, when she is giving her house its spring renovating, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than many houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure diseases arising from spring malaria and miasma, and she must know that there is nothing that will do it so effectually and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines. IMPORTANT TO FARMERS

THE SOUTH BEND CHILLED PLOW
SOUTH BEND IND.

We desire to call the attention of the farmers to the superiority of the SOUTH BEND CHILLED PLOWS. In 1876 the whole number manufactured was 650; in 1880 the number manufactured was 50,000, all of which will not supply the demand for them. Following are the company's warrants: We guarantee the South Bend Chilled Plow to do more work with the same draft than any plow made in the world. We mean just what we say. We guarantee to the dealer, as well as to the farmer, that every "South Bend Chilled Plow" will give perfect satisfaction, subject to two days' trial in the field. If it fails to comply with this warrant, the plow can be returned to the dealer and the money refunded. To the farmers who have purchased our plow, and to the agents who have so nobly represented them, we return our thanks, and, by courteous and honorable treatment, trust we shall ever merit their confidence and esteem.

Very respectfully yours,
SOUTH BEND PLOW CO.

That Concert.

The concert given by the band boys last Friday evening, was another successful move on the part of our "tooters." A good audience greeted them, and the performance was well received. Miss Frankie Ryan furnished music on the organ, while Misses Sadie Hare and Annis Cowan sang some nice little songs for the lover's heart to ponder over. The music by the band and the "mocking bird" by Calkin Bros., were loudly applauded. Johnny Picker appeared filled with sauer kraut and headcheese, and belched it out with appropriate gestures to the crowd. Several of the leading features were encored, showing that their efforts were appreciated. The entertainment closed with a farce representing a hotel character. The proceeds amounted to $36.13.

School Picnic.

Friday of last week was a pleasant day, and the people of district No. 5, in Wilmington township, were fortunate in selecting that day, the last of their winter school term, to hold a picnic. Much credit is due J. J. Eskright, the teacher, A. D. Moore, and the district generally, for the very liberal arrangements made to entertain all who came. Two large tables were loaded with bodily comforts, and all enjoyed the feast. Viewed from the train, it was a pleasant sight, but the hungry reporter of the COURIER preferred a position nearer to the table, and can therefore testify to the good cooking of the people of Mooresville. One hundred and fifty-two persons were present. After dinner some excellent school work was shown in the schoolroom, speeches were made, and the gathering broke up, so as to prepare for the entertainment in the evening. A nice, new school-house, an enterprising people, and an able teacher, will make any district school a success. Mr. Eskright has taught this district five terms.

—One fellow from Butler and another from Garrett traded horses Tuesday. The Butler fellow went home immediately after taking one drink, but the Garrett fellow was in no particular hurry—or rather the horse wasn't. The horse thought it wasn't fair to be driven four miles, not having but one ear of corn in the last six weeks, and never expecting to get any more. So he toed the mark, and took a grand "stand still" in the midle of the road. He wouldn't go forward, and he wouldn't back up; wouldn't go to the right nor turn to the left, but stood as immovable as the "Rock of the ocean." Presently, however, the horse wanted to go, but the driver wasn't ready. He wanted just one more "smile." Finally, with the assistance of a half dozen men, the trio, horse, buggy and man, went down Jackson street as though it was the last quarter on the home stretch.

—They had a wedding at "Squire Smith's, in Fairfield township, last Thursday. The happy couple were Mr. John Burtnet and Miss Sarah Smith. What do you think of that, Dan? In the evening the boys assembled, and rung the marriage bells in a vigorous manner, and treated the wedding party to a hearty "charivari." During this part of the exercise, John Husselman fell plump into the business part of a saw-mill, or in other words, a big circular saw which the boys used for a bass drum. Whether John fractured the "moral law" or not, is not definitely known.

—Miss Alice McKay has removed her millinery establishment to Spencerville, where she will be pleased to have the people of that vicinity call and see her.

Auburn Courier

Local and Miscellaneous.

—We hear that there is a woman in the south end of town who has three children, and at times she will leave the little ones the entire day to manage the household. What a painful thought it is to imagine those children, with throbbing, aching hearts, calling loudly for mamma! Hungry, tired and wearied they are compelled to submit to these tortures, daily growing into maturity, without the training of a mother's duty. Sad, indeed. If this practice is kept up, and no one interferes, we will expose this "femalerunabout" through the columns of the COURIER.

—Advertisers who wish to occupy a large space for one, two or more weeks, will confer a great favor upon us by informing us the week before. If this desire will be just as convenient to our patrons, it will be quite a favor to us. Our advertising patronage is so large at present, that it is difficult for us to arrange our matter in a proper and attractive style—hence we ask this favor. Advertisements of an ordinary size can be brought in at any time before Wednesday.

—Last week as one of our German fellow-citizens was coming from the postoffice, reading a letter, he stopped all at once and slapped himself on the leg, at the same time gazing intently at the letter, then gave a harder slap than before. When asked the cause for his joy, he exclaimed: "I got goot news from Germany, my mother died and leafe me dree hundred dollar!

—Mrs F. Picker came near meeting with a painful accident last week. One leg of the cooking stove came out, and the stove was upset. She had just a few minutes before, removed a boiler full of hot water, and if it had happened when she was in the act of moving the boiler, she would have doubtlessly been badly scalded.

—Mr. Duck, the fireman who was so badly scalded in the collision near Milford a week or two ago, died at Garrett Tuesday morning, after a protracted period of intense suffering. His remains will be taken to his former home, Martinsburg, W. Va., for interment.

—It is reported on the streets again, that several female "doves have located on the avenue. If the reports are true, the proper authorities should "oust" them and break up their nest. Move them westward, and use a No. 10 cowhide boot for their propelling power.

—Jane Comb's one-horse theatre troupe did not draw well here. Whenever we see an advance agent who does not compliment printing offices, and wants 1,000 16th sheet bills for one dollar, we always remain at home with the little ones, and send our wife.

—The "homely" snow fell to the depth of two or three inches again Saturday night and Sunday morning. If the weather clerk would do business in a square and legitimate manner, he would reserve several of those unnecessary falls for next winter.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian church held the first maple sugar social of the season last Saturday night. The weather was very bad, and the sidewalks wet and sloppy; but despite these detracting agents, the occasion was quite well attended.

—We have ordered a splendid assortment of all the latest spring styles of address cards for ladies and gentlemen, which we will furnish at fair prices. Ladies wanting an article of this kind, should see our stock before purchasing.

—This is not original. It must certainly have come from the pen of some rural correspondent. It states the roads are "Almost impassible,

Not even jackassable,
And all who travel 'em
Must get out and gravel 'em!"

—"Who will be the contractors for the new school building," is the present question among the learned men. We are not able to say, but candidly think that Brother Case will not take a "cue."

—There will be a public sale of the property of Joseph Boyer, deceased, of Franklin township, on April 15, 1881. Three hundred and sixty sheep will be sold.

—Local advertisers should bear in mind that the COURIER is not set up with "ten-penny nails." Count the words in each line, and you will find that you get your money's worth.

—That gray horse we spoke of last week, "passed in his checks." His soul has gone to greener pastures, and "there's no more work for this old hoss, he's gone where the good hosses go."

—The band playing on the streets last Friday, livened up the boys somewhat. We only noticed twelve plain drunks on Seventh street, "when the band began to play."

—After two days work, the marshal succeeded in opening the drain on the corner of Main and Seventh streets, thereby drying up that little lake in front of the COURIER office.

—Tom Scott & Bro., our popular express men, have purchased Jim Griswold's black horse, and now they drive the nobbiest team in town.

—The circulation of the COURIER inside of the county, is over nine hundred. Our right hand is up.

—Conny didn't dismiss the audience at the band concert. No.

—Not one of our churches held protracted meetings this winter.

—Tom Gross' bar-tender has gone where the wood-bine twineth.

Another serenading band is practicing for the coming "champagne."

—The new miller, at the Eagle mills, will go to house keeping this week.

—Is it necessary to have any more snow for the good of the wheat?

—Yesbera's tailor was taking the measure of Seventh street Saturday.

—Potatoes and butter were scarce articles in the market last Saturday.

—Justus Rinehart, of Union township, will have a public sale March 30.

—The juveniles have begun the marble game—another indication of spring.

—Ben. Goodman is sending out circulars for the sale of his patent right.

—Isaac Ochs has a tasty sign suspended across the street, in front of his store.

—Talk up the town officials for the spring election. Give us good solid men.

—Joe Beugnot has sold his brine mill at Hicksville, Ohio, and is again in town.

—Doc. Cowan informs us that he goes to see patients on foot—sometimes he walks.

—Cedar creek is high again this week. She's been on a high quite often this spring.

—We learn that Johnny Gossage has secured a job in a printing-office at Fort Wayne.

—Sadie Hare's Sunday-school class wants a teacher during her stay in Michigan.

—Moody & Hoffman have moved their law office over Ed. Eldridge's business room.

—D. D. Snyder has purchased John Somers' horse. She is said to be a fine roadster.

—The average hen cackles a cent's worth a day for her owner—eggs are twelve cents.

—Now the sturdy tiller of the soil is making rails and cutting his summer supply of wood.

—There wasn't a farmer visible in town last Saturday, owing to the rain and bad roads.

—Mrs. Nichols, mother of Mrs. Swinceford, died at the Swinceford House yesterday.

—Virge DeWitt is building that new house on north Jackson street. We take it all back Ike.

—"There is a land that is fairer than day." If the weather don't change pretty soon, let's all go.

—Owing to the rain and storm last Saturday, the sale of Mr. Goetschius' was not largely attended.

—A fellow, from nobodyknowswhere, was begging grub from the citizens in the south end, Saturday.

—The best way to humble a high-toned youth, is to look in the opposite direction when you pass him.

—If you know of anybody who wants to trade a buggy for a durable one-horse wagon, send them up these stairs.

—We noticed George Washington Ralston chopping down an apple tree in his father's orchard, the other day. He didn't do it with his little hatchet, it was an ax.

—It took Chris. Baldock a half a day to fix a horn. We know several fellows who can "fix" two-dozen "horns" in that length of time and have plenty of lip left.

—The mud is so deep, that when a heavy horse is going along, one can occasionally hear a Chinaman hollow, "let-u up there-ee."

—Raise the price of eggs to twenty-five cents, and we will bet our "till" that every chicken in the hennery will let up laying.

—The next fellow who tells us that the robbins and blue birds have come, will get six months in Tom Scott's sober-off quarters.

—Now, as the calling season is near at hand, every lady should have a card. We have both the latest style cards and type.

—Daniel Chilcoat and Myers, both citizens of Corunna,—when they are at home—are now boarding at the hotel de Leas.

—Spring goods are arriving. Watch the columns of the COURIER and learn who has the cheapest and largest stock of goods.

—C. C. Shaffer will build a brick barn in the spring. That is what Cris. wants to make his premises look more attractive.

—Advertisers should remember that we have by far the largest circulation of any paper in the county. Paste this on your hat.

—Parties wanting sale bills, should bear in mind that no two are done alike at this office, consequently each one is sure to attract attention.

—A young man by the name of Geo. Sebring, living near the Auburn House, fell against a hot stove and burned himself badly while in a spasm.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co. are filling up with a new stock of dry-goods, clothing, groceries, etc., to be sold at bottom prices.

—J. J. Martin, the gentlemanly agent of the B. & O. road, at the Junction, reports the measles still raging at that place.

—Don't advertise. We believe it would pay some of our business men not to put any signs out at their doors.

—Six of Chris. Baker's children, at the Junction, have the measles, and it isn't good weather for measles, either.

—Jas. Griswold amused a large crowd on Seventh street, for a couple of hours Tuesday, performing with a colt.

—Dave Snyder will build a bending house in connection with the hub-and-spoke factory.

—Miss Sadie Hare has a class in music under training. Sadie is good with the keys.

—The commissioners allowances will appear in the COURIER as of yore, and don't lose any sleep over it, bretbern.

HEAR YE! HEAR YE!

We greet you with
Rattling good bargains!
Endless variety!
Golden opportunities!
Grand results.

Once more to the front with lots of confidence and a gilt edge
Stock
Lower prices,
Better goods
Greater inducements than ever.

Our method: Wholesale rates and goods in quantities to suit all.

Our motto: Better sell tons at small margins than pounds at big profits.

The people help us and we help the people.

As the volume of trade increases we sell closer and closer.

Our store is a grand co-operative ware-house and we are the people's agents.

There's millions in it.

Shall we count you in on this great scheme of the nineteenth century.

By all means try it. We will give you a cordial welcome. No misrepresentation.

A fair, square deal every time.

We will sell you as low as any live man, and your neighbor likewise.

The order of the house: Buy often and for cash. Keep nothing but new fresh goods. Do you believe us?
We can back our assertions.

You are invited to examine our stock and learn prices. You will do an injustice if you do not. Prove all things. Hold fast that which is good." If you prove us, you will find us a yard wide and all wool. Take a trial trip with us. You will find there is economy in dealing at our store.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A TERRIBLE explosion occurred in the boiler-works of Donaldson & Patterson, at Buffalo, by which six men were killed and seven injured. The body of the junior proprietor was hurled through a solid board fence across the street. The building, which was 100 feet long and eighty feet high, was literally leveled to the ground. The dome of the boiler was thrown 100 feet in the air, and landed half a mile away. Those killed were Robert Patterson, John Langenfeld, Francis Chadwick, Wm. Wager, Wm. Gibson, and a man unknown.... A bill to establish the whipping-post for the benefit of wife-beaters was favorably reported to the Pennsylvania House.

TWO MORE of the men injured in the boiler explosion at Buffalo have died, making eight victims.... The paper-manufacturing establishment of Tileston & Hollingsworth, at Hyde Park, Mass., was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $65,000.... Four men drove up to the residence of Miss Elizabeth Roberts, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and rang the bell. On entering they instantly bound the lady and her servant and demanded their valuables. Three bonds of $1,000 each were handed over, and jewelry to the value of $500 was taken from a sleeping-room. Threatening to murder their victims should the alarm be given, the robbers took their departure.

THE New York Legislature unanimously adopted a resolution that the moral, political and social sentiment of the State and country have heard with profound sorrow of the death by assassination of Alexander II., and the putting upon the record their abhorrence of the crime of all official murders, regarding them as hostile to liberty, to civilization and Christianity, and the worst possible foes of all reforms.

THE Communists of New York held a meeting to rejoice over the murder of the Czar of Russia and extend congratulations to the Nihilists. In the course of a speech, William Drury, a French Communist, referred to the late Emperor as the greatest tyrant Russia had ever known, and said that he rejoiced that he had been killed. Resolutions and an address to the Nihilists, breathing a similar spirit, were adopted. One paragraph in the address encourages the Nihilists to "kill, destroy, assassinate, annihilate, even to its very germ, the aristocracy."....John O'Neil, Secretary of a loan association at Taunton, Mass., having been detected in a course of systematic embezzlement, killed himself with a revolver.

THE Ashuelot Savings Bank, at Winchester, N. H., has unearthed a deficit of $100,000. The Treasurer, Elleroy Albee, has assigned his property to the institution.

A MOST startling and extensive robbery is reported from New York city. In broad daylight two or more men succeeded in entering a large apartment house filled with people on a populous street, evading the servants with which the house was supplied, and, breaking in the apartments of one of the occupants, carried off bonds, certificates of stock and jewelry to the value of nearly $1,000,000. After completely ransacking the rooms in the absence of the occupants, they escaped without detection with their valuable booty, and left absolutely no trace behind them. The victim of this bold and skillful robbery is Mr. Abram E. Simons, a stationer and printer, who had been printing bonds and stock certificates for some railroad companies, and nearly $1,000,000 worth of these securities he had taken to his rooms for safe keeping and concealment. They are unsigned by the proper officers, but it is said were otherwise complete. Every one of these bonds and certificates was taken, together with $2,000 worth of jewelry and valuables belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Simons.

THE WEST.

JOHN MASTERS, one of the oldest journalists in the United States, has just died at Cincinnati. He is said to have never borrowed a dollar or owed a debt since he was 11 years of age....A construction train on the Dallas and Wichita railroad went down an embankment, and five men were injured, two of them fatally....H. E. Sargent has resigned the position of General Manager of the Northern Pacific railroad.

THE paymaster at the Muscle shoals improvements was robbed of $5,000 by three men, who escaped capture....The steamer James Howard, one of the largest boats on the Mississippi river, was burned at the levee at St. Louis. She had just arrived from New Orleans. There were fifty persons on board when the alarm was given, but no lives were lost. She was valued at $75,000.

DE BEAUPLAN'S French Opera Company opens a two weeks' engagement at McVicker's, in Chicago, on the 21st inst., in which some of the most popular music will be given. The company consists of 140 people, and has been playing in New Orleans since the 17th of last November, when it first opened in this country. From Chicago the troupe goes to Philadelphia and New York, spending two weeks in each city, next returning to Paris. The troupe is said to be one of the best which has ever visited America. Lotta is at this popular house the present week.

He was the author of "Upton's Tactics," which is the text book of almost every military organization in the country.....Hon. Edward Sere, Consul General of Belgium to the United States, has arrived in Chicago to investigate what may be termed the pork scare. It is said that representatives of Spain, Portugal and Austria will soon be there on a similar errand....The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway has filed at Des Moines a mortgage for $4,000,000 in favor of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, of New York.

THE Cincinnati Price-Current publishes an extended report on the winter-wheat crop, embracing reports from nearly 400 points in the winter-wheat belt. The Price-Current says: "Taking all the evidence into consideration, with an indication of some increase in the acreage, the crop may now be considered generally promising, with a prospect for a yield not much, if any, less than the preceding year."

A MISSISSIPPIAN named Peter Cook was murdered a few days ago, in the Indian Territory, by his brother-in-law, a Louisianian named Tony Pino. At the close of the war Cook and three other men, disguised as United States cavalrymen, raided Pino's premises, robbed his safe of $1,600, and outraged his wife. Pino has been searching for Cook for fifteen years, and has just found him, and accomplished his revenge.... A dispatch from Tombstone, Arizona Territory, says the "stage coach was fired at near Contention by two highwaymen. The driver was shot dead and one passenger badly wounded. R. H. Paul, Wells & Fargo's agent, returned the fire, causing the horses to run away, and saved the passengers and the treasure from robbery."

ELLEN M. STRATTON, a teacher in a public school at Omaha, aged about 28 years, has eloped with Charles Duke, a lad of 18, son of a prominent merchant, in whom she has long taken great interest. She borrowed of various persons nearly $800.

THE SOUTH.

FOUR negroes implicated in the murder of Miss Mattie Ishmael, near Jonesboro, Ark., were lynched by a band of masked men numbering 200 or 300. The lynchers suddenly appeared from the woods, surrounded the house where the negroes were temporarily placed, overpowered the guard, took the prisoners out, hung them to a tree in the vicinity, and disappeared as quickly and silently as they gathered. It is claimed that, prior to their execution, the negroes made a full confession, giving a detailed account of the crime, alleging that Miss Ishmael was killed for refusing to disclose the hiding-place of a large sum of money which her father had received a few days before the tragedy occurred.

THE United States Deputy Marshal with ten men made a raid into Letcher county, Ky., in search of illicit distillers. The moonshiners, apprised of his approach, organized, and, taking a six-pounder brass cannon, left there by John Morgan during the war, masked it, and awaited the approach of the Marshal. When the Marshal and his party entered the pass, they fired the piece—charged with nails, scraps of iron, and the like—but overshot the mark. The Marshal's party, none of whom were hurt, dismounted, captured the piece, and drove the assailants across Perry county into Breathitt county. The Marshal and his assistants were pursuing the fugitives in Breathitt county at last accounts.

THE Arkansas Senate has defeated the prohibition amendment which recently passed the House....Col. A. G. Hodges, of Louisville, one of the oldest Masons and journalists in the Southern States, is dead....A company with a capital of $400,000 will erect a cotton mill at Charleston, S. C.

AN unprecedented occurrence is reported from Florence, S. C. Mr. James Best was overtaken by a severe storm, and was hurrying across a field to a place of shelter, when a terrific crash came, killing him instantly. The strangest occurrence in connection with the affair is that the lightning, after killing Mr. Best, dug his grave, tearing up the earth to a great depth and burying the body. The poor fellow had to be dug out with spades.... A brief dispatch from Monroe, La., announces that "a difficulty" occurred on the Bayou de Saird, and F. L. Ludeling, son of ex-Chief Justice Ludeling, of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, was instantly killed, and B. Milchenor and Frank Dirk Grave seriously wounded. No other particulars are vouchsafed....William E. Fitzgerald, an insurance agent at New Orleans, prominent in the Knights Templar, shot himself in his parlor.

WASHINGTON.

THE Cabinet has decided not to permit national banks to withdraw legal-tenders deposited with the treasury to retire their circulation. Secretary Windom is of the opinion that the heavy bond purchases of the Government will prevent any monetary stringency.

MRS. PRESIDENT GARFIELD held her first general reception on the afternoon of the 12th inst. There was an immense number of visitors. Mrs. Garfield wore a very rich garnet-velvet dress, and was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Secretary Blaine, Mrs. Secretary Lincoln, and Mrs. Secretary Kirkwood. Col. Casey made the introductions.....The Secretary of the Navy has decided to pay $10,000 for the whaling steamer Helen and Mary, to be sent out in search of the Jeannette, in command of Lieut. Greeley, of the Signal Office.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD has selected J. Stanley Brown for his Private Secretary.

SECRETARY BLAINE has already commenced active negotiations with the British Government relative to the fisheries question and it is said (although dispatches from the old country contradict it) that there are indications that that Government is disposed to leave the whole subject of the Fortune bay outrage and other grievances growing out of the Washington treaty to three umpires, of which Secretary Blaine and Sir Edward Thornton, British Minister at Washington, shall be two, the third to be chosen by the mutual agreement of these two.....Secretary Blaine has received from St. Petersburg a message thanking the President and Senate of the United States for their message of sympathy.

POLITICAL.

THE Executive Committee of the National Anti-Monopoly League report that applications for charters for branch organizations have been received from twenty-four States.

THE Pennsylvania House of Representatives passed a resolution thanking President Garfield for recognizing the claims of Pennsylvania by the appointment of Wayne MacVeagh as Attorney General....Gen. A. J. Edgerton was appointed as United States Senator from Minnesota to serve out the unexpired term of Secretary Windom.

THE new amendments to the constitution of Indiana, which were voted upon by the people of the State on Monday, March 14, have been adopted by a majority estimated, at this writing, at 100,000. The vote was very light—probably not half as large as that cast in November last. One of the amendments provide, for changing the time of the State election from October to November.... A recent Washington telegram says: "President Garfield said yesterday to a Senator from one of the Middle States that he would send very few nominations to the Senate before the adjournment of that body. He would only fill vacancies. It would be sixty days, at least, before he began to make any important changes. He also outlined the policy that he intends to pursue in the selection for offices in the different States. He thinks the best judges as to who shall be selected for such positions are the Senators and Representatives most interested. He said that they knew better than he possibly could who should be appointed, and he intended to rely in the main in making his selections upon them."

SENATOR EDMUNDS has paired with Senator Vance for the remainder of the session, and gone to Florida in search of robust health.

GENERAL.

AN international polar expedition is to sail from England next June under Commander Cheyne, of the royal navy. It is proposed to send a vessel to St. Patrick's bay, where the Alert, of the Nares' expedition, wintered, and from there survey the prospect of polar sledging by means of balloons, and, if favorable circumstances are found to exist, it is intended to attempt the journey with the assistance of balloons....The census figures show that our native population has in the past decade gained upon the immigration.

AMONG the deaths reported are those of Gen. Joseph Pinkney, of New York; Lieut. Com. Edward Keyser, of the United States navy; Samuel M. Gates, superintendent of the Memphis Cotton Exchange; and Charles H. Buck, of St. Louis.

THE subscription to the perpetual fund to provide for a life income to the oldest ex-President of the United States has been completed. It amounts to $250,000, of which $216,000 has been paid up, and so invested that it will yield an annual sum of $13,150. George Jones, of the New York Times, who was chiefly instrumental in raising this fund, says that an analysis of the list of subscriptions in his possession shows the following distribution of amounts:

Two subscribers of $25,000	$50,000
Three subscribers of $10,000	30,000
Eighteen subscribers of $5,000	90,000
Three subscribers of $2,500	7,500
Two subscribers of $2,000	4,000

Five subscribers of $200	1,000
Thirteen subscribers of $100	1,300
One subscriber of $50	50
Various subscribers for small amounts	150
Total	$250,000

When it becomes necessary to provide for the ultimate disposition of the fund a meeting of subscribers will be called.

FOREIGN.

AMONG recent deaths in Great Britain were those of Prof. William Rutherford Landers, of the University of Edinburgh; Hon. John Charles Grant Ogilvie, Earl of Strafford, and Maj. Gen. Richard Herbert Gale, C. B. Lieutenant Governor of the Royal Hospital at Chelsea.....Mohammed Jan, the noted Afghan leader, has been murdered.....Thirty persons have been arrested in the province of Teruel, Spain, for demonstrating in favor of a republican form of government.

ALEXANDER II., Czar of Russia, has at last met his death at the hands of Nihilist assassins. On Sunday afternoon, March 13, while riding with the Grand Duke Michael in a closed carriage, guarded by eight Cossacks, a bomb was thrown, which tore out the back part of the vehicle. The Czar and his brother sprung out, when a bystander drew a revolver, but was prevented from discharging it. At this instant a second bomb fell near the Czar, shattering both his legs. With a cry for help he fell, and was taken to the Winter Palace, where troops kept back the throng. The sacrament was administered to the sufferer, who survived his injuries but an hour. The two assassins stood on opposite sides of the roadway, disguised as peasants. One was so roughly handled that he has since died. The other gives the name of Roussakoff. The dead Emperor was born in 1818, and was called to the throne while Russia was engaged in the Crimean war. The chief event of his reign was the emancipation of 23,000,000 serfs in 1861. Attempts upon his life were made by Karakasoff, in Moscow; by Berezowski, in Paris, during the international exposition; by a Nihilist, who fired at him in the streets of St. Petersburg; by the explosion of a mine under the Winter Palace, and by means of an infernal machine beneath the railway track at Moscow. Alexander, the heir to the throne, was born in 1845, and wedded the Princess Dagmar, of Denmark. The Grand Duke Alexis and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have left London for St. Petersburg. Telegrams of condolence have been received from nearly all the leading countries, the United States being among the first to offer its tribute.

A TELEGRAM from the Russian frontier states that the attempt to assassinate the Czar was not unexpected, as the police had received an intimation of the existence of a conspiracy. Several domiciliary visits in search of political criminals were made the night preceding the murder. The Czar was warned not to attend the parade....All the European Cabinets and the entire European press express profound sorrow for the death of the Czar. The Emperor of Germany is said to be inconsolable. Gladstone, Hartington and Granville called on the murdered monarch's son-in-law, the Duke of Edinburgh, to express condolence, and President Grevy telegraphed his sorrow to St. Petersburg. Messages of condolence were also sent from the other European courts..... Russakoff, one of the parties who threw the bombs, one of which proved so fatal to the Czar, had been a student at the St. Petersburg Mining Academy for two years. The second bomb-thrower is also a young man, apparently of the student class. Both were disguised as peasants. Twenty persons were more or less injured by the bomb explosions. The Czar received the holy communion according to the rites of the Greek church. The Czarowitz ascended the throne on the 14th inst., and issued the following manifesto to his subjects:

> We, by the grace of God Alexander III., Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, Czar of Poland, Grand Duke of Finland, etc., hereby make known to all our faithful subjects that it has pleased the Almighty, in His inscrutable will, to visit Russia with heavy blows of fate, and to call her benefactor, the Emperor Alexander II., to Himself.
> He fell by the hands of the impious murderers who had repeatedly sought his precious life, and made their attempts because they saw in him the protector of Russia, the foundation of her greatness, and the promoter of the welfare of the Russian people. Let us bow to the unfathomable will of Divine Providence, and offer up to the Almighty our prayers for the repose of the pure soul of our beloved father.
>
> We ascend the throne which we inherit from our forefathers—the throne of the Russian empire and the Czardom and Grand-Dukedom inseparably connected with it. We assume the heavy burden which God has imposed upon us with a firm reliance upon His almighty help. May He bless our work to the welfare of our beloved fatherland, and may He guide our strength for the happiness of all our faithful subjects.
>
> In repeating before Almighty God the sacred vow made by our fathers to devote, according to the testament of our forefathers, our whole life to care for the welfare and honor of Russia, we call upon all our faithful subjects to unite before the altar of the Almighty their prayers with ours, and commend them to swear fidelity to us and to our successor, his Imperial Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke Nicolai,
> ALEXANDROVITCH.
> Given at St. Petersburg, Anno Domini 1881, and the first year of our reign.

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch of the 15th says that Russakoff, the person arrested on the charge of being an accomplice in the assassination of the Czar, has recognized one of the bodies of those killed as that of his accomplice. In the house where Russakoff lived a proclamation has been found announcing that the Czar had been assassinated by two persons. The male occupant of the house shot himself dead when he saw the police approaching. A woman who lived with him was arrested, also a person who was seen to enter the house, but the latter was not captured until he had fired six shots and wounded three policemen.... Gladstone, in moving the address relative to the assassination of the Czar, spoke of the noble self-forgetfulness with which, after the first attack, he lingered to care for the wounded. The crime showed the deepest ingratitude. The sole labor of the Czar's life was for the benefit of his subjects, and his reign would always be regarded as illustrious and memorable. By freeing 20,000,000 serfs he had conferred upon mankind one of the greatest benefits that had ever been peacefully accomplished, and he had followed up this great reform by the establishment of local government and trial by jury....The most important arrest in Ireland under the Coercion act is that of P. J. Sheridan, one of the traversers, who was seized at his residence in County Sligo.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

The session of the Senate on Friday, March 11, was an exciting one. The Democrats tried to press Mr. Pendleton's resolution relative to the committees to a vote, but Mr. Conkling made the point of order that it could not be considered because it changed a rule of the Senate without notice having been given. The Vice President sustained this point, and an appeal was taken from his ruling. After debate at some length, Senators Conkling, Sherman, Bayard, Garland, Ferry and others taking part, the point of order and the appeal were both withdrawn, and the matter went over to Monday. Mr. Edmunds made his appearance and took the oath. Senator David Davis said he had no intention of accepting honors from either party, but intended to be independent. He would not accept the Chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee, although he would vote to appoint the committees. He moved the substitution of Mr. Garland. The President sent in the following nominations: Postmasters—George F. Dick, Bloomington, Ill.; Orlando H. Merwin, Evanston, Ill.; Almond B. Bliford, Benton Harbor, Mich.; Lorenzo J. Worden, Lawrence, Kas.; Thomas F. Hall, Omaha, Neb.; Henry G. Pearson, New York.

In the United States Senate, the oath of office was taken, on the meeting of that body on Monday, March 14, by Messrs. McDill, of Iowa, and Cameron, of Wisconsin. Mr. Morgan offered a resolution denouncing assassination as a means of redress for any grievance. On the question of organizing the Senate speeches were made by Messrs. Pendleton, Conkling and Hill, the latter inquiring particularly what Senator chosen by Democrats would prove false to his trust. Mr. Mahone took a position in front of the Vice President's desk and declared that he should vote as he pleased; that he owed nothing to the Democrats, and that the Democratic party had done more injury to the South than anything else. Mr. Voorhees offered to be one of two Democrats to pair off with vacant Republican seats. The President nominated Stanley Matthews, of Ohio, to be Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court; Don A. Pardee, of Louisiana, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Fifth Judicial Circuit; John W. Powell, of Illinois, to be Director of the United States Geological Survey; Orlando H. Brewster, Louisiana, Surveyor General of the United States District of Louisiana. Postmasters—George J. Williams, Youngstown, Ohio; Thomas J. Anderson, Topeka, Kansas; Jacob M. Wells, Marion, Ind.; John R. Dowd, Rockville, Ind.; Mrs. Prescilla W. Wilson, Braidwood, Ill.; G. W. Mitchell, Charleston, Ill.; James H. Clarke, Mattoon, Ill.; John Kennedy, Hastings, Minn.; Eden N. Lavens, Faribault, Minn.; Frances W. Seeley, Lake City, Minn.; Edward Russell, Davenport, Iowa; William C. Hawley, Manchester, Iowa; George Crane, Dubuque, Iowa; Justus T. Mosk, Watertown, Wis.; Frank Patterson, Junction City, Kan.; William Mullenix, Bristol, Tenn.; Henry W. Turner, Lexington, Mo.

The Senate session was very brief on Tuesday, the 15th inst. Mr. Voorhees called up his resolution asking the Attorney General for the names of Deputy Marshals appointed to guard the polls at the October election in Indiana. It was amended so as to call also for information as to the necessity for their appointment, and in its new shape was adopted. An attempt was made by Mr. Pendleton to call up his reorganization resolution, but it failed, and the Senate adjourned.

Senator Edgerton, of Minnesota, took his seat on Wednesday, the 16th inst. A resolution was adopted calling for the correspondence between Mexico and the United States, from 1859 to 1861, in reference to a proposed treaty. The Democrats went through the motion of calling up the organization resolution, but did not attempt to press it to a vote. There was a little filibustering on the part of the Republicans, after which the Senate adjourned. The President nominated S. Dana Horton to be Secretary to the Commission to attend the International Monetary Conference at Paris. Also the following Postmasters: William H. Hartman, Waterloo, Iowa, and George B. Reichneker, Wyandotte, Kas. Surveyors of Customs: John R. Leonard, Indianapolis, Ind., and Joseph L. Gaston, Chattanooga, Tenn., and B. J. Watson to be Naval Officer at San Francisco.

The credentials of Senator Edgerton, of Minnesota, were presented to the Senate on Thursday, March 17, and he took the oath of office. Mr. Pendleton said he had received information which induced him to believe that it would be impossible to obtain a vote upon the pending resolution this morning, and he therefore moved to adjourn. Agreed to. The appointment of Hon. James A. Wildman as Postmaster at Indianapolis was sent to the Senate this afternoon by the President. Col. A. F. Rockwell was also appointed as Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Rich People of the Olden Times.

That we have some very rich people in this country there is no doubt, but where are they, asks the Cincinnati Star, as compared with the Roman aristocrats? Vanderbilt may be able to give his check for $50,000,000, but when Cyrus returned from the conquest of Asia he was rated at $500,000,000. Mrs. Astor may give an entertainment at the expense of $25,000, and Mrs. Mackay may give dinner parties that cost $50,000, but a festival given by Ptolemy Philadelphus cost $2,239,000. Alexander's daily meal, frugal as it was, cost $1,700; and money was of so little account to Claudius that he once swallowed a pearl that was worth $40,000. James Gordon Bennett has been known to give many thousands of dollars to people for whom he had acquired a fancy, but according to Tacitus, more than $97,000,000 was given away in a similar manner by Nero. Queens of fashion in New York and San Francisco have appeared at balls wearing jewels estimated to have cost $200,000, which pales into insignificance when compared with the alleged fact that Lollia Taulina wore jewels valued at $1,662,500, and that when she wore these it was only on the the occasion of a plain citizen's supper. Over $50,000 was spent in providing a funeral for an eccentric New Yorker who left directions how the money should be spent, but the obsequies of Hephaestion cost $1,500,000. Americans have died and left millions to their sons who have squandered it all in a score of years, but Antony "got away with" $735,000,000, and Tiberus left the snug little sum of $118,000,000, which Caligula squandered, to the last penny, in less than one year. The late lamented Sothern is said to have spent $100,000 in a year in good living, but it is said that Pegellus, the singer, spent money at the rate of $40,000 a week. And then there was a Darius and Heliogabalus and Lucullus and Lentulus and—well, this will do for to-day.

MILBURN, the blind preacher, says that Carlyle, in a conversation, foretold the downfall of Louis Napoleon, whom he likened to an opera singer whose opera house was soon to be blasted by an earthquake of God.

CENSUS RETURNS.

Relations of the Sexes in the Different States.

Census Bulletin No. 78, issued a few days ago, is one of the most important and interesting, as it shows the relations of the sexes in the several States and Territories, and gives an analytical summary of the changes during the past decade. The following table shows the distribution of population by sex and the number of females to 100,000 males in the United State and in each State in 1870 and 1880:

STATES.	DISTRIBUTION BY SEX.		NO. FEMALES TO 100,000 MALES.

This table covers the ground of the other tables of the same bulletin. It will be noticed that the largest excess of females is in the District of Columbia, Rhode Island standing second, Massachusetts third, Connecticut fourth, North Carolina fifth, New Hampshire sixth and South Carolina seventh. The females are in excess in sixteen States and the District of Columbia, and the males are in excess in twenty-two States and all the Territories. In Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, Arizona and Montana, the females are less than 50 per cent. of the males, the excess of males being largest in Montana and Arizona. Utah and New Mexico are more evenly balanced, the sexes standing in Utah about as they do in Illinois, while Minnesota is near the standard of New Mexico.

Since 1870 the proportion of females has increased in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Nevada and nine other States and Territories. In Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin and twelve other States and Territories in which the males were in excess in 1870, the proportion of females has increased. In the Middle States, Connecticut, Maine, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Maryland, Tennessee, and the District of Columbia, females were in excess in 1870, and the proportion of females has increased. In Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Hampshire, North Carolina and Virginia (in which females were in excess in 1870) the proportion of females has decreased.

BANKS AND BONDS.

Text of Secretary Windom's Decision Relative to the National Banks.

The decision reached by the Cabinet on the request of the national banks to withdraw their legal-tenders deposited to retire circulation maintains that the precedents of the department in similar cases should be adhered to, and no return of legal tenders made. The text of the decision is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1881.

President Merchants' National Bank, Cleveland, Ohio:

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th inst. stating your bank had, during the previous week, deposited with the Assistant Treasurer at New York $180,000 in legal tenders, with a view of retiring that amount of its circulating notes; that bonds to secure the same, amounting to $200,000, had been forwarded from the treasury in this city to New York, and that the bank now desires to return them to the treasury of the United States, and receive back the above amount of legal-tender notes. As the action taken in this case would establish a rule by which the department would necessarily be governed in regard to similar requests from other banks, some delay in answering your letter has occurred. It seems since the 19th ult. about $19,000,000 in legal tenders have been deposited by the banks for a purpose like that mentioned by you. Of this amount about $1,000,000 was returned by the Treasurer, the request therefor having been received before any redemption of notes had been made or security bonds delivered. In such cases, the transactions being incomplete, the department had clearly the right to return the notes, as has been done. Of the remaining amount, about $18,000,000 security bonds therefore have either been surrendered or redemptions against the amounts deposited have already been made, and transactions have been so far completed that it has been decided that the precedents of the department in similar cases should be adhered to, and no return of legal tenders be made. In this connection it should be stated no apprehension of unfavorable results need be entertained in this matter. Since the 25th ult. the department has paid out for bonds purchased about $6,500,000, and is to-day paying out on like account an additional amount of $5,000,000. In addition to these payments there has been advanced from the treasury since the 1st inst., to meet payments of arrearages of pensions, the amount of $7,588,844, and on the 1st prox. there will fall due of interest more than $7,000,000, and there are on hand of incomplete national-bank notes, which can be issued at once to the banks, to the amount of $4,000,000, which in aggregate, will be observed, take an amount from the treasury largely in excess of the amount of legal-tender notes which have been deposited by the banks since the 19th ult., and which, it is now desired, should be returned. Letters have also been received asking if the identical United States bonds held as security for circulating notes which were recently withdrawn by the national banks can be re-deposited without transfer. This request will be granted if the bond bears no assignment except that of the Treasurer of the United States to the bank returning it. Very respectfully,

H. F. FRENCH,
Acting Secretary.

The decision, although signed by Acting Secretary French, was actually rendered by Secretary Windom.

State of Man Before Death.

A Danish physician, E. Hornemann, has written an interesting essay on the state of man just before death. Much experience and fine insight have led the author to conclusions which cannot but be grateful to those who stand at a death-bed, to those who mourn over a loss, and to those who fear death. Here is one statement out of many: "The feeling of death's approach changes and purifies the inner sense, while the outer sense, including that of bodily pain, is made dull by the gradual decrease of the vital functions." The experience of others corroborates this. A slow death usually prepares the mind of the patient for the final step, and often makes the latter welcome. Hence, so few people who are mortally ill are really afraid to die. Persons who have for a time lost the use of their senses by drowning or suffocation confirm this experience, while persons in perfect health shrink from death as they do from eating an unknown drug or from playing with unknown animals. Death seem hard chiefly to surviving friends.

NATIVE AND FOREIGN-BORN.

The Census Bureau has issued a bulletin showing the relations of native and foreign-born persons in the several States. As to Illinois, it shows that, of its population of 3,078,769, 2,496,177 are native and 583,592 foreign-born, or about 14,080 foreigners to every 100,000 of population. In no State does the foreign element equal the native, although in many it bears a very large proportion. In the United States as a whole there is a relative decrease of the foreign element. The increase of the foreign element has been in New England, where the growth has been in the direction of manufactures; in Dakota and Oregon, whose wheat fields have invited settlement; and in Colorado and New Mexico, where extraordinary development of the mining industry has taken place since 1871.

The largest number of foreigners is in New York—1,211,438; the next largest in Pennsylvania—587,838; Illinois comes next, and with almost as many; then follow Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Ohio, Michigan and California. The largest number in any Southern State is in Texas, but in all the South there are not as many foreigners as in Wisconsin alone.

The following table will exhibit the relative number of natives and foreigners in 1880:

States and Territories.	Native.	Foreign.

West Virginia	600,214	18,229
Wisconsin	910,063	405,417
Wyoming	14,943	5,845

While the foreign-borns of no State equal the native-borns, yet if the minor children of foreign parents born in this country were subtracted from the native population and added to the foreign it would give the latter the majority in all probability in Minnesota and nearly half in Wisconsin.

Kind Words Never Die.

An elderly stranger bought a copy of the News from a newsboy and handed him a quarter, but upon the boy's hunting for change the old gentleman said:

"Never mind the change, sonny; just keep it for yourself."

This was probably the first kind word that had ever been spoken to the homeless, friendless, orphan boy since his mother died, and it completely overcame him. Brushing hastily away a tear, he seized his benefactor's hand and exclaimed in a husky voice:

"Bully for you, Old Stick-in-the-Mud! I wonder how much reward there is offered for you by the savings bank you used to be President of?"—Galveston News.

A PARTY of ladies and gentlemen were discussing the fact that few, if any, marriages take place on Friday, hangman's day. One little fellow, whose wife towered above him like a majestic elm over a scrub oak, plaintively interrupted the discussion by saying: "I don't see what difference that makes. I was married on Tuesday, but I might as well have been married on Friday, for I have been hung up ever since."

A FRENCHMAN has invented a machine which he claims will manufacture the finest of real lace, which hitherto has had to be laboriously made by hand.

IN the last twenty years the Comstock lode has yielded 6,500,000 tons of ore which averaged $46.80 per ton, making the total value of the ore extracted $328,671,605. Of this ore the gold ormed 45 per cent. in value and the silver 55 per cent.

A NEW ORLEANS man lately cabled to a friend in Cuba, "Send me one or two monkeys." The reply came back: "Shipped you seventy-five; will send rest as soon as can be found." The telegram had gone: "Send me 102 monkeys." The balance of twenty-seven have been countermanded.

THE late census gives a stunning blow to polygamy. It showes that there are more males than females in the United States. Young men who are meditating matrimony would do well to hurry matters. There is a possibility, when the short crop of 900,000 women is reported officially, there may be "a corner" or a panic.

A MAN in Beloit, Wis., made a queer ice-house. He bulit a circular ower, about twelve feet in diameter and as many high, with thick stone walls. Into this a small quantity of water was pumped each day and allowed to freeze. A refrigerator chamber was built in the center of the tower, and below the level of the ground, so that the mass of solid ice is around and above it.

THE many attempts that have been made to get an appropriation for putting an elevator in the White House have been resisted on the grounds that office-seekers are able to walk up-stairs. Such an appropriation has, however, been incorporated in the present Sundry Civil Appropriation bill upon the representation that President Garfield's mother is an invalid, and that an elevator is necessary to her comfort.

AUSTIN MORIARTY went home to his wife at Putnam, Ct., and told her that if he was not mistaken he had on the previous day been married to Phœbe Brown at Providence. He had a dim recollection of going with his friends to a clergyman's house while drunk, and becoming the bridegroom in a marriage ceremony. His memory proved sound, for an officer soon arrived with a warrant to arrest him, but his wife, by strategy, enabled him to escape to Canada.

GEN. GARFIELD'S mother is a type of the Northern Ohio pioneer mother, and has not yet forgotten the lessons of thrift and economy taught her in early life by necessity. In the hurry and bustle of the morning on the way to Washington, the porter forgot to extinguish the lamps in the car, and they burned at full head long after daylight. At last the lighted lamps attracted the old lady's attention, when she said to the President-elect: "James, put out those lamps. It's no use wasting the oil when it is doing no good." Gen. Garfield called the porter's attention to the matter, and the waste of illuminating was stopped immediately.

GERMAN physiologists have been experimenting to ascertain the best mode of restoring frozen animal life, and they announce that the hitherto-accepted theory that persons who have been exposed too long to extreme cold should not be brought into contact with warmth except by slow degrees is wholly erroneous. Dogs were frozen by artificial applications of cold until breathing and pulsation had almost wholly ceased, and then attempts were made to restore twenty of them in a cold room, twenty in a warm room, and twenty in a bath of warm water. Of the first, fourteen died; of the second, eight; of the last, none. The warm bath brought about restoration in a remarkably short time.

COL. A. W. DRAYSON writes the London Daily News from Halifax, Nova Scotia, to announce that he has made an astronomical discovery, the result of ten years investigation. It is: "That the earth rotates annually once round a second axis, which second axis is not coincident with the axis of daily rotation. This movement is due to the fact that, owing to the preponderance of land above the water in the northern hemisphere, and owing to the mass of land in Asia, Europe, and Africa on one side of the earth, the center of gravity of the earth is not coincident with the center of the earth, and, consequently, is not located in the plane of the equator. The results of the discovery are most important, as the changing position of stars from month to month can, by the aid of this discovery, be calculated, so that the endless observations of scores of computers at various observatories become no longer necessary."

UNDER the double-headed eagle of Russia no slavery is permitted, and the hoisting of the Russian standard on the ruined ramparts of the Turkoman fortress was the signal for the emancipation of 700 wretched Persian captives. Half naked, starving and covered with bruises, after being compelled to work all day, they were chained at night hand and foot to stakes and guarded by dogs. No words could describe the rapture of these unfortunate men when the Russians told them they were free to return to the Province of Khorassan, rom whence most of them had been carried off by the Tekkes. Within the fortress the Russians found about 4,000 Turkoman families, or about 18,000 individuals, whose astonishment knew no bounds when, instead of being butchered or enslaved, they were treated with scrupulous kindness, and confided to the care of the Russian Red Cross Society.

IN one of the bazars, says a letter from India, we saw some fakirs and devotees. One of these remarkable fellows had vowed to lie upon a bed of upright nails for twenty-six years, and of these he had accomplished sixteen when we saw him. His body was attenuated and full of sores resembling leprous spots. We asked him for one of the nails which pierced his miserable body. He took one from the foot of the bed, refusing in every instance to part with any of those which gave him the most exquisite pain. Another miserable devotee was holding a flower-pot at arm's length. Judge of my surprise when he told me he had held it there for five years. Another stood there with arm uplifted, and no power to lower it or move a muscle, the member being dried, stiff and dead, while the long finger nails, like bird's claws, penetrated the flesh on his wrist. All of these fellows looked moldy and sad.

IN an article on "Modern Public Debts," in the last number of the International Review, Mr. Henry C. Adams cites an interesting table, prepared by Mr. R. D. Baxter, showing the growth of public indebtedness since 1714. Reducing pounds to dollars, and adding further estimates for 1880, the table is as follows:

A. D.	Capital Sum Owed.	Character of Period.
1714	$ 1,500,000,000	Chiefly peace.
1793	2,530,000,000	War.
1820	7,050,000,000	Peace.
1848	8,650,000,000	Armament.
1870	19,560,000,000	Armament.
1880	24,295,000,000	Armament.

Mr. Adams says, further, that the Governments of the world have not been paying running expenses for thirty years. Upon the average, they have been adding to their obligations at the rate of $520,000,000 per annum since 1850. Public credit is comparatively a modern growth. As the idea of the right to private property has been better defined, the individual has become willing and anxious to part with his money to the Government, being assured that he will get it back again with interest. In former times the right of confiscation was asserted, and in extreme cases exercised by Government, and the property of the citizen was theoretically the property of the state. A second reason for the development of national credit has been that not until late years, at least until the present century, have there been such accumulations of private capital as would admit of great public loans.

Belgian Hospitality.

The Belgians are the only hospitable people still remaining in Europe, and think nothing of asking a perfect stranger to join the family circle in a five minutes' acquaintance. If, therefore, a traveler stops in any place where a wedding or christening is going on, it generally depends on himself whether he will be one of the guests or not. Not long ago I had gone to bed at a Belgian inn, when I heard a resolute knocking at my chamber door, and some giggling as of some laughing girls outside. It was about 11:30 o'clock p. m., and I got up, much wondering what could be the matter. The landlord had sent his daughter and some of her young friends to ask if I would join in a midnight pilgrimage they were about to make to the shrine of a neighboring saint, in fulfillment of a promise they had made to the deceased relative. I got up and joined their party, and it was certainly the jolliest pilgrimage I ever saw or heard of. We walked along some country roads by starlight, singing songs which were not of a particularly sainty character, and when we had accomplished the object of our mission in a quaint old chapel where the saint was worshipped, we wandered out to a picturesque village and ate hot rolls and fresh butter, with some excellent coffee. As we returned by rail in the early summer morning the whole family seemed to have adopted me into their connection, and treated me entirely as one of themselves. The Duchy of Luxembourg is, if possible, still more patriarchal in the manners of its people, and a man I know was invited by some people he had never seen before to pass a month at their chateau. What is perhaps still stranger is that he went, was really well received, and that the impromptu acquaintance thus formed turned out to be mutually satisfactory. Belgium is now by far the cheapest place in Europe, except some of the remote parts of Italy; and in Belgium or in the Duchy of Luxembourg the fare is everywhere excellent, whereas in Italy one may have to live on macaroni and tomatoes.—London Truth.

A LASHING FOR HAYES.

Mr. Conkling's Remarkable Speech in the Senate.

[From the New York Sun.]

We have taken pains to procure, by telegraph, from Washington, the full text of Mr. Conkling's speech in the Senate.

It is a most remarkable speech; remarkable considering about whom it is spoken, who spoke, and what is said.

The leading Republican Senator of the United States was discussing a proposition to refund to another Republican, who has occupied the office of President during the past four years, a little less than $4,000 which this President de facto paid out of his own pocket for the expenses of certain individuals who went South to manipulate election returns in his favor.

And what does this leading Republican, Senator Conkling, say on the subject? He says it would be "making an appropriation worse than unlawful;" he says the measure "does involve the question whether gentlemen requested to go as tourists, not as Commissioners with law, but," as he believes, "without law, on an errand not tolerated either by the constitution or by any law which obeys it—whether they are to be paid under the guise of expenses to them, or upon the allegation that the President has paid this money out of his own pocket."

Then Mr. Conkling goes on to threaten, if the appropriation is insisted upon, to discuss and expose the whole matter, with the plainest possible intimation that it will be very damaging to the persons concerned.

The allegation that this money was paid out of Mr. Hayes' own pocket takes away from him the last vestige of defense—the apology that he was not an active participator in the foul conspiracy which placed him in office. Yes, Hayes himself supplied the oil for the torch which burnt up the honest returns that made his opponent, Samuel J. Tilden, the rightful President of the United States. Let him go, guilty conspirator, to his home in Ohio, with his hundred and fifty thousand dollars of savings in his miserly pockets, and covered with infinite shame and dishonor.

The world will look upon the truthful portrait, a glimpse of which has been given, just before his departure from Washington, by the acknowledged leader of his own party.

SENATOR CONKLING'S SPEECH.

Among the amendments to the Sundry Civil bill reported to the Senate committee was one of $3,950 to reimburse Mr. Hayes for the expenses of the MacVeagh Louisiana Commission. When the bill was reached yesterday, Senator Beck, of Kentucky, who had charge of it, explained that the amount had originally been advanced by the First National Bank of New York, and had subsequently been paid by Mr. Hayes. Mr. Beck said that he did not know that there was any warrant of law for the appointment of that commission, but he thought it would be a small thing to refuse to reimburse Mr. Hayes. The following debate then followed:

Mr. Conkling—Mr. President: This amendment addresses itself to me as an appeal to sympathy. The First National Bank is located in the State of New York, and I cannot but feel the interest, not to say the tenderness, which naturally exists between a representative and his constituents, and when I reflect upon the hard and frugal road that bank has been compelled to tread, and then contemplate the idea of its losing such a sum of money, the possibility is one I cannot calmly contemplate. It requires more fortitude to inflict such an injury than I possess. If I turn to the idea of allowing the President of the United States to take out of his meager compensation a sum like this to defray the expenses of five tourists, called in the amendment "Commissioners," it might make an appeal which I must be hard-hearted to resist. When we think of these five gentlemen, all of whose names appear in this sometimes sumptuous bill of particulars, which fails to amount to the $6,000 originally estimated, but which still does amount to a considerable sum, when we think of their defraying such expenses unrewarded and unrecognized as they are, we must be stingy indeed, particularly when voting the money of other people, to be willing to consent to such cruelty.

The distinguished citizen of Tennessee and one other are not like the rest of these gentlemen in the rewards which have waited upon them. They are also not like the many other persons of whom we have heard so much in Louisiana, useful, handy and active as they were in services rendered about this complicated matter. They, the legion to whom I now refer, are enjoying a grand total of annual salaries paid to them in official places held as rewards for the peculiar services they rendered to the citizens upon whom these expenses might fall. The amendment comes as an urgent appeal to sympathy, and yet I shall not be able to discuss it without vexing the ear of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, who does not wish to listen to a political discussion. I do not wish to engage in it or to listen to it, and yet, if the amendment is to be adhered to, I shall deem it my duty to enter into a political discussion, so far as such discussion is needed, to solve the question of the propriety of making an appropriation worse than unlawful, which I believe it is.

The House of Representatives in this bill and in other bills have decided not to make it. The House of Representatives has repeatedly refused to make it. With all the facts before it, the House has repeatedly refused to pay the money. The committee of this body has chosen, by importing an amendment into the bill, to invite the Senate to consider it, and the Senator from Kentucky says that Friday is the beginning of a new administration and the day on which this session will cease. I know all this, and I want this bill in every defensible part of it to become a law. I submit, however, to the honorable Senator from Kentucky that, if he would save time, he ought not to come here with a provision that has been repeatedly discussed in the Senate; which has never succeeded in winning even an informal vote in its favor, but has over and over again been reported against, and over and over again voted down on the yeas and nays in the Senate; which does not involve political discussion; which does involve the question whether gentlemen requested to go as tourists, not as Commissioners with law, but, as I believe, without law, on an errand not tolerated either by the constitution or by any law which obeys it—whether they are to be paid under the guise of expenses to them or upon the allegation (I choose that word because I wish not to be disrespectful) that the President has paid this money out of his own pocket. I say the Senator from Kentucky ought not to bring such a question here if he does not wish it to be discussed, and discussed at length. I ask that Senator to treat his amendment as he has treated other amendments, and spare himself and the Senate the infliction of the debate which is certain to occur if this amendment is persisted in.

It involves not the $3,000 or $4,000—not the items of this bill of particulars, insignificant as they are to all of these gentlemen, whether now holding official stations, or whether, as the Senator remarked as to one of them, about to cross the threshold of distinguished official place. It involves a principle much beyond that, and much more considerable than this sum of money. I hope the honorable Senator from Kentucky will allow this cup to pass from us, and be content with the fact that this very body as now constituted, not those who were before us, but consisting of those here assembled, has again and again passed upon it. If the Senator will accept the fact, I for one will relieve him; but, if he will not, and wants to litigate this matter afresh, then I submit he ought not to complain of any debate.

Mr. Beck—Will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. Conkling—Of course.

Mr. Beck—I desire to close the debate. I care nothing about this item, one way or the other. I hope the Senator will move to lay it on the table. I shall vote against laying it on the table, because my committee has instructed me to report the amendment. If it is laid on the table, however, that ends it.

Mr. Conkling—But my honorable friend will observe that a motion to lay on the table not only cuts off debate, but brings the Senate to vote upon the merits of this amendment as those merits have been stated by those who favored it.

Mr. Beck—If the amendment is laid upon the table that ends it.

Mr. Conkling—If laid upon the table that is the end of it, and if the Senator can assure me that such a motion will prevail I will gladly forego any discussion.

Mr. Beck—No. If it is not laid on the table it will be still open to discussion.

Mr. Conkling—I am aware of that, but still I would not like to take the sense of the Senate, after what has been said, without the Senate having brought back to its recollection and attention at least some of the circumstances which surrounded this transaction, without having read the papers which constituted the open, public and ostensible object of this embassy. All that will take some time, and time should be given to it—as little time as possible. But I do not wish to go into it unless the Senator from Kentucky feels called upon to insist upon his amendment. If he will let us take the bill as the House sent it to us, and rest upon the fact that over and over again this question has been passed upon, both in committee and in the Senate, I shall be glad to leave it there; but, if he will not, then I do not see but all those who feel as I feel, that this claim ought to be not only defeated, but discussed sufficiently to display its merits, must proceed in that course.

Mr. Thurman—I want to adjourn this fight over to the next Congress. I want my friend from New York to meet my successor, a member of Mr. Hayes' Cabinet, under which what my friend from New York thinks was a great crime was perpetrated. I want him to meet my successor face to face, and discuss the propriety of this thing with him, not with me. I want him to meet the new Attorney General, MacVeagh, who was one of these Commissioners, and who was said to have had most persuasive eloquence in getting out the Packard Legislature, who, by the way, were cooped up in a house, and had not a particle of jurisdiction. I want him to come to this contest with some foes worthy of his steel. He has nobody here now to battle with him. The Senator from Kentucky has shown the white feather and run at the first fire. I do not feel called upon to defend this administration or its ways, or the way that it got into power. I do not do that, but my successor is able to do it. I say, therefore, to the Senator from New York, as the preux chevalier, as a man ready to put his lance in rest against any foe that sounds his trumpet and calls him to the encounter, let this thing go over until my successor is in his seat and until the new Attorney General will be up in the Department of Justice. That is the way to do this thing. Do not ask to lay this amendment on the table as a final and decisive vote to determine the question on its merits. Oh, no. Wait until the men who inaugurated it, who executed it, and who are able to defend it are within the lists. Now, I move to lay the amendment on the table, for I want to have it taken up then.

The amendment was then laid on the table.

Complimentary Dinner to Gen. Hancock.

A brilliant assembly of prominent Democrats and leading merchants and bankers assembled at the Manhattan Club, New York city, to attend a dinner given in honor of Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock. The rooms were decorated with flowers. A. J. Vanderpoel, President of the Club, sat at the head of the table, with the guest of the evening on the right. Seated around the same table were Clarkson N. Potter, August Belmont, Manton Marble, ex-Gov. Hoffman, ex-Mayor Cooper, Abram S. Hewitt, Gen. McClellan, Gen. Fitz John Porter, President Babcock of the Chamber of Commerce, W. H. Hurlbut, S. S. Cox and Augustus Schell. The Chairman proposed the health of Gen. Hancock, which was drunk with cheers. When the General arose to reply he was greeted with another round of cheers. He spoke as follows:

Mr. President, and gentlemen who have assembled here to-night to do me honor, I am no doubt called upon mainly in consequence of the position I held in the recent candidacy for the Presidency. I regard my connection with that subject as practically closed. I, however, maintain the principles which I held when I accepted the nomination of the Cincinnati Convention, and, believing as I do that the enforcement of these principles would promote the welfare of the whole country, I hope to see them prevail at some future time. Their success must rest with the Jeffersonian Democratic party, which is so fully and ably represented here to-night. To you I commend the preservation of that republicanism on which our fathers founded the institutions which have made us great among the nations of the earth. I can only say in relation to the political canvass of 1880 that I have no fault to find with the failure of our friends, and nothing to regret or modify concerning my own acts or words. I thank you, gentlemen, most heartily for the honor and pleasure you have conferred upon me by this entertainment.

Ex-Gov. Hoffman made a short speech, and was followed by Gen. George B. McClellan, who said in the course of his remarks:

I hope and trust that Gen. Hancock is for many years to come the last of the defeated Democratic candidates for the Presidency. What we want is principles for which to fight. In future let us forego all personal differences, and fall back on those principles which alone can give us victory with the people.

Bachelors in History.

In antiquity it was considered unpatriotic to remain unmarried. Hence bachelors were subject to peculiar disabilities in the Spartan and Roman codes. They were obliged to pay extra taxes, and under Augustus they were barred from the inheritance of real estate, except from their nearest relatives. Only one of our Presidents was a bachelor, and he was a failure. Bachelors are not as successful in life as married men. It is said that one of Washington's associated patriots in the revolutionary struggle was a celibate. All had the influence of marriage and social life. Hence the tendency against wedlock which marks the present day is among the worst features in society. Speaking of marriage, it should be a complete union of affections and of intellectual powers. It may be added, that a man's wife should to a certain degree be his business partner. She should know something of his risks and financial difficulties, and in this way the burden of life is often divided. Walter Scott concealed from his wife his connection with the Bannatynes, which caused his ruin. It is one of the best features in General Grant's character, that he takes his wife along and gives her a full share of those dignities and honors which spring from national gratitude.

RICH people, as a rule, do not have large funerals. They are the exclusive property of poor people who want to be thought rich.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FRIDAY, March 11.—SENATE.—The Tax bill was amended so as to tax all tangible property of building, loan, fund, and savings associations. The committee's substitute for section 94 was adopted. It taxes the gross earnings of sleeping-car companies 2 per cent. The Committee on Education recommended allowing Prof. M. M. Campbell $1,287 on his $6,000 claim for services as an educator at the Bloomington University. The Governor vetoed the Carter bill, defining cruelty to animals, for the reason that it permits households to be entered and searched on the suspicion that some domestic animal is not properly cared for. He also vetoed the bill giving jurors $2 per day.

HOUSE.—A number of bills were engrossed, and the House Tax bill was pushed forward a stage. An amendment was adopted taxing the gross earnings of sleeping-car companies 2 per cent. The House instructed the Committee to consider the advisability of exempting timbered land from taxation with the view of encouraging the growth of timber, but refused to concur in the Senate resolution looking to the sale of University park in Indianapolis. The bill requiring railway companies to destroy Canada thistles along their tracks, and three Revision Committee bills relating to decedents' estates, providing for the consolidation of two or more agricultural societies, and abolishing the offices of District Marshals for the collection of votes at the Presidential elections were passed. The bill creating a Board of Pardons was defeated, 44 to 22. The bill giving landlords lien upon one-half the tenant's crops failed for want of a quorum. Both houses adjourned at an early hour until Tuesday next.

TUESDAY, March 15.—SENATE.—The Senate proceeded with the further consideration of the House bill on taxation. An amendment was adopted making the Lieutenant Governor a member of the State Board of Equalization. Also an amendment depriving "professional ferrets" of their occupation by providing that County Commissioners shall not employ other than the officials prescribed by law to discover omitted property.

HOUSE.—The House killed the bill directing that revenue derived from liquor licenses should revert to public libraries. The Insurance Committee recommended that the bill relating to foreign life insurance companies be laid upon the table; that the House bill prohibiting the taking or receiving of applications for life insurance policies on the tontine plan in the State be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill relating to foreign insurance companies be similarly dealt with. The first report was concurred in, and action upon the other two deferred. Amendments to the constitution were offered, forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in Indiana. These amendments were referred to committees. There was a severe struggle over the bill compelling druggists to take out license, the opponents finally securing a postponement. The price of publishing delinquent taxes was fixed at 35 cents per description.

WEDNESDAY, March 16.—SENATE.—The feature of the day's work in the Senate was the adoption of an amendment to the Tax bill abolishing the publication of delinquent tax lists. Afterward the vote was reconsidered, and a long discussion ensued, but no vote was reached before adjournment. Other amendments made to the bill were as follows: That where a tax deed proves to be invalid the holder can recover only lawful charges, with 8 per cent. interest, and requiring the Treasurer to give ten days' notice of sale of personal property for delinquent taxes.

HOUSE.—The Ryan Election bill was passed by a vote of 54 to 34. A new feature is the provision that all ballot-boxes should be uniform, the box being so arranged that it cannot be shifted by the Election Board itself. The ballots are to be preserved a given length of time, and each ballot is to be numbered by the clerk as it is cast. Mr. Gibson's bill concerning the landlords and tenants, giving the former a lien on the crop, was also passed by yeas, 52; nays, none. The House then proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the consideration of the bill for a reorganization of the State Prison, which was ordered engrossed for the third reading by yeas, 49; nays, 40.

Senators' Wives.

In Washington there is no more important personage than your Senator. Congressmen are useful, to be sure, when one needs their aid; Cabinet officers are all very well, and no exalted official is to be despised; but the man who outranks them all, whose "influence" is best worth having, whose political and social dignity is the highest, is the Senator. It is a common saying in Washington—where they "know the ropes"—"I would rather be a Senator than President." A President can rarely enjoy more than one term; never, now, more than two, but a Senator who has his State well in hand can return year after year to the upper chamber till the brief term of a President seems to him like an insignificant episode, marking only the alternations of a fickle popular fancy. Socially the Senators' wives take the lead, and we who form the great mass of the people are far from suspecting how much these ladies, even more stately and elegant than their dignified husbands, have to do with the ways and means by which we are governed. One of the greatest powers in our politics for years has been Mrs. Logan, the wife of Senator Logan, of Illinois. Mrs. Logan is an accomplished and fascinating woman of the world, perfectly at home in society and thoroughly au fait in all society's laws and usages, written and unwritten. Besides this, she is a woman of very decided ability, shrewd and adroit, and with a really good heart, which makes and keeps for her hosts of friends. It is easily seen how such a woman as Mrs. Logan may be powerful in Washington, where social influences and motives count for so much, and while there is no one who would say that Senator Logan is not a strong man, there are plenty of people who assert positively that a great part of his success in politics is due to the skillful management and strong personal influence of his wife. In short, the summing up of a great deal of wise experience in our great National lobby, called Washington, is contained in the advice: "If you want anything down here you must cultivate the Senator's wives."—Boston Courier.

Sinecures at Washington.

Before this house (the one occupied by Mr. Seward when he was attacked by Payne), for several years afterward, a sentry paced night and day, even when Mr. Seward had moved away and got out of office. The same building was once used as a club-house, and from it Key had just issued when he was shot by Sickles. This lonely sentry, still at his post long after he had been forgotten at the war department, and allowed to remain, I suppose, because no one thought it was his duty to relieve him, reminds me of several similar incidents that are related in Washington. The great falls of the Potomac are about sixteen miles above Washington, and during the war there was a station for the collection of provisions for the army on the bank of the canal near these grand cataracts. The road between Washington and Grand Falls was several times raided by Confederates, and a block-house was erected by the Federals at a point three or four miles above Georgetown to prevent parties of rebels from passing up and down the road. At the close of the war the defenses about the capital were one after another deserted, but nobody seems to have remembered the corporal's guard stationed out there on the aqueduct road, and they remained on duty for a year or two. After they were relieved the block-house was set on fire by tramps or boys, and only a few blackened posts now mark its site. A still more remarkable case was that discovered by Gen. B. F. Butler about ten years ago. He was nosing around among the appropriations one day, when he discovered an officer in the capital whose duty he did not understand. He was 'watching crypt.' An investigation showed that many years ago it was proposed to deposit the bones of General George Washington beneath the capitol, and a crypt was prepared for that purpose. When it was completed, a public officer was appointed whose duty it was to watch this crypt and prevent its desecration, and there he had been ever since, growing gray in the service, and, while congress had appropriated money to pay his salary year after year, nobody had thought it worth while to inquire how he earned it.—[Washington Cor. Where did Potatoes Come From?

Nobody knows precisely where the potato came from originally. It has been found, apparently indigenous, in many parts of the world. Mr. Darwin, for instance, found it wild in the Chonos Archipelago. Sir W. H. Hooker says that it is common at Valparaiso, where it grows abundantly in the sandy hills near the sea. In Peru and other parts of South America, it appears to be at home, and it is a noteworthy fact, that Mr. Darwin should have noted it both in the humid forests of the Chonos Archipelago, and among the Central Cailian mountains, where sometimes rain does not fall for six months at a stretch. It was to the colonists, whom Sir Walter Raleigh sent out in Elizabeth's reign, that we are indebted for our potatoes.

Herriot, who went out with those colonists, and who wrote an account of his travels, makes what may, perhaps, be regarded as the earliest mention of this vegetable. Under the head of "roots," he mentions what he calls the "openawk." "These roots," says he, "are round, some large as a walnut, others much larger. They grow on damp soils, many hanging together as if fixed on ropes. They are good food, either boiled or roasted."

At the beginning of the seventeenth century, this root was planted, as a curious exotic, in the garden of the nobility, but it was long ere it came into general use. Many held them to be poisonous, and it would seem not altogether unreasonably so either. The potato is closely related to the deadly-nightshade and the mandrake, and from its stems and leaves may be extracted a very powerful narcotic. In England, prejudice against it was for a long time very strong, especially among the poor.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of th Age.

AN ORDINANCE.

An ordinance for the issuance of bonds of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, State of Indiana, to the amount of six thousand dollars for the purpose of raising the necessary means with which to re-erect and complete the High School Building in said town.

Whereas the Board of School Trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the State of Indiana, have filed with the Board of Trustees of said incorporated town, their statement and report under oath, showing that said Board of School trustees have not the necessary means with which to re-erect and complete the high school building of said town recently destroyed by fire, and also showing that the estimated amount required to re-erect and complete said building (over the amount of means now on hand) will be six thousand dollars ($6,000), therefore,

Section 1. Be it ordained by the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, that there be issued by said board of trustees bonds of said incorporate town to the amount of $6,000, said bonds to bear interest until paid at the rate of six per centum per annum payable annually after May 1, 1881, at the office of the treasurer of said town and that the denomination and maturity of said bonds shall be as follows:

One bond for $600, maturing May 1, 189[illegible],
One bond for $[illegible], maturing May 1, 18[illegible],
One bond for $[illegible] maturing May 1 18[illegible]
One bond of $[illegible] maturing May 1 189[illegible].
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1 1896.
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1 1897.
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1898.
One bond for $1,000 maturing May 1 1899.

Said bonds to contain a provision that they may be paid before maturity at the option of said town and each bond shall have coupons attached thereto for the payment of interest thereon. Said bonds and coupons to be signed by the president of the board and the clerk of said town, and the seal of said town be affixed to said bonds.

Section 2. Said bonds shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of said town and by him sold from time to time as the money may be required for the payment of the re-erection and completion of said high school building, but such bonds shall not be sold for a less sum than ninety-four cents on the dollar, of said bonds.

Section 3. Whereas, in the opinion of said board of trustees an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this ordinance, therefore the same shall be in force from and after its passage.

Signed: J. A. Potter, Thomas H. Sprott, Patrick Murphy, Wm. Snyder, T. G. Matheny and E. Ashley, board of trustees of said town.

KIDNEY-WORT

This Great Remedy

in either Liquid or Dry Form acts at the same time on the diseases of the Liver, Bowels and Kidneys,

This combined action gives it wonderful power to cure all diseases.

WHY ARE WE SICK?

Because we allow these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

KIDNEY-WORT WILL CURE

by causing free action of these organs and restoring their power to throw off disease.

Why Suffer Bilious pains and aches!
Why tormented with Piles, Constipation!
Why frightened over disordered Kidneys!
Why endure nervous or sick headaches!
Why have sleepless nights!

Use KIDNEY-WORT and rejoice in health.

☞ It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans one package of which makes six quarts of medicine.

☞ Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for the convenience of those that cannot readily prepare it. It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

Three Tons of Dollars.

Philadelphia will soon be well supplied with silver dollars A Washington special, of March 10, to the Commercial, says:

The largest order ever received for standard silver dollars came in to-day from Philadelphia. A single bank in that city, ordered 160,000 of these dollars. They will be shipped by express in hogsheads. The weight is about three tons or 60,000 pounds. Treasury officials are considerably puzzled to know what the bank wants with so much silver, but they imagine that it is to pay out under old leases which have run half a century or more, and which are payable in silver, to avoid the fluctuation of less substantial money. In any event the officials were glad to get the order, as the vaults are crammed with silver, which comes in about three times faster than it is paid out.

"Little Hickory."

None of the outgoing senators, says the Washington Capital, will be more sincerely missed than the small bundle of mortal and intellectual hickory from the wooden nutmeg tree. "I'd like," said some one the other day, "to see the tableau that would be participated in case one of the lobbyists went to Eaton and offered him money for his vote." It would be interesting to the average spectator, for the probabilities are, that the lobbyist's hair and himself would part company without much of an overture. There is nothing invidious in thus singling out Mr Eaton. No doubt there are plenty of men in congress who would proceed to make it warm for any fool who thus approached them, but the little Connecticut senator has an iron nerve stamped in his face that would repel the slightest attack of that description. When he makes up his mind he holds to it. One of the proudest memories he carries with him into private life, is his vote, and the only one in the whole senate on the democratic side against the electoral bill. He has not been in the White House since Hayes entered it. One day the messenger of his room came rushing into foreign relations with the intelligence that "the president was above, and probably he would like to see him." "What," roared Eaton, "is Tilden up stairs?" "No, sir, Mr. Hayes" "Correct, my lad; never make a mistake like that again." The boys say that he was in the chair one day, when the venerable Bassett went through the ceremonies that precede the announcement that a message has been received from the White House. Seeing what was going on, Mr. Eaton called another senator to the chair, and thus escaped a public allusion to Hayes as president of the United States.

Aaron Burr and Mrs. Hamilton.

When on an official visit to the United States in 185[illegible] I spent a day or two at Mr. Stuart Browne's place on the New Jersey shore of the Hudson river, above Hoboken. General Taylor, of Ohio, was another guest, and as the house was at no great distance from the fatal spot where the duel between Burr and Hamilton took place (July 12, 1804,) a conversation arose on the event, and the characteristics, public and private, of the two men. General Taylor told us that when a very young man, studying at West Point, he was one day on board of a river boat, and among the passengers were Mrs. Hamilton, widow of Alexander Hamilton, and Aaron Burr, who had returned to the states after his enforced absence in Europe, in consequence of his proved treasonable practices. Burr was then an old man, but still retained much of his former confidence and manner, especially with the ladies. To the astonishment of those who knew him, on discovering that Mrs. Hamilton was on the steamboat, he approached her, took off his hat, and bowing, said: "Mrs. Hamilton, I believe? My name is Burr." The effect upon the lady, now well stricken in years, was electric. Rising from her seat, she gathered up her dress, as if to touch Burr would be contamination, drew herself up, and, looking at him from head to foot, swept away with a dignity and grace worthy of her best days, and left him standing abashed, if he were capable of feeling so, before the spectators. Burr replaced his hat upon his head and slowly moved back to the seat he had left purposely to make this experiment upon the feelings of the widow of the man he had slain, for one cannot suppose that he had any intention to apologize or explain, since this was impossible.

Mr. Baker and the Panther.

[Palatka Herald.]

At Murphy's Place, near this town, two goats were recently killed by a panther, and a sharp lookout has been kept ever since for the animal by the people up there, until last Sunday night. On the night mentioned, Mr. Baker heard his deer-hounds under full cry in the distance, and after listening for a while attentively, he found that they were running in a circle, as their voices would die away in the darkness and then break out again clear and full as the dogs rounded up, and every time the round was made, the circle narrowed. By this maneuvering on the part of the varmint, Mr. Baker knew it to be a panther. He grasped his gun, and, notwithstanding the darkness and danger, started for the place where the animal had at last come to a stand, and was fighting the dogs. This was an almost interminable jungle of briers, vines and scrub, and it was only by the breaking of undergrowth, the yelping of hounds and the sullen growl of the ferocious beast, that the conflict could be located. Baker dropped on his all-fours, and, crawling cautiously forward, came to where could be seen, dimly outlined against the starlit sky, the immense form of the panther. Owing to the noise of the fight, Baker was enabled to get quite near without attracting notice, and, lying full length on the ground, he threw his gun to his shoulder and fired, just as the panther rose with a mighty spring in the air and shot over him, falling dead on the other side. It was a very daring feat, and a dangerous experiment, and Mr. Baker was fortunate in getting out of that jungle with only a few brier scratches. The panther measured seven and a half feet from tip to tip.

A Tragic Fate.

New York Sun.

Last Saturday's Sun contained an account of the killing, recently, of two black bears by Lottie Morrill, a young huntress eighteen years old. The following account of her death is from the Elmira Gazette:

A fearful tale is told in the Port Jarvis Union of the fate of Lottie Merrill, the young huntress of Wayne county, Pennsylvania. According to this account, she met a most tragic death on the 8th of February, being attacked in her hut by six bears, killed and eaten by them, and her body burned with the carcasses of some of them in her cabin. A party of hunters, it is said, at the close of that day, found her cabin still burning, and the proofs of the horrible death she had died. It appears that she had been hunting that day, and had killed a fine deer, which, after removing its entrils, she dragged home on the snow. Six hungry bears, drawn by the smell of blood, had followed her trail to her hut, and after devouring the carcass of the deer, attacked the huntress, killing her and devouring her body. The girl had evidently made a heroic defense. An examination of the carcasses of the six bears in the cabin showed that she must have killed two of them before being overpowered. The carcass of one bear had fallen against the closed door and imprisoned them all within the cabin, which took fire and burned the others to death. In the cabin was found one of the huntress' heavy boots with the foot still in it, a bent hunting knife near the bones, and the antlers of the deer she had brought home, which, with the carcasses of the bears, furnished a complete key to the mystery. Her funeral took place on Wednesday, the 19th inst. At least 360 people were present at the funeral, and the old preacher, Wm. Budwick, preached the sermon, relating the story of her death, and extolling her bravery and virtue to the skies. The remains were buried near her burned cabin, and over her grave was placed a pair of antlers and a hemlock slab with this little epitaph:

"Lottie Merrill lays hear she didont know wot it wuz to be afeered but she hes hed her last tussel with the bars and theyve scooped her she wuz a good girl and she is now in heaven. It took six big bars to git away with her. She wuz only 18 years old."

WILLARD'S HOTEL LOTTERY.

As this scheme is presented in our regular advertising columns, it offers a very tempting array of prizes to be disposed of by lot the 7th of April next. This is authorized by law and is under the management of disinterested commissioners appointed by the Legislature of the state of Kentucky. As the drawing takes place April 7th, parties desiring tickets will have to order at once. 13 2t.

The Giant Cacti of Arizona.

A writer in the Philadelphia Times, describing a trip through Arizona, says: "We soon entered the land of giant cacti. I was never more surprised than at seeing the wonderful development of this plant in this region. I am satisfied that nowhere in the world such size is attained. The species called Swatara grows to the enormous height of sixty feet, and measures six feet in diameter. There are tens of thousands of this species. Most of them will measure from eight inches to two feet in diameter and reach a height of twenty to thirty feet. Some have no limbs, and resemble a high post; others have from one to three arms. They seem to stand on the top of the sand, with scarcely any root, and must receive their nutrition largely from the atmosphere. They are capped with a beautiful flower, and later with fruit. The Indians remove the fruit with a long spiked pole, and use it in large quantities. The center of this cactus is pierced with a hard, tough rod, which supports it in time of storm. So firm is this support that one is seldom found broken or blown to the earth. When in a state of decay you can extract the center, which resembles more than anything else a fishing-rod.

"There are fifteen or twenty species of cacti growing in this region. The pole cactus grows much like a large corn-stalk. Each year's growth is indicated by a joint, and a rich, tenacious gum exudes from the surface, causing it to burn like pine when it is entirely green. There are two varieties of what is called the bulb. These grow in the form of a ball and nearly the size of a pint cup. One variety is armed with thorns half an inch in length, the other with a different kind of thorn, much resembling a porcupine's quill. These thorns are as sharp as needles, and require but little pressure to penetrate their entire length into the foot of a man or the hoof of a horse. The variety having the short thorns bear a red-colored fruit, about the size of a small peach; it is very sweet, and the juice flows from a gold pen as beautiful red ink. There is another species which bears a different kind of fruit resembling a cucumber about two-thirds matured. The pulp is of the consistency of the banana, but much sweeter and very full of black, flat seeds, the size of a dime. As far as I have been able to ascertain there are three kinds of fruit growing on as many different species of cacti in this desert land Another kind, prized more than all the rest by the Indians, very much resembles our century plant. The wild Apaches have for ages depended largely on this for sustenance. They boil the root, make it into mush and thus eat it, and from the rest of the plant make a sour drink, which they greatly enjoy."

How He Was Laid.

It was in a smoking-car on the Hudson River road. A New Yorker was exhibiting an invention to several gentlemen, when an old farmer, with a settled look of sadness on his face, heaved a sigh, and said:

"I never see such a thing without wanting to weep."

"Nothing about this invention to weep over, that I can see," replied the inventor.

"Wall, it sort o' calls up old recollections. Twenty years ago this fall, I thought I had a fortune in my grasp. Yes sir, I believed I had struck the biggest thing since steam was brought into use."

"What was it?"

"One day when the old woman was flat down with her lame leg, I had to cook my own dinner. After I'd got the pan-cake batter all fixed up, I couldn't find the greased rag the old woman used to rub over the spider. Sort o' absent minded like, I picked up a piece of raw turnip from the table, and used it instead. It worked to a charm. No smell, no smoke, no stick."

He paused here to wipe away a tear, and then continued:

"There was the fortune. I figured, that 9,000,000 greased rags were used in this country five months in the year. Fifty thousands barrels of grease were used up, greasing spiders. Over $100,000 wasted and gone. One turnip would make six greasers; 1,000 bushels would make enough to supply the country. All that was needed was to cut them up into fancy style, affix a handle, and go to supply the demand at 10 cents each."

"There was money in it?"

"No, there wasn't. I bought 100 bushels of turnips, $50 worth of wire and hired two men to go to work, and then I took a greaser and went over into Vermont to see how it would take; they wouldn't have it. They had something more simple and much cheaper."

"What could it have been?"

"They spit on the spider," replied the old man, as a tear made a break down his nose and was swallowed up in the dust on the floor.—[Wall Street News.

Numismatic.

The silver dollars came into circulation in 1794. None were coined from 1804 to 1836. The 1804 dollars are the rarest. All the dollars issued between 1850 and 1860 are considered very valuable, and those of 1851 and 1852 are worth $50 apiece. Only six of 1804 were struck off. Mr. Adams paid $500 for the one in his possession. The 1836 dollar differs from those of other years, being stamped with large eagles surrounded by stars. There is no silver half-dollar of the year 1804 in circulation which does not bear a figure 5 stamped over the 4. There were three sets of what was known as the "Barber dollar," coined in 1871, and of these three Mr. Adams has one, for which he paid $100. This style of dollar differs considerably from the other dollar issued that year, the goddess on it being raised and facing the left, instead of the right, as she does on the other, and the emblem on the reverse side is quite unlike anything on the dollars now in circulation. This is one of the rarest of American coins, and is highly prized by its owner.

From December, 1788, until March, 1789, the Deleware and Ohio rivers were both frozen and navigation suspended. In 1790 snow fell two feet deep in Ohio, and the river was so firmly frozen that mounted troops and artillery wagons rode across by the hundred.

Cats are called "pussy" by some people, but why they call them "pussy" instead of their particular name is intimately and closely connected with the question why red apples grow on green-leaf trees. The word "pussy" is the Tamil word for cat, and has been introduced into the language through folk lore. Nearly all fairy stories about cats come to us through the Persian, which preserves the Tamil word.

The first mayor of New York was Thomas Willet, who was born in England in 1611. He came to Massachusetts when 18 years old, and in 1647 succeeded Miles Standish in the military command of the Plymouth colony. When the English took New York from the Hollanders, in 1664, Capt. Willet was chosen mayor of the city and administered the government for two years, at the expiration of which he returned to New England, where he died.

Pius IX was the 263d pope. Of the whole number fifteen were French, thirteen Greeks, eight Syrians, six Germans, five Spaniards, two from Africa, two from Savoy, and two from Dalmatia. England, Portugal, Holland, Sweden and Crete gave one pope each; Italy 194. All popes since 1523 have been elected from the Italian Cardinals. Of the 263 popes eight died within a month after their accession to the pontifical throne, forty have lived only one year on the throne, twenty-two between one and two years, fifty-four between two and five years, fifty-seven from five to ten years, fifty-one from ten to fifteen years, eighteen from fifteen to twenty years, and nine have lived more than twenty years.

The famous hanging gardens were built by Nebuchadnezzar to gratify his wife Amyitis, a native of Media, who longed for something in that country to remind her of her mountain home. These gardens consisted of an artificial hill 400 feet on each side, rising by successive terraces to a height which over-topped the walls of the city. The terraces themselves were formed of a succession of piers, the tops of which were covered by flat stones sixteen feet long and four feet wide. Upon these were spread beds of matting, then a thick layer of bitumen, covered with sheets of lead. Upon this solid pavement earth was heaped, some of the piles being hollow, so as to afford depth for the roots of the largest trees. Water was drawn from the river to irrigate these gardens, which thus appeared like a hill covered with verdure.

THE United States senate now has thirty-seven democratic and thirty-seven republican members. David Davis votes with the democrats, and Mahone with the republicans, making thirty-eight on each side. Vice-president Arthur gives the casting vote, so that he and Mahone run this branch of the government pretty much as they choose.

Inequalities of the Sea Bottom.

The operations of the cable companies and the observations taken during the Challenger Expedition have shown that the bed of the sea is quite as uneven as the surface of the land. "While repairing, in 1878, the Anglo-American cable," says Dr. Gwyn Jeffreys, in Nature, "a tract of rocky ground was discovered about 100 miles in length, in the middle of the North Atlantic, between 38 degrees 50 minutes and 36 degrees 30 minutes west longitude, and 51 degrees 20 minutes north latitude. Within a distance of eight miles the shallowest sounding was 1,370, and the deepest 2,230 fathoms, a difference of 860 fathoms, or 5,160 feet; within four miles the difference was 8,160 feet, and within half a mile, 1,380 feet. There are also the Laura Ethel Bank, with a depth of only thirty-six fathoms and the Milne Bank eighty-one fathoms both about 550 miles from Newfoundland, which is the nearest continental land. Other instances are the Josephine Bank with eighty-two fathoms, the Gettysburg Bank with thirty fathoms, the distance of the former from Cape St. Vincent being 250, and from the latter 130 miles, with intermediate depths of from 1,700 to 2,500 fathoms.

THE EAST.

Dr. Charles Osgood, of Norwich, Ct., President of the New London Northern Railroad Company, is dead, leaving $1,000,000 to his heirs....Bartlett's mills, in Newburyport, Mass., were destroyed by fire. It was the largest conflagration seen there in seventy years.

Gen. Grant has tendered his resignation as President of the World's Fair Commission. He gives as his reasons for his action the lack of interest displayed in the fair by the residents of New York, and the demands of private interests, which require all his time.

The Pennsylvania House defeated, by 132 to 48, the bill to remove the State capital to Philadelphia....It is quite well settled that the Northampton (Mass.) Bank has recovered the securities stolen by burglars five years ago, with the exception of $35,000 in coupon governments and $120,000 in bank bills.

Dr. John Buchanan, of Philadelphia, has made a full confession of his operations in the bogus medical diploma line. He states that over 20,000 bogus diplomas are in use in this country, and over 40,000 in Europe. About 10,000 names are tangled up in his disclosure. ....Seven masked men entered the house of an aged couple in Catfish, Pa., bound and gagged them, and stole $5,000 coupon bonds, and between $5,000 and $10,000 cash.

THE WEST.

There were slaughtered in Chicago, during the season just closed, the enormous number of 5,752,191 hogs....The White River Utes are securing all the guns and ammunition possible, and there are grave fears of an early outbreak. The troops have completed a substantial block-house near the agency....An estimable lady of Terre Haute, Ind., Mrs. Mary Rogers, while delirious from an attack of the measles, sprung into a well and was drowned.

Amasa Stone, the money prince of Cleveland, has made the magnificent donation of $500,000 to the Western Reserve College, on condition that the institution be removed to Cleveland, its name changed to Adelbert College of the Western Reserve University, and that the Board of Trustees be increased to twenty-three, eleven of whom shall be selected by the donor. The conditions have been accepted by the college Trustees....Hohn, Knight & Co., wholesale dealers in hats and caps, have made an assignment to Fred W. Lyman. Their liabilities are about $50,000....Charles L. Ibach, of Indianapolis, expired after suffering torture from trichiniasis for eleven weeks.

Willie Seymour, a lad of 18 years, went to the residence of Charles H. Cram, a well-known Chicago merchant, called him to the door and killed him with a revolver, and then instantly blew out his own brains. A refusal by Mr. Cram to permit the boy to pay attentions to his daughter is believed to have been the cause of the double tragedy....The Hon. John U. Pettit died at his home in Wabash, Ind., a few days ago. Mr. Pettit was a member of Congress from 1854 to 1858, and afterward Minister to Brazil, and served a short time in the United States Senate. For the past eight years he has held the office of Judge of the Twenty-seventh judicial circuit of Indiana.....Three men were killed by the explosion of a boiler in White & Russell's mill, at Middlefield, Ohio....While a huge snow-plow, weighted with twenty tons of pig-iron, was at work at Janesville, Wis., driven by three engines, a rail turned and threw the two leaders off the track. The third locomotive speedily demolished all before it. Two engineers were seriously injured.

John Lewis, a noted dwarf, residing near Watertown, Wis., died of congestion of the stomach. He was 24 years of age, and weighed eighteen pounds....The Lake Shore express train ran off the track at Nottingham, eight miles east of Cleveland, and the engineer, John Lace, and fireman, Henderson, were killed. The express messenger, August Schneider, was severely but not fatally injured. The passengers escaped unhurt.

George Parrott, better known as "Big-nosed George," one of the Elk mountain murderers, was taken from jail at Rawlins, Wyo., by masked men and hanged to a telegraph pole....The annual report of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road, operating 2,771 miles of track, shows gross earnings of $20,492,046.59. The amount expended for construction and equipment during the year was $8,207,899.71. After the payment of dividends and all expenses there remained a surplus of $1,022,380.17.
